LOAN OF FLAGS TO INAUGURAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some days ago I made a motion to reconsider the passage of the joint resolution in regard to the use of flags during the inaugural ceremonies. I ask that that joint resolution may be laid before the Senate now so that we may dispose of it. It will only take

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have examined that matter very carefully, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and myself have agreed upon a substitute which we think will avoid any trouble at the present time or in the future. Iask that the joint resolution may now be reconsidered and that the substitute may be adopted for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having passed the Senate and been transmitted to the House of Representatives, and upon a motion to reconsider being entered having been recalled, if there be no objection, the vote by which the joint resolution was passed is reconsidered, and also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading. It is so ordered. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of Wan is hereby authorized to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies the worn flags on hand in the cities of Philadelphia and Washington, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to loan to said committee such flags on hand in the navy-yards at Washington, Norfolk, League Island, New York, Portsmouth, and Boston as may be suitable and proper for decoration and may be spared without detriment to the public service, such flags to be used by said committee under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the said Secretaries or either of them in decorating the fronts of public buildings and other places on the line of march between the Capitol and the Executive Mansion and the interior of the reception hall: Provided, That the said committee shall indemnify the said Departments or either of them for any loss or damage to such flags not necessarily incident to such use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags," etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have here some data in regard to the number of flags and their cost, etc., and what can be spared, which I wish to have inserted in the RECORD, so that they may be used, together with the two acts that have heretofore been passed, to show the reason why we made this change

The first joint resolution of this kind was approved January 28, 1881, and is as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the loan of certain flags and bunting to the committee on inaugural ceremonies.

mittee on inaugural eeremonies.

Approved, January 28, 1881.

The second joint resolution on this subject was approved February 28, 1885, andisas follows:

Bunting can not be used for decorating without damage.

J. G. WALKER, Chief of Bureau,

DISTRICT JURORS.

Mr. HARRIS. A few days since the Senate passed the bill (S. 3640) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 858, 861, and 862 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. If the Senator desires it, I have no objection to the reconsideration, so that he may now submit the amendment he wishes to offer.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to strike out so much of the bill—
Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be regarded as reconsidered and open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the votes by which the bill was passed and ordered to a third reading will be reconsidered, and it is now before the Senate and open to amendment. Mr. HOAR. I desire to strike out so much of the bill as requires

Mr. HARRIS. On line 6, page 5, the Senator will find the language that he desires to strike out, the words "a tax-payer."

Mr. HOAR. I desire to strike out the words "a tax-payer," in line

6 of section 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 6, of section 3, it is proposed, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out the words "a tax-payer;" so as to read:

No person shall be competent to act as a juror unless he be a citizen of the United States, a resident of the District of Columbia, over twenty-one and under sixty-five years of age, and a good and lawful man, who has never been convicted of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Mr. HOAR. In the District of Columbia there is a very considerable number of persons who have large personal property, but the bulk of the taxes of the District, I believe, is still raised upon real estate. I think that is the case. At any rate, however that may be, there is a special condition of things here by reason of the fact that there is so large a number of colored persons who constitute to some extent still a separate class in the community and who are, very few of them comparatively, tax-payers, still fewer real-estate owners.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator let me superadd to that one peculiar feature of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HARRIS. I can not hear the Senator from Ohio.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will wait until the Senator from Massachusetts is through

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please resume their seats and refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. HOAR. I merely desire to say that none of us can be blind to Mr. HOAR. I merely desire to say that none of us can be blind to the fact that there are still likely to come up in the courts, in the criminal courts and in the civil courts as well, many questions where the special interests or rights of that class of persons are involved, and many others where they will be supposed by them to be involved. It is important not only that the juries should be constituted so as to be intelligent and impartial, but they should be so understood to be constituted by the entire community; and the extending to the District of Columbia a provision, otherwise healthy and wholesome in itself, which should make any class feel that they are almost wholly excluded from jury duty, it seems to me, in the special circumstances of this District, would be unwise. Perhaps when, as we all hope, this class of people have passed everywhere into the general community and persons are distinguished from each other in all civil and social mat-ters by their personal worth and character and not by their complexion or race, this policy may hereafter be adopted; but I trust that without any extended discussion and without any special difference of opinion the Senate will strike out this provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is another reason equally potent, which the Senator from Tennessee will appreciate when I state it, why the confinement of jurymen to tax-payers is not a provision at all applicable to this District even if it was just in any State. In this District there are but very few tax-payers—fewer in proportion than in any of the States. For instance, householders, persons of pretty liberal means who have households and conduct their houses, do not pay taxes. The taxes are paid by the landlords. Not one-third of the white people of this District are tax-payers in the literal sense. We have no road-taxes here and no poll-taxes. There is no tax on anything except upon property.

It is therefore manifest that the confinement of the duty of jurors to tax-payers would be not only onerous to a comparatively few tax-payers, but would be unjust both to the blacks and to the whites, for I have no doubt that not one-third of the white voters of this District are taxand doubt that not one-third of the white voters of this District are taxpayers. In the States, as a matter of course, there is a great variety of taxes which are not imposed here. Nobody here is taxed except the select few, comparatively, who own real estate. The tax on personal property does not apply unless the amount is over $500, I believe.
There is some limitation; I do not know exactly what it is. At any rate, very few pay a tax on personal property unless they are holders of real property also. I think, therefore, the provision ought to be stricken out. out

Mr. HARRIS. I think retaining the qualification of tax-payer would secure more substantial and more intelligent juries in this District than will be secured without that qualification; but I do not think it a matter of sufficient consequence to delay the passage of this bill. I am perfectly willing for the Senate to take a vote upon it, and retain it, as I shall hope to do, or strike it out, as the majority may determine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Then in section 3, line 9, as the consequence of the amendment agreed to, I move to strike out after the word "turpitude" all down to and including the word "District," in line 14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, of section 3, after the word "turpitude," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "District" in line 14, as follows:

And the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the officers or persons who are authorized to make the list of jurors for service in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, within twenty days after this act shall take effect, and thereafter at least once a year, a list containing the names of the male tax-payers of said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The title should be amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment of the title has been made.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4961) to provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHAND-LER], coming over from a previous day, in relation to naval officers'

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire that that may go over another day. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar as morning business, if there be no objection.

· INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution authorizing the printing of a thousand additional copies of Senate bill 554, known as the international copyright bill, and I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to,

as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of the bill (S. 554) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United PRINTING OF SENATE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution authorizing the printing of a thousand additional copies of what is known as the tariff bill as passed by the

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies additional of House bill 9051, with the amendment as the same passed the Senate, be published for the use of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was going to suggest that that would only give us some ten copies apiece, and I am sure Senators would like to have more than that. I would rather make the number 3,000 as the differmove to strike out "1,000" and insert "3,000."

Mr. MANDERSON. The cost is trifling.

Mr. DAWES. It is hardly worth while to print a thousand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Printing to the fact that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill], from the Committee on Finance, reported a resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 copies, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing this morning.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I will move to amend this resolution by striking out "1,000" and inserting "3,000." Mr. HAWLEY. Make it 5,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will make it 5,000, and in pamphlet form. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the resolution be so amended as to provide for the printing of 5,000 copies in pamphlet form. Will the Senate agree to the amend-

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HARRIET YOUNG.

The PRESIDENT protempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. TELLER. I move to take up Senate bill 3765, Order of Business 2546. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Colorado moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3765) for the relief of Harriet Young. It will be read at length for information subject to objection.

The bill was read; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 13, after "seventy-seven," to strike out "be enlarged and extended;" so as to read:

That the time to irrigate, improve, and prepare the land to make final proof for that part (it being $20 acres) of section numbered 34, township numbered 21 north, range 4 east, lying south of the Missouri River, except 80 acres covered by Sioux half-breed scrip, in Cascade County, Montana Territory, and claimed by Harriet Young by and under desert-land entry numbered 1551, made by said Harriet Young at the Helena (Montana) land office on July 12, 1886, under desert-land act of March 3, 1877.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 17, after the word "act," to insert:

This extension shall not be held to determine the character of the land nor to affect any contest now pending, or which may be hereafter initiated, or as in any wise affecting any right or claim adverse to the claim or entry of said Harriet Young, nor to affect the character of proof required by existing law, except as to the time of making improvements required by law and final proof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall take such steps as are necessary to protect said Harriet Young in all her lawful rights that she may have to said land under and by virtue of said act of March 3, 1877.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES ALBERT BONSACK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 593) for the relief of James Albert Bonsack

Mr. COCKRELL. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under Rule IX.
Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I hope there will be no objection to its going over under Rule VIII, and retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can retain its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. It might as well go over. It can never be considered under the five-minute rule. I shall object to its being considered under that rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, then, to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In the absence of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel], who is interested in this matter, I hope this course will not be insisted on now. The Senator would like to have the bill considered whenever it is reached, and he would make a motion to proceed to its consideration if he were present. He is not in the Senate Chamber, and I hope no advantage will be taken of his absence.

Mr. TELLER. He can do that at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being objected to, goes over under Rule IX. The next bill in order will be stated.

P. GOUGH EDELIN.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6753) for the relief of P. Gough Edelin.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That said check, now in the hands of Messrs. Dudley & Carpenter, be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to P. Gough Edelin, of Maryland, the sum of $42.96, this amount having been advanced by him to Niey Taliaferro upon revenue check No. 16966, for $2.205.06, presented to him by her, payment of said check having since been refused at the United States subtreasury in Baltimore, upon the ground that the said Taliaferro was erroneously pensioned, under certificate 3094 (Navy): Provided, That said check, now in the hands of Messrs. Dudley & Carpenter, be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELMORE S. STROUP.

The bill (H. R. 6217) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain Kansas lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to relinquish to Elmore S. Stroup all the interest of the United States in and to the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 6, township 6 south, of range 18 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Rooks County, Kansas

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUGH FOSTER.

The bill (H. R. 9040) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine, who has charge of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill [Mr.

HALE], whether he does not propose to take it up at this time? I supposed we were to go on with that to-day so as to get it out of the way.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of doing so. I tried to get the recognition of the Chair a moment ago. I should be glad to go on with the bill. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, the pending question being on the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations, after line 174, to insert:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President, this appropriation to be immediately available.

For the survey, improvement, and occupation of the bay and harbor of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, Samoa, and for the construction of the necessary wharves and buildings for such occupation, and for a coaling station therein, under the direction of the President, $100,000, this appropriation to be immediately available.

Mr. HAMPTON. May I ask the Senator from Maine if he will allow the Senate to take action on a bill which is the next on the Calendar, reported by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Wilson]. I think it will meet with no opposition, and it is a matter of some consequence to some of my constituents.

Mr. HALE. Let us get this bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question recurs upon the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations relative to the affairs of Samoa.

Mr. HAMPTON. I think the bill I refer to will lead to no debate.

Mr. HAMPTON. It is the title of the bill?

Mr. HAMPTON. It is Order of Business 2020, a bill (S. 508) to empower Robert Adger and others to bring suit in the Court of Claims for rent alleged to be due them. The Senator from Maryland has made a report on it. Mr. PLATT.

Mr. PLATT. We have not got to that yet.
Mr. HAMPTON. There is but one bill intervening between that and the call.

Mr. HALE. There is evidently some objection to proceeding with that now, and therefore I think we had better go on with the pending Mr. HALE. bill.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The pending amendments have been read.

Mr. HALE. I hope we can have a vote on these amendments, and when we vote on them we shall have practically disposed of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two paragraphs will be treated as one amendment, if there be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. REAGAN. Have we passed on the provision making the appropriation in relation to Samoa?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been agreed to Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to that. That has been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment in the Senate

Mr. REAGAN. I propose to insert after the word "Islands," in line 178, the words:

And for the protection of the rights of American citizens residing in said islands, and to preserve the neutrality and independence of the people thereof.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will confine his amendment to the first clause, relating to the protection of American citizens, I shall make no objection to it, but I do not think that the other part should be inserted. Everything that is necessary is implied in the amendment which was drawn by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and can be safely left to the Executive. But for the Senate to affirmatively declare, in making an appropriation, in terms that it is to preserve the neutrality or to maintain the independence of any other people is going farther than I am willing to go. I hope the Senator will be content with the first part of his amendment, which clearly relates to what is contained in the general amendment and only embodies particulars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated from the delt.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 178, after the word "Islands," it is proposed to insert:

And for the protection of the rights of American citizens residing in said islands, and to preserve the neutrality and independence of the people thereof

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the whole paragraph be read as it will stand if the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands, and for the protection of the rights of American citizens residing in said islands, and to preserve the neutrality and independent ence of the people thereof, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President, this appropriation to be immediately available.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously agreed that we would simply do what we could and make the proper provisions to carry into execution the treaties which are formal documents referred to. Now, the words proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Texas, if they have any meaning at all, only tend to weaken the force of the language used by the committee.

If we are to speak about the protection of American citizens, let me ask what act of cruelty has been done to any American citizen? No American citizen has been killed over there.

This clause does say that suitable measures shall be taken to carry out, to observe and secure the rights granted by these treaties and to carry out the guaranties for our commerce contained in the treaties. Now, when mere Fourth-of-July language is added to a document of this kind, defining the purposes and the objects and motives which should influence the President of the United States in maintaining and enforcing a treaty obligation, it only weakens the proposition, and I trust that as the Democratic side was strongly represented upon the Committee on Foreign Relations by such distinguished gentlemen as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown], and my colleague [Mr. Payne], the Senator from Texas will allow the clause to stand with the assurance that it covers every ground necesclause to stand with the assurance that it covers every ground necessary and has been carefully considered. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do not agree to the statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] that no wrongs have been committed upon American citizens in Samoa.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say that.
Mr. FRYE. I think the evidence already furnished is conclusive that wrongs have been committed on our citizens in Samoa. But that is not at issue here.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is for the protection of our people in Samoa. Mr. FRYE. I hope that the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will not insist upon his amendment now. From the remarks the Senator made yesterday, he and I are in entire accord on this matter of Samoa. The two amendments which have been reported to the appropriation bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations are not, in my judgment, all that committee is called upon to do, nor do they comprise what Congress ought to insist upon. The remarks of the Senator from Texas come very much nearer the requirements of the occasion than the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations; but the two amendments, so far as they go, are, in my judgment, right, and ought to be sustained and with great unanimity in the Senate.

Let me call the attention of Senators to the one of $100,000 for Pago Pago. In the treaty which gives us rights in Pago Pago, Article II pro-

AET. II. Naval vessels of the United States shall have the privilege of entering and using the port of Pago Pago and establishing therein and on the shores thereof a station for coal and other naval supplies for their naval and commercial marine, etc.

Now, clearly, while Article II is in life the United States has a right to establish coaling stations and stations for naval supplies, to purchase land, erect buildings, and practically take possession of Pago Pago.

The United States took advantage of this article shortly after the treaty was ratified and leased a lot of land on the shore of Pago Pago, sent a vessel load of coal and dumped it on the leased land. In two or three years it was all used up, and no coal has been sent there since, and the United States gave up its lease of the land. To-day and for the last four years it has had absolutely nothing there indicating that the United States had any possession of Pago Pago. In the mean time what have the Germans done by their very peculiar system of levying taxes on the Samoan natives? Here let me say that they levied $100,000 of taxes in one single year on these poor confiding people who have not $500 altogether-$100,000 in one year-and then their process is to give them notice that it must be paid, and the poor chiefs come in without any money to pay it. "Where shall we get our money?" They are told, "Of the German trading firm." They apply to the trading firm. That firm charges them outrageous premiums for bills of exchange, lets them have the money, takes mortgages on their lands; and in that way the Germans have possession probably of two-thirds of all the cultivable lands of these islands. There is no justice in it, no right, no humanity.

The Germans since that time by this peculiar process have obtained all the lands around Pago Pago, and I suppose to-day own them. But this article in this treaty is in force, and under it as a matter of course we can go there, take land for stations for naval supplies and for coaling, and our right is paramount to the title of anybody obtained since that article appeared in this treaty. So we are in a condition to-day to do what we could have done eight years ago. Suppose we neglect to do it one year longer or two years longer. The Senate understands about this German trading firm; it is not Germany by any manner of means; it is not Bismarck; it is nothing but a German trading firm sent there from Germany receives its orders from the consul, and of course from the same firm. It is the power of Germany in the islands; it is not Germany, and I doubt exceedingly if Germany itself has had any understanding of what has been really going on in those islands for the last two or three years. If it has, I do not see how these diplomatic dispatches from Bismarck can be accounted for.

In this same treaty there is this provision:

ART. VII. The present treaty shall remain in force for ten years from its date.

It has remained in force for ten years now from its date.

If neither party shall have given to the other six months' previous notice of its intention then to terminate the same, it shall further remain in force until the end of twelve months after either party shall have given notice to the other force intention.

Mr. President, for years we have had as King of the Samoan Islands a friend of the United States, with nine chiefs out of ten of the same friendly disposition, and the enmity of the German trading firm against Malietoa and against these chiefs comes entirely from the fact that they were friends of the United States. The Germans, without any authority, and committing one of the gravest insults against the United States of America that she was ever subjected to, have deliberately elevated into power and made king, Tamasese, a rebel. Tamasese has not a Samoan chief behind him—not one. Tamasese is nothing but a puppet in the hands of the German trading firm. He knows to-day that his life is forfeit if he goes to his own people. He knows his only hope is in the German trading firm. Now, if he is permitted to be established in power and authority and is recognized as King of the Samoan Islands, what will he do first under their instructions? Why, it will be to give the necessary notice for the abrogation of this treaty. Suppose he gives the notice. At the end of twelve months the treaty is gone as if it had never been in existence. Suppose the United States's condition in Pago Pago in twelve months from the time that notice is given is precisely as it is to-day, then I ask the Senate what rights the United States will have in Pago Pago? To me it is entirely clear none whatever.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will allow me to ask him a question. So far as he knows, has Tamasese ever been recognized as the rightful sovereign of those islands?

Mr. FRYE. That brings up a serious question as to what recognition of Tamasese's authority there has been.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator ought to state in that connection that in the opinion of a majority of the committee the treaty itself was a grant in præsenti and operated immediately so far as our rights in Pago Pago were concerned. That was our property just as much as if deeded to us, and a notice to terminate the treaty would not affect a vested right. At all events it is an argument in favor of our immediately taking possession and asserting our power. We agreed upon that. But I do not think that even a notice given by the lawful king would divest us of that vested right in the Bay of Pago Pago. That is the opinion of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I do not remember that the committee passed upon that, but I do not believe that is the correct doctrine under this treaty, by any manner of means. We received under Article II of this treaty certain rights in Pago Pago, the right to occupy it for stations for naval supplies, for coaling stations, etc. Suppose the ten years run and we never occupy it for these purposes, we never avail ourselves of our rights, and then notice is given and the treaty is terminated, we being in that condition of never having availed ourselves of those rights; it seems to me entirely clear that the moment the treaty is terminated those rights to do certain things cease, and I see no escape from it in any direction. At any rate it looks exceedingly probable that they would so contend on the other side.

Now, in my judgment the committee did just exactly right in recommending an appropriation of $100,000, to be immediately available, for the purpose of establishing a coaling station and a station for naval supplies in Pago Pago, and that appropriation ought to pass Connavai supplies in Pago Pago, and that appropriation ought to pass Congress promptly and with great unanimity, and the Secretary of the Navy the moment it has become a law ought, as I believe he will, to avail himself of its provisions, send his vessels out to Pago Pago, take possession of the necessary land for the purposes of a station for coal and a station for naval supplies, erect the necessary wharves and the necessary buildings, and then, if the treaty is terminated, we have vested rights that we acquired under the treaty, and no subsequent action of the Samoan Government can deprive us of those rights; but if we do not avail ourselves of the privileges granted by the treaty. I do not see not avail ourselves of the privileges granted by the treaty, I do not see for the life of me how we can complain when the treaty is ended by proper notice.

Mr. President, I have taken a good deal of interest in this Samoan matter, and have investigated it with a great deal of care, and yet I have taken no part in this discussion, although the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, did me the honor to invite me to open the debate on the general Samoan question. I declined, and I did so because in my judgment these two appropriation items do not bring up the real questions at issue between us and Germany.

The real question at issue to-day between these two countries is not which has absolute and supreme power in the Samoan Islands to-day.

The consul of Germany receives all his orders from it; a ship of war appropriation, nor in my judgment is the Senate ready at this moment necessarily before the Senate for discussion under these two items of for such discussion. I expect to see the day come, and ere long, too, when there will be a proposition pending before the Senate, reported, I hope, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which shall bring the whole question of the difficulties and the issues between the United States and Germany before us. Then I shall be very happy indeed to enter into the discussion. Until that time I do not propose to enter

Let me tell Senators that to-day we have in committee the testimony of Consul-General Sewall, and, while he is a Democrat, without political sympathy with me or I with him, I will say he has acted his part in Samoa with an intelligence that is seldom exhibited by American consuls abroad, and with a fidelity to his country and to his people, and to the obligations of his country to these confiding native Samoans, worthy of the very highest praise. I will say further for Consul-General Sewall that he is a gentleman of unusual acquirements, that he is a graduate of Harvard College and of Harvard Law School, spending seven years in his studies in that institution. I know of no man in the United States to-day to whom I would intrust the interest of the United States in Samoa with more confidence than I would to Consul-General Sewall, and I hope when the administration changes, if he is still in office, the new administration will permit him to remain Consul-General Sewall's testimony, which is intelligent, complete, and necessary to an understanding of the case, is not open to discussion in the Senate. It is an executive document. Until yesterday knowledge of it never has been extended beyond the members of the committee. Yesterday it was extended to the members of the United States Senate, but was not to the world. How, then, when this is the very foundation of all the action which I desire on the Samoan question, and we are deprived entirely of its use, can any proper discussion take place?

Then, again, in the documents which have been sent in reply to requests from the Senate and from the House of Representatives, with great propriety I have no doubt, large numbers of dispatches have been left out, because, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, they ought not to be made public. There were nine dispatches left out from the consul-general at Samoa. Take the statements of Mr. Bates, an intelligent gentleman, who was sent as commissioner to Samoa by Secretary Bayard. There is no complete copy of his report before the Senate. There is a partial report in the document which has been made public; but at my request Secretary Bayard sent me the entire report, marked "strictly confidential." It is not open for use in the Senate in this discussion. So the Senate is not prepared to discuss the Samoan question in its most important aspects, and I think I am fully justified in declining now to enter upon it.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator state what he thinks ought to be done in behalf of the deposed king, or if the United States ought to take any action with regard to that matter? Mr. FRYE. I will simply say that there is not a fourth-rate power in Europe that would not have risked its political life without hesitation if it had been a party to a conference with Germany in its own courts about the autonomy of Samoa and its independence, and Germany pending that conference, without any notice to such European power, had deliberately ordered her ships to take possession and violate the autonomy and the independence of those islands—I say there is not a fourth-rate power that would not have risked its national life on a demand, made at once, that the status quo existing at the time when that conference was in session should be forthwith restored.

I am not saying what, in my opinion, ought to be done by us now. I prefer that the Committee on Foreign Relations shall report to the United States Senate in due form and after deliberation what ought to be done. I am no diplomatist and never was charged with being one. I generally know what I desire, and I generally go just as straightforward to what I desire as it is possible for me to, no matter who is in the way or what country may be concerned.

Mr. President, when the proper time comes I shall be very glad to discuss, with such knowledge and ability as I have, the Samoan question, and the complications between the United States and Germany resulting from that question. I am not prepared and do not desire to discuss it now. I hope, then, that these two appropriations, which are certainly a great step in advance, will be unanimously adopted by the United States Senate and sent to the House of Representatives.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I agree with the expression of the hope just made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], that these two appropriations may be made. I had a reason for offering the amendment which I have offered to the first paragraph. To the second, as I stated yesterday, I suppose we shall all agree. That reason was based on the statement of the President substantially that he had exercised what he regarded as the powers confided to him by the Constitution in extending the good offices of the executive department of the Government to the Samoans in their trouble with the Germans.

The amendment was based further upon some things which seemed to me to have escaped the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sher-MAN]. In addition to the rights conferred upon this Government by the second article of the treaty with Samoa, the fifth article of that treaty requires something of this country. It says:

ART. V. If, unhappily, any differences should have arisen, or shall hereafter arise, between the Samoan Government and any other government in amity with the United States, the Government of the latter will employ its good offices for the purpose of adjusting those differences upon a satisfactory and solid foun-

That commits this Government to exert its friendly good offices in the matter, no further. The sixth article of the treaty provides:

ART. VI. The Government of Samoa agrees to allow to the Government and citizens of the United States free and equal participation in any privileges that may have been or may hereafter be granted to the government, citizens, or subjects of any other nation.

I do not propose to go through these documents, nor is it necessary; but does the Senator from Ohio assume that under this treaty, and in the face of the fact that American citizens have acquired in Samoa what they regard as their titles to 37,500 acres of land, and engaged in trade and commerce there, that they did it under the authority of the lawful government and king, and that the German officials stimulated a rebellion and brought it about, took the rebel chief under their protection and forbade the lawful king to defend his rights and restore order in his kingdom, as no encroachment on the rights of American citizens? And it further appears—and I shall not attempt to go into the details, as it is not necessary, for the Senator understands them much better than I do—that the Germans have now substantially the military control there, that American interests have ceased to be protected there, and are under German domination and power.

In addition to all these facts, Mr. Bayard, in his dispatch of January 11 to Mr. Blacklock, says:

Your telegram sent by Hawley from New Zealand received. Proper measures have been adopted for protection of American interests in Samoa and to preserve Samoan independence. Admiral Kimberly, with frigate Trenton, starts at once. You will consult freely with him.

That shows that the Secretary of State recognizes the injustice that has been done in depriving Samoa of her independence, in stimulating a revolt, in forbidding the lawful king to assert the authority of that government, and that he thought something ought to be done in that respect. The Secretary of State in his dispatch to Count Arco, dated the 12th of this month, among other things, says:

The instructions given to officials of this Government at Samoa have never deviated from those made public, and which were well known to Germany and Great Britain, and in effect were scrupulously to maintain neutrality in Samoan affairs, and confine their action to good offices in the maintenance of peace and order in those regions, and securing protection for American citizens and their interests under treaty stipulations and the comity of civilized nations.

Further on Mr. Bayard says:

I received also with expressed satisfaction your assurance of the intentions of your Government to maintain and carefully respect the treaty rights of this Government under all circumstances, and this, as I stated to you, necessarily included respect for the existence of Samoan autonomy and independence, which is the basis of the three treaties made with the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, the first-named being earliest in date.

Going further, Secretary Whitney, in his instructions to Admiral Kimberly on the 11th of this month, says:

The United States Government is willing to co-operate in restoring order in Samoa on the basis of the full preservation of American treaty rights and Samoan autonomy, as recognized and agreed to by Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, and has so informed the German Government.

Protest against the subjugation and displacement of native government of Samoa by Germany as in violation of positive agreement and understanding between treaty powers, but inform the representatives of the German and British Governments of your readiness to co-operate in causing all treaty rights to be respected and in restoring peace and order on the basis of a recognition of Samoan rights to independence.

Based upon all this, the committee come in with a recommendation to appropriate $500,000, to be immediately available, for the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands. It seems to me that while this money is given to the President, who has stated to us in substance that he has exhausted his constitutional authority and asks Congress for further direction in the matter, we are either shirking responsibility ourselves or intending to place the President in a false position by appropriating money for him to do something with and refusing to tell him what to do with it. This proposed action does not enlarge the President's power. It does not indicate the policy of Congress on this subject. It simply leaves the whole question open and throws the President upon his own discretion, which he says he has already exhausted. What is he or his successor to do with this money without Congressional direction?

It seems to me it would be proper to go further than the wording of this amendment and say to the President that we desire him to em-ploy the powers of the Government and the appropriation made "for the protection of the rights of American citizens residing in said islands and to preserve the autonomy and independence of the people thereof."

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Texas precisely what he means by our preserving the neutrality of the Samoan Government?

Mr. REAGAN. That is not the wording of the amendment.
Mr. HALE. What is it?
Mr. REAGAN. It is the preservation of neutrality, which applies to all governments attempting to interfere there.
Mr. HALE. Will the Senator please read the amendment again?
Mr. PEAGAN. Let the Senator read it.

Mr. REAGAN. Let the Secretary read it.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Islands," in line 178, it is pro-

And for the protection of the rights of American citizens residing in said islands, and to preserve the neutrality and independence of the people thereof.

Mr. HALE. "Neutrality and independence thereof." Now, what does the Senator mean by that phrase? He refers to the Samoan Islands and then desires to preserve "the neutrality and the independence

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator insists upon the word "the" going in there. It is not there.

Mr. HALE. I do not insist on the word "the." What does the Senator mean by preserving neutrality?

Mr. REAGAN. I mean that this Government should prevent encroachments on the rights of the people of the United States or a violation of the rights of Samoa as stipulated in the treaties between the three great governments and Samoa.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean neutrality as to other powers?

Mr. REAGAN. What I mean is to protect those people.

Mr. HALE. What I am trying to get at is whether the Senator wishes to go so far.

Mr. REAGAN. I will leave the Senate to determine what the language means. I have but a few more words to say and I prefer to proceed

Mr. HALE. Let me ask another question. Does the Senator be-lieve that the Government of the United States, with the power of the United States behind it, should guaranty the government, the autonomy, the existence of the Government of the Samoan Islands?

Mr. REAGAN. The Secretary of State has insisted that under the arrangement between these powers, the autonomy and independence of Samoa shall be preserved. I propose to carry out what he says, and he is familiar with the correspondence.

Mr. HALE. And that the United States shall guaranty that?

Mr. REAGAN. It shall prevent other people from interfering with the rights reserved by these treaties to the residents of Samoa and the citizens of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Which amounts to the same thing, and which is a guaranty on our part.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator will put his own construction upon it.

I ventured to move this amendment and to make the remarks which I made vesterday in support of it because it seemed to me-possibly I am mistaken-that as the President had indicated that he had exhausted his authority, and asked of Congress with its larger constitutional powers over the question to indicate a course of policy to be pursued, it was our duty to do it. It did not seem to me becoming in the Congress of the United States to shrink, in the face of all the facts before it, from taking a position on this subject.

The Senator from Ohio assumes to characterize this amendment and my remarks as a Fourth-of-July speech, and to administer to me a rebuke for proposing to have an opinion and to express it in the Senate of the United States upon a great question like this, assuming that inasmuch as the Democratic side of the Senate was represented on the Committee on Foreign Relations, others than the members of the committee ought to close their mouths and bow their heads in silence to whatever recommendation was made. That is not my understanding of the duty of an American Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir. Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator has got such an impression as that, he is greatly mistaken. I intended no such thing. I intended no reproach or unkindness to the Senator. He has a perfect right to make any remarks he sees proper, or to offer any amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will read his remarks in the RECORD

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will read his remarks in the RECORD in the morning he will find that I am not mistaken in what he said.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read them, and I think the Senator will find that they are not very bad. What I said was that on a proposition of this kind affecting our foreign relations, dealing with other powers, on the whole the Senator from Texas might safely rely upon that which was carefully prepared, not by this side, but by his fellow-associates on that side, gentlemen of distinction, who have a fuller knowledge of all the facts in the matter than can be obtained in a hurried debte like this, and that we ought therefore to be guided by it. ried debate like this, and that we ought therefore to be guided by it, as I am a thousand times. The Senator will have perceived that when a committee has carefully gone over a subject-matter, I very rarely offer amendments or speak against propositions of that kind. As to the right of the Senator to offer his amendment, and his duty to do so if he thinks it proper, that is quite another thing. I did not in any way mean to deny it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I recognize as to the Committee on Foreign Relations that they are apt to be in possession of information that others not on that committee may not be in possession of, but I recognize the further fact that the information on this subject, or at the opinions which I entertain upon this subject, but upon the papers and the documents which the President has sent to the Senate.

I agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that there is hardly a fourth-class power in Europe that would have stood the insult that this Government has stood from Germany, and I am sorry to see in various ways a disposition to shrink from meeting what seems to me to be the duty of this Government in relation to such a matter.

I stated yesterday, and I repeat to-day, that the consular agents of the United States at Samoa, the commanders of our vessels at Samoa, the citizens of the United States residing upon these islands, can not fail to be humbled and humiliated and to feel degraded by the fact that their Government has permitted Germany to trample upon their rights and upon the rights of Samoa in view of the treaty stipulations and other understandings, as has been done; and instead of trying to cover this up, I think wisdom, prudence, and the interest of the people of this country is that we should meet the facts.

If the Government of the United States has assumed obligations to Samoa, whatever they are, it should avow and execute them. If it owes a duty to its own citizens it should perform that duty. flag of the United States has been insulted, if the property of citizens of the United States is placed at the mercy of German traders through the action of the Government of Germany, we ought to recognize those facts to be as these papers show them, and do one of two things. If we mean abjectly to abandon our rights we ought to call home our consular agent and the commanders of our vessels and not subject them to insult and degradation, and admit that whatever rights we have there, or whatever duties we owe, we abandon; or if we do not do this, then we ought squarely and manfully to assert the rights which belong to this country and discharge the duties we may owe to Samoa.

I will not assume that the amendments reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Delations do not meet the exigencies of the case; but I simply say that, as I understand the question, the President having said in substance that he had exhausted his authority on this subject and appealed to the larger constitutional authority of Congress to advise him further about it, this first amendment does no such thing. It simply proposes to appropriate money without enlarging the duties of the President, without telling him what the policy or the purposes of Congress are; and so, with all respect to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I feel constrained to leave the amendment offered by me subject to the action of the Senate.

Mr. President, when I addressed the Senate a few mo-Mr. FRYE. ments since it was with the intention of saying but a very few words; but I wish to add something to what I stated as to Pago Pago. the best harbor in the Pacific Ocean, right in the hurricane latitude, and it is absolutely necessary if we have vessels in that ocean that they can have the right of harborage in Pago Pago—absolutely nec-

Again, if the Nicaraguan Canal is built, or any Isthmian canal, Samoa is of infinitely greater importance to our interests than the Sandwich Islands are. The Sandwich Islands are not en route from the Isthmus to China, or Japan, or Australia, or the East Indies; they are away out of the route; but the Samoan Islands are exactly in line. We have to-day in the whole Pacific Ocean but two resting places, the Sandwich Islands and Samoa. Nothing else is left. If Samoa is taken, only the Sandwich Islands remain, and they off the track.

It is known to Senators that our steam commerce of to-day is on the Pacific and not on the Atlantic. All of our great lines but one, I believe, are on the Pacific; and the importance of Pago Pago as a harbor can not be overestimated to us in our future. This dispatch has just come over the wires:

AUCKLAND, January 31.

Advices from Samoa state that the German officials have given notice that all essels arriving there will be searched for articles contraband of war.

So that the right of search of American vessels, if this dispatch is correct, is asserted by Germany.

They have suppressed the Samoan Times.

If that is true, then free speech is stopped in Samoa.

A passenger on the British steamer Wainne, who visited Mataafa's camp, was placed under arrest, but was subsequently released in compliance with a demand of the British consul.

If he had been an American, I suppose, it would not have done for an American consul to have demanded his release.

A proclamation has been issued placing the Apia police force under German control. Mataafa's followers number 6,000. They are strongly intrenched, and other Samoans are rapidly joining them. Upon the arrival of the steamer Richmond she was boarded and searched by the Germans.

Mr. GRAY. What nationality is that?
Mr. FRYE. I do not know. It came by the Associated Press from Anekland.

Mr. GRAY. English, I suppose.
Mr. FRYE. Very likely. I, of course, do not know whether the statements in this dispatch are true or not, but if they are, then three assertions are made by Germany in Samoa—first, the right of search of least a great deal of information upon this subject, has been communicated by the President of the United States to the Senate, and I rely not upon an unexplained report or clause of a bill for the formation of in treaty relations; second, the suppression of free speech; and third, American vessels going into the harbor of a nation with whom we are the assuming control of the police in Apia. Apia is the municipality which by agreement between Germany, England, the United States, and the Samoan chief or king was made neutral ground, in which these nations had equal rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, which is Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. HALE. I ask that that bill be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be laid aside informally in order to proceed with the appropriation bill now pending. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the regular order is informally laid aside and the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill remains before the Senate, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Maine who has just spoken [Mr. FRYE], and who is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and who takes substantially the same view of this question that I do, it is perhaps better to let the items pass as reported by the committee. In view of the fact that matters are assuming shape so rapidly as that it is probable we shall have the question before us in another form very soon, I withdraw the amendment which I have proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to reserve one of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. I did not observe at the time when the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been reported to the Senate and adopted by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, but I ask consent of the Senstor from Maine and of the Senste to have the amendment making certain ministers plenipotentiary ambassadors reserved for a separate

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the amendment to which he has referred may have a separate vote in the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. It is very desirable that this bill should go through the Senate speedily and be sent to the House of Representatives. I do not propose to take the time of this body in debating the two amendments that have been submitted by the Committee on Foreign Relations and reported in the bill, because I agree with my colleague that the time has not come to fully discuss this most important subject. It is in my judgment better that it should be left to a future time when the Senate can more deliberately consider the grave importance of this subject. In the mean time I am willing to leave the disposition of these amendments, if they be adopted and the money carried with them, with the executive department, which has charge of the negotiations and the conduct of all proceedings relating to the relations between this country and the Samoan Islands. Whatever rights we have there should be firmly protected and insisted upon and not given up.

I do not share, for one, in the feeling which has been expressed here that this matter only involves the performances of a private trading company of German citizens in these islands. I am led to believe that the subject is greater and carries with it more gravity and importance than would be the case if this was only dealing with a foreign power that had not committed itself to the acts of its citizens in these islands. But in view of the letter of Prince Bismarck to the German envoy at Washington, answered by the Secretary of State no later than last February, I am constrained to believe that whatever has been done in the islands of Samoa in the direction of German interference and German intervention there has been done with deliberation; that while openly and apparently it may be of a German company, it is the act of the German Government and in pursuance of a policy on the part of the German Government; and I expect that when the executive power of German Government; and I expect that when the executive power of this Government, which is to deal with this important subject by negotiation, is confronted with the issue it will find itself confronted with the German authority and the policy of the German Empire. Out of that I hope a wise course will be pursued, and that we shall not be unnecessarily involved in important steps that will lead to grave and it may be deplorable results unless it is clear that the rights of American citizens have been interfered with and that everything is necessary to protect those rights protect those rights.

With this, for one, not having the extreme views that have been presented upon this case on the part of some Senators, I am willing to leave it, being desirous of taking no more time, but that the bill shall be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In the heading on page 1, line 10, after the word "of," insert "ambassadors and;" and in line 11, strike out "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" and insert "ambassadors; " so as to read:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors to France, Germany, Great Britain, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

Mr. HALE. Have the amendments of the Committee on Foreign Relations been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments have been adopted except the one which has just been read. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] asked that a separate vote might be taken in the Senate on this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

All the amendments that the Committee of the Whole put in the bill have been adopted except the one in relation to ambas-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All except the one just read.
Mr. CALL. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to allow me to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply desire to inquire whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I only desire to say that this amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Texas and has now been withdrawn is a matter which, in my opinion, should receive the present consideration of this body.

on the 10th of November, 1884, there appears, in the message of the President of the United States submitted to us, a treaty between the King of the islands of Samoa and the German consul in the shape of a form of government absolutely conferring the power over this island and all its inhabitants, whether Americans or of any other nation, upon the German authorities under the title of the Samoan-German council.

This was in 1884. The dispatch of Mr. Kasson calls the attention of our Government to this as a violation of the understanding and the agreement between Germany and the United States. The response of Prince Bismarck, representing the German Government, agrees to it that it would be a violation of the status quo and the agreement between the United States and Germany. But still following that for a period up to the year 1889 this violation of faith which has been period up to the year 1889 this violation of faith which has been pledged to this Government as represented by the minister of Germany has continued, and the question now is after the lapse of five years whether or not the pledged faith of the Government of the United States to protect and preserve the autonomy and the neutrality, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] properly expresses it, the same word that is used in our dispatches, shall be kept. The neutrality of the state of the same word that is used in our dispatches, shall be kept. trality of those islands in respect to all other governments has been violated. The question is, shall we preserve the pledge of the public faith of the Government of the United States to the specific proposition or not? Is five years of violated faith and neglected duty a sufficient time to have expired before the Government and this body as one of the co-ordinate members of the Government shall express a decided and positive opinion upon that subject.

Mr. President, I wish to say for myself that my vote shall be given to the preservation of the public faith, the pledged faith of the Government of the United States, to preserve the neutrality of those islands and for the protection of the rights of American citizens; but above and beyond that the public interests of this country require that when it has pledged its faith as a Government to a proposition affecting foreign governments, that faith shall be preserved at whatever cost.

If the Senator from Texas had retained his amendment, I should have voted for it with pleasure.

ness to be introduced.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state that there are a number of bills relating to the terms of court, the length of service of jurors, and the number of directors in insurance companies, and matters of that kind, which I am sure will not attract any special attention, but which should be acted upon for the convenience of the citizens of this District. Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask if the gentleman means to exclude bills which may be reported by the committee prior to that date?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The only bills that have created any public in-

Mr. HEMPHILL. The only bills that have created any public interest are the ones which I have excepted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the order is made. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COX. The gentleman withdraws it for a moment.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the regular order if the gentleman from Illinois does not want to insist on his bill.

The SPEAKER. If the regular order be withdrawn, there is a bill before the House called up by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

KEAN].
Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the unfinished business of yesterday. Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against lost its privilege by reason of the close of the legislative day of yester-day and by reason of the adjournment of the House. I will assume that were it not for the presence of the special order, the previous question having been demanded, the bill would have come over in the legislative day of to-day clothed with its character of unfinished business; but my point is that the order itself under which the House considered the bill operated to terminate or to put an end to the operation of the rule to which I have already referred. The order of the House under which this action was taken must be construed, I take it, strictly; and I insist it must be construed as though it was the only rule of the House under which the House either acted on yesterday or under which it could act to-day so far as this bill is concerned. This order, which of the rules of the House was clearly abrogated by the provisions of this rule; and if one rule was thus affected, why, clearly all of them were affected in the same way. There was no vote taken on a demand for the previous question. Proceedings which under the rules would have been necessary and indispensable were neither necessary nor indispensable as the House acted on yesterday.

In other words, what I want to call the attention of the Chair to is

In other words, what I want to call the attention of the Chair to is the fact that the House acted on yesterday at all times independently of the rules of the House, and under an order of the House which was made by unanimous consent. That rule will be construed by the Chair as if there never were any other rules of the House that are independent of this order. Now, then, what does this order say? I need not read the whole of it for the purpose of my point. After providing that the bill shall be the special order for the 24th day of January, it proceeds:

And in case such bill shall not be taken up on said day; then this shall be a continuing order until one day shall be occupied as herein specified.

Now, what is specified? It was specified that January 24 should be "the day," but failing in taking it up on that day some other day should become in order, and then that at 4 o'clock on that day the previous question should be considered as having been ordered upon the pending amendments and the third reading and passage of the the pending amendments and the third reading and passage of the bill, and that thereupon a vote should be taken.

Now, the rights of the bill are fixed by that rule, and by no other rule of this body. It had one day. This rule is limited in its operation to one day. If the Chair is governed by the legislative intent manifested in this rule, why, there can be no question on my point of order. The House had just as much right to limit it to one day as it had the right to extend its time under the rule. The House menufectly in the right to extend its time under the rule. The House manifestly in-tended to give to this bill this character for only a single day. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives by unanimous consent may limit the right of a bill just as much as it may give a right to a bill. Now, the question under consideration is the manifest legislative intent, which was that the Oklahoma bill should be disposed of in one day, and that its character of privilege, so far as the question of consideration was concerned, should be limited to a single day. The assumption in the ruling of the Speaker (the gentleman then occupying the chair) had that effect, the ruling of the Chair being distinct, following, as it was claimed, a ruling of the present occupant of the chair on a former occasion, that a motion to adjourn was not in order. But by unanimous consent the House waived the question of appeal from the decision of the Chair and voluntarily, by unanimous consent, entertained a motion to adjourn and did adjourn; and when the House did adjourn last evening there was an end to the operation of this rule. This rule had become inoperative; it had accomplished exactly the legislative intent. It had given a single day to the consideration of this bill. It had fixed an hour when a vote should be taken. The House had the right to dispense with the vote and abandon the consideration of the bill, and the House did do that. The privilege was exhausted under the rule when a single day had been given to the consideration of the bill.

The House could have continued its day, and construction and force must be given by the Chair to the non-action of the House as well as to its action. The House, with its eyes wide open, must be understood to have acted with the knowledge of the effect of this rule, and when the day had expired it was within the purview of the power of the House to have extended the day for the consideration of this bill over into another legislative day; but the House did not do that, and the effect of its non-action in that respect is, in my judgment, that the operation of the order is at an end. And not only so, but it certainly, in my judgment, excludes the operation of another rule which had already been suspended for the purpose of giving to this bill a single day. M Speaker, will it do to say that when the House assigns a limited timefor this was a limit of the time for the consideration of this bill-will it do to say, when the House has assigned a limited time for the consideration of a bill, that then, by some sort of operation of a rule which had been suspended and which had not operated to give the day, the bill shall have unlimited time, because, forsooth, it had a limited time under a former order of the House?

Here is a peremptory provision in this order which supports my view that it was the legislative purpose of the House to limit the operation of the privilege of this bill to a single day. The order fixed the hour the consideration of the bill known as the Oklahoma bill that it has at which the vote was to be taken. Nothing else was in order. There could have been no dilatory motion. The Speaker had ruled on a former occasion in a similar case that a motion to recommit was not in order because the House had ordered that a vote should be taken on certain things, to wit, the engrossment and third reading of the bill with the pending amendments, and had ordered that the vote should be taken pending amendments, and had ordered that the vote should be taken at a given hour and minute. The Speaker did not, perhaps, rule upon the question that was raised yesterday and ruled upon by the then occupant of the chair, but the principle in both cases is exactly the same. Nothing else was in order. Now, can it be possible that by the operation of silence, by a motion to adjourn being sustained, the House has done a thing which it was forbidden to do under its rules? It would not have been in order yesterday at the hour of 4 o'clock to have made a motion that this bill should have a special privilege to-day. No other motion was in order but the motion provided for in the special order of the House, and yet it is said that because the House proceeded to abandon this order or refrained from acting upon it, the order is transmuted over into the general provision of a rule which was not in force

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to hear fully everything that has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gros-VENOR ]. It may be possible, therefore, that I may repeat something that he has said in endeavoring to sustain the point of order which he has made—that the bill under consideration yesterday under a special order of the House fixing a designated day for its consideration, has lost its privileged character and is not now properly the subject of consideration by the House under the order which was adopted. That special order, Mr. Speaker, differed from a continuing order, which usually reads that such a day shall be set apart for the consideration of the bill or the resolution specified, and that, with one or two exceptions, namely, measures from the Ways and Means Committee and measures from the Appropriations Committee, it shall continue from day to day until disposed of.

The order in this case is a special order fixing a specific legislative day for the consideration of this particular measure, which, I might incidentally remark, has received more indulgence and consideration and favor in this House than any other measure pending before it, though vastly insignificant in importance. I say that this was a specific order, fixing a specific day for the consideration of this bill, an order drawn by the friends cific day for the consideration of this bill, an order drawn by the friends of the measure. It was passed, as the Speaker will remember, under a suspension of the rules, and the 24th day of January was fixed for the consideration of this bill. A clause in the special order provided that in the event anything shall interrupt the consideration of this particular measure on the 24th day of January, then another legislative day shall be appointed for its consideration. I call the Speaker's attention especially to the language of the special order providing that another day shall be appointed for the consideration of this measure, "until one day shall be occupied as herein specified." How occupied? Occupied in the consideration of this measure. Here was an order designating a particular day for the consideration of the matter on that designating a particular day for the consideration of the matter on that day, coupled with the condition that if anything interfered with its consideration on that day, then another legislative day should be set apart for its consideration.

Another legislative day was set apart, and yesterday was taken up by its consideration. The hour of 4 o'clock arrived and the committee rose and reported the bill to the House, and then-I believe on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Territories-the House adjourned. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold that under the rules of the House that is the termination of the special order, and I call the attention of the Chair to the provision which is to be found under the head "Special Orders," on pages 264, 265, and 266 of the Manual, and more especially to that clause which I shall now proceed to read, which will be found about the middle of page 265:

Sometimes the words "Fridays and Saturdays excepted" are inserted; in which case the consideration of private bills may be proceeded with on those days; but it is otherwise where these words are omitted. Since that period Fridays alone are set apart for the consideration of private bills. And sometimes the words "and from day to day until disposed of" are omitted—

Those words are omitted in this case; the resolution contains no such language sometimes the words "and from day to day until disposed of" are omitted, in which case-

Now I call the attention of the Speaker especially to the ruling to which I am about to refer-

That is, in a case where the words "and from day to day until disposed of" are omitted—it is a special order for the day named only-

Observe the language, "only"- and if the matter made a special order is not taken up, or if taken up is left undisposed of on the day named, thereafter it loses its specialty.

This ruling is express, emphatic, decisive. And I refer the Chair to the Journal of the Forty-eighth Congress, when the ruling of the Speaker on a similar proposition was precisely in accordance with the ruling which I insist is the correct one in this case.

second session of the Forty-eighth Congress the following proceedings will be found:

Will be 10 Und:

Mr. Tucker, as a privileged question, called up, and the House proceeded to the consideration of, business under the following special order, adopted on the 7th instant, namely:

Resolved, That Tuesday, January 13, be assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee; this order not to interfere with the consideration of general appropriation and revenue bills and the special order adopted January 21 last, relating to reports from the Committee on the Public Lands; and in case this order shall be interfered with on that day, it shall be continued in force until one day thereafter has been occupied by the Committee on the Judiciary.

As the Chair will observe, the special order in that case expressly rovided that if the business designated should be interfered with on the day named, the order should continue in force until one day thereafter had been given to the consideration of this specific business. Now, what was the ruling of the Speaker in that case?

Now, what was the ruling of the Speaker in that case?

Mr. William H. Hatch made the point of order that the first business in order under the said special order was the further consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. 3949) to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and to divide the eastern and western divisions thereof into divisions, and to prescribe the times and places for holding courts therein, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary on the 23d of January last, and referred to the House Calendar and considered by the House on the 17th of May last, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. McCold to section 2, on which amendment the demand for the previous question was pending when the House adjourned on that day.

The Speaker overruled the said point of order on the ground that the said bill was brought before the House on said day under the terms of a special order similar to the pending special order authorizing the consideration of such business "as may be presented by the Committee on the Judiciary." and that in accordance with the practice of the House all business undisposed of on such assignment fell with that day's adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no doubt about the cor-

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no doubt about the correctness of the ruling which the gentleman now cities, but he will permit the Chair to call his attention to the fact that in the case cited there was simply a demand pending for the previous question on an amend-ment, while in this case the previous question has actually been ordered on all the amendments, on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and on its passage.

Mr. HOOKER. I was coming to that point, Mr. Speaker. Having satisfied the mind of the Chair that this special order has exhausted itself, unless it is saved by the ordering of the previous question—

The SPEAKER. That is the only point.

Mr. HOOKER. Unless, I say, this order has more significance than special order ever has when a legislative body fixes a particular time for the consideration of a subject, you can not save it from the fact that it has lost its specialty. It loses its precedence, it loses its preference, if the legislative day is permitted to expire. By the adoption of the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, this bill has lost its right of further consideration under the order in any regard, without reference to the question whether the previous question was ordered or not. Under the ruling to which I have referred, if the legislative day terminates, the special order fixing a specific day for the consideration of the business is exhausted; the specialty of that business is lost; its right of precedence is lost, and can not be again acquired except by another order of the House giving it the status it formerly occupied.

I submit, therefore, if the Speaker please, that when the order simply requires that one legislative day shall be devoted to a specific question, and that day has not been occupied, but another day has been, you can not save the special order from the operation of the restrictions which the gentleman who drew it himself put into it; you can not save it by any motion you can make, or give it again special preference except in the same manner in which the order was originally adopted.

Mr. Speaker, the only question with reference to

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the only question with reference to this point of order is whether the previous question was ordered on the final passage of this bill. If, under the special order adopted by the House, the previous question on the final passage of the bill was ordered yesterday, there is no question that the order places the bill in such a position that it is the first business in order when the House meets again. This is true, under all the precedents and rulings heretofore made on this subject.

There is an additional point. This point was ruled upon last even-g by the Speaker protempore. When the question was asked whether ing by the Speaker protempore. this would come up for consideration the Speaker pro tempore decided that it would. He then made a decision on this question, from which no appeal was taken. It is therefore an adjudication of that fact.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There was no question pending. The opinion of the Chair was an obiter dictum. It was a mere expression of opinion which can bind nobody. There was nothing pending upon which he could make a decision. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. In the present case the rules were suspended and the special order to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKEE] refer was made; and by the terms of that order, at 4 o'clock, on whatever day this matter should come up for consideration, the previous question was to be considered as ordered on all pending amendments, on ordering the bill peaker on a similar proposition was precisely in accordance with the ling which I insist is the correct one in this case.

On page 248 of the Journal of the House of Representatives for the simply whether or not the action of the House in ordering the previous question, not only on the amendments but on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time and on its passage, brings the bill within the practice which for a number of years has prevailed in the House. That practice, as stated in the Digest, is as follows:

Under the established practice of the House the effect of the previous question ordered before an adjournment is to bring the proposition up for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal the following morning, even on Friday, though it be a public bill.

Various decisions are cited, some of which were made by the present occupant of the chair.

In the case of pension bills, for instance, which are taken up under a rule of the House setting apart Friday evening for their consideration, several instances have occurred, and some are now on the Calendar, upon which the House at those evening sessions has, by agreement, ordered the previous question on the third reading and on their passage; and the Chair has ruled in every such case that those bills would come up the next morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, though a public-bill day, and only a few mornings since the gentleman from Indiana called up one, and it was considered by the House.

Unless the Chair has been wrong in its rulings on all those pension bills, it is constrained to hold in this instance that the action of the bills, it is constrained to hold in this instance that the action of the House, in ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill, places it in that condition in which it may be called up the next morning after the adjournment; and the Chair thinks the clause in the special order providing the previous question should be considered as ordered on the passage of the bill was inserted for the express purpose of bringing up the bill the next morning in case the vote could not be completed on the first day. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union might have reported so many amendments to this bill that it would have required the House a week to dispose of them, and it could not be supposed the House could be compelled to remain in session until all such amendments were disposed of in order to prein session until all such amendments were disposed of in order to preserve the special order and continue the operation of the previous ques-

The Chair overrules the point of order, and holds the bill can be called up under the practice.

Mr. YODER. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider

Mr. YODER. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the Payson amendment.
Mr. PAYSON. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative?
Mr. YODER, I did.
Mr. PAYSON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.
Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOOKER. The point of order I make, Mr. Speaker, is that under the special order a certain line of procedure was designated and marked out for the House to pursue in reference to this bill, and it was any origing the order to pursue it was limited to a single legislative my opinion the order to pursue it was limited to a single legislative day. The Chair has ruled otherwise, and I acquiesce in the decision of day. The Chair has ruled the Chair on that subject.

But I make the point that under the previous question, which has been ordered, the House is limited in its action to the specific matters mentioned in the order itself, and they must be voted on in the order there specified. It requires that-

At 4 o'clock on said day the said bill shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments and upon ordering said bill to be read a third time and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall then be taken in the House.

This describes what is to be done, and in it is no provision for the reconsideration of any measure that may be pending before the House.

It might be said, Mr. Speaker, that under the general parliamentary rules the right to reconsider exists, and that that motion can be made in the House. I admit that that would be the case if we were not considering this under a special order. But this method designates the process or method of action, and we must conform to the order, must vote upon the amendments, and upon the bill itself, under the order, in the manner specified.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the motion to reconsider is one of very high privilege, and it is a motion which relates directly to the proposition pending and on which a vote of the House has been taken. In other words, the vote of the House upon a proposition is not final and conclusive upon the House itself until there has been an opportunity to reconsider it, and therefore the motion to reconsider and lay on the table is in fact a vote upon the amendment itself.

The Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PAYSON. And on that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative-yeas 119, nays 131, not voting 71; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to. The following additional pairs were announced: Mr. WILKINS with Mr. WILBER, on this vote.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. HARMER, on this vote. Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. WEST, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The vote is reconsidered, and the question is now upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Upon that I demand the previous question. Mr. PAYSON. Is not debate in order?

The SPEAKER. When the previous question has been ordered by the House it has always been held-or for a number of years, at least that when a vote has been reconsidered the original proposition is debatable, although the previous question had been ordered upon it.

The gentleman demands the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. KERR. I desire to ask, for information, whether this question is not capable of division. The first part of this proposition seems to me to be proper enough, but the latter part of it is a difficult question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will determine that when this matter is disposed of.

The question was taken on the demand for the previous question; and it was ordered. The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from

Mr. KERR. The first part of that proposition is correct. This proposition under consideration in one way changes the law so far as settling upon public land is concerned, and the proposition as it is drawn up would seem to convey the impression that there is some desire to change the present policy in regard to settling the public lands. The latter part of the proposition is objectionable.

The SPEAKER. At what point does the gentleman suggest a division of the question? [After a pause.] The Chair thinks there are two propositions contained in this amendment. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is expressly provided that the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war to make homes on the public lands under the existing homestead laws shall not in any degree be impaired by the passage of this bill—

The SPEAKER. That seems to be a distinct proposition. The Clerk will now read on.

The Clerk read as follows:

and the right of all such honorably discharged Union soldiers or sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all land which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill—

The SPEAKER. The first proposition relates to the public land generally, and the last relates to the lands mentioned in this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The first proposition is all right, and ought to be adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to agreeing to the first part of the proposition.

Mr. KERR. That is what I thought. Now I ask the adoption of that first portion of it.

The question was taken; and the first part of the amendment read was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the remainder of the amendment.

Mr. KERR. Now, upon that I demand the previous question and the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYSON. Under the rules of the House, as this matter comes up de novo on ordering the previous question, is it not open to debate for thirty minutes?

for thirty minutes?

The SPEAKER. That question has never been ruled upon.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I make the point that it is subject to debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very much inclined to think that where it is necessary to order the previous question upon a proposition which has not been debated, the rule allowing thirty minutes for debate would apply. This proposition has not been debated in the House—

Mr. PAYSON. Nor in its present form.

The SPEAKER. Nor in its present form, and therefore the Chair would be inclined to think that in the interest of careful legislation there should be thirty minutes allowed for debate on a proposition which has not been before debated either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

mittee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that the proposition be again stated.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to know whether I am to be recognized to control the time in support of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to control the time in support of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the right of all such honorably discharged Union soldiers or sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all land which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to reserve the time that is coming to me until I shall hear from the other side.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire that the time in opposition to this proposition be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] does not desire to argue we are willing to take a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PAYSON. I do. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the attention of the House will not be diverted from the precise point which is presented by this amendment. I do not intend, so far as I am concerned, to allow the opportunity to pass to enter a protest against any vote on this side or the other being influenced by such statements as were made by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Peters], whom I do not now see in his seat, or by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], to the effect, first, that the adoption of this amendment will defeat this bill, or second, that those who favor this amendment are gentlemen who are opposed to the bill as a general proposition.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman pardon me? Does he refer to the remarks made by me?

Mr. PAYSON. Remarks made among you, that those who favor conspicuously the adoption of this amendment are those who are opposed to this bill in any form. Nothing of that kind is true in substance or fact. The amendment offers itself to the consideration of the representatives of the American people, presenting solely one proposition, which is this:

And the right of all such honorably discharged Union soldiers or sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all land which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. PAYSON. I will, if the gentleman will make it a question.

Mr. SYMES. Do you think the amendment you have offered will enable a soldier to acquire title to an acre of land in Oklahoma unless there is an additional enactment providing that the Indians shall not require any pay for the particular portion of land which the soldiers shall settle upon, or else requiring the United States to pay into this trust fund the $1.25 per acre which is to be paid to the Indians?

Mr. PAYSON. I agree that the land has to be paid for. I have said that over and over again, and the intellect is too dense to comprehend anything which can not understand that under the provisions of hend anything which can not understand that under the provisions of this bill the unextinguished Indian title must be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States. I agree that that is so. The amount that is to be paid is undetermined. The character of the Indian title is a matter about which lawyers everywhere differ. The distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker], who is as good a lawyer as anybody in this House, insists that the title is absolute in the Indians. On the other hand, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] insists that their title is of the most shadowy character. Again, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Springer] insists that the Indians have no rights whatever. He made a trip a thousand miles the Indians have no rights whatever. He made a trip a thousand miles down into Kansas to address a multitude at Wichita. I have a copy of his speech before me, in which he says to that great audience that whatever rights the Indians may have had in these lands heretofore whatever rights the indians may have had in these lands heretofre has been absolutely forfeited, and that the lands now belong to the Government. [Laughter.] Among all these diverse views an agreement has to be arrived at. The estimates of the value of the Indian title range all along from nothing to $1.25 an acre.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not care whether it is 5 cents an acre or $1.25 an acre that the Government has to pay. What I am clamoring here for, to the extent of my ability, is that the right of the honorably discharged Union soldier to make a homestead settlement as a free gift from the Government to him in recognition of his services shall be recognized, and to that end that this amendment shall be adopted. [Applause.] It is not a question of dollars and cents; it is a question of the exercise of patriotism. It is not a question of whether the soldier comes here as a claimant for bounty and stands as a suppliant for favors from the Government to himself. It is another and a higher and a broader question. What is it? It is that a man who stands as an honorably discharged soldier, with a certificate of discharge in his pocket as a testimonial of his patriotic services to the country, may make a home for himself and his children upon the public lands of the country, that he may add to its grandeur, that he may add to the glory of the country by owning the home that covers him as a free gift from the Government which he helped to save. That is the question. There is no question of pauperism in it, and when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] declaims and protests here against the exercise of this right on the part of the Union soldier and against the Government giving it to him it is no violation of confidence for me to say that the gentleman himself lives upon a homestead which the Government gave him. [Laughter.] He deserves it; he ought to have it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman permit me to explain?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir, I will not. But, Mr. Speaker, the same gratuity, the same gift which this Government made to the gentleman from Minnesota, and made to him so deservedly, I claim on behalf of the wounded and invalid soldiers of the Ninth Congressional district of the State of Illinois who may desire to go down into that Southland, fertile as it is, with the climate that it has, when they can not endure the rigors of the northern part of the Union and are precluded by natu-

Tal causes from going there.

Why should this House fear or hesitate in putting itself on record in favor of a proposition that the rights which the Union soldier now has shall not be impaired; that the right he now has to go to Dakota to make a homestead shall be given to him in the Territory of Okla-

There is nothing, sir, in the argument that something is to be paid out of the Treasury for this land. I assert here, and it will not be disputed by anybody, that there is not to-day nor has there ever been an acre of public land upon which homestead settlement has been made that has not been bought and paid for out of the Treasury of the United States. The very homestead upon which the gentleman from Minnesota now lives was bought from an Indian tribe and paid for from the public Treasury. The great State of Illinois embraces land which was at one time part of the possessions of the Pottawatomie Indians. Thirty million acres were bought of that great tribe; and every acre of it has been subject to the homestead law since 1861. When gentlemen here say I answer so it has as to individual reservations here and there, but never as to a great area of country equal to two-thirds of the area of the great State in which I live-never.

The case cited by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Peters] is a familiar one to the members of the Public Lands Committee. In that case the Osage Indians occupied a piece of territory as to which the fee-simple title was in them by treaty; and a subsequent treaty was made by which the General Government took, not the title to that land as public lands, but took the land simply as trustee and sold it as agents for the Indians; and the money was paid into the Treasury for their benefit. The people of this country never had a dollar of interest in the proceeds of that land; and nobody knows that better than the gentleman from Kansas before me and the gentleman from Kansas behind me [Mr. RYAN]. They know that a bill is pending before the Committee on Public Lands to-day asking this Government, notwithstanding this trust character of the transaction, to pay the State of Kansas 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of that reservation. Besides the language of the treaty, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad, passed upon the title to that land, and held that it had never gone out of the Indians until it went to the purchaser under the General Government, which conveyed it merely as trustee.

In individual cases there have been reservations which have been sold, and upon which settlers have never been allowed to go without making payment for the land. And during this session of Congress several bills coming from the Indian Committee were passed in which several bills coming from the Indian Committee were passed in which this same principle was retained, of compelling payment. Gentlemen ask with an air of triumph why was it that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] and I did not interpose objection? The answer is a simple one—because those measures were brought up here at a night session which the Committee on Indian Affairs obtained, and many members, including myself, never knew anything about those bills until they had been passed. I never have been present when any of those bills have been considered except one, which came from the Senter and I allowed it to go through so far as I was concerned. The ate, and I allowed it to go through, so far as I was concerned. The great Blackfoot reservation, embracing 11,000,000 acres, was opened up in the last Congress without compelling payment by anybody, soldier or civilian.

But, Mr. Speaker, let not the attention of the House be diverted from the point in this case. Here is an area of land the like of which has never been opened up by legislative enactment in one body. You are proposing, for the first time in the history of this country, to organize a Territory where there is to-day no law, so far as the General Government is concerned, and to add to the public domain every acre of land embraced within the territorial limits of what is hoped to be later on a great State of this Union. And when we come to dispose of land in this way, embracing an area of twenty-odd million acres, shall it be said by this House, with the sentiment which ought to underlie the consideration of this question, that the comparatively few soldiers who would desire to go down there to make homes shall not be permitted to set their feet on this Territory which their valor saved, rendering this legislation possible; that they shall be shut out from the right to make a homestead there for themselves and their children? If gentlemen here are prepared to take that responsibility, let it be so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will my colleague allow me to call his attention to the first part of his amendment, which has been accepted by the friends of the bill? I would like him to explain to the House whether that portion of the amendment amounts to anything or not.

Several MEMBERS. Of course it does.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It seems to me there is simply nothing in that part of the proposition. I would like my colleague to explain his view of the matter.

Mr. PAYSON. I will answer my colleague by saying that it may be the paragraph to which he calls my attention may not be construed to embrace lands in this Territory, for the reason that these lands are not public lands until after this commission shall have reported, and therefore I added the second clause, which is the amendment now under consideration, to make absolutely certain the intention of the House by the adoption of this amendment to save to the Union soldiers of this country the right they now have in the public land. I trust I make myself understood.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time. The SPEAKER protempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYson] has two and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. WARNER. I will take the floor and yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.] Mr. WARNER. I will yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE].

Mr. STRUBLE. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that any gentleman acquainted with me on looking at me would suspect I held a high place in the Union Army. [Laughter.] But the fact is I did hold an exalted position for three years, and it was that of high private in the rear rank. [Laughter.]

But while I do not claim by virtue of that exalted position to speak for the private soldiers of this country, I do wish to speak for myself on this proposition. Now, sir, let us see what are some of the material facts presented here. We have in this proposed Territory the finest climate in the United States, and a body of the richest land to be found in the Union; lands surrounded by civilization of a high develop-ment on the east and on the north, and to a considerable of it on the south. Everybody understands if this land is opened to settlement that within sixty days this Territory will be filled with people. The result will be that these lands will rapidly advance in value until they will be worth ten, fifteen, and twenty dollars an acre. Now, the condition of things is manifestly exceptional in this regard.

The same conditions have not prevailed heretofore in opening up to settlement our public lands.

What is the fact in regard to town sites? Let us examine that for a moment, because my friend from Illinois recognizes the condition by proposing very exceptional legislation as compared with that existing in the present law respecting the town sites. The committee fixed $20 an acre, while I believe the current price in the Territories is only $1.25 an acre for town sites. Why this unusual price? It was made because there are unusual conditions prevailing there which must be recognized. It was made and recognized only by reason of the exceptional character of this Territory, and the fact that it will be filled speedily and town sites will be of great value.

Mr. Speaker, the great mass of the soldiers who have gone out under the homestead laws and who availed themselves of its provisions went into the States of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, and the Terri-tory of Dakota, and when the conditions were very exceedingly unfavor-able compared with those which now exist and will exist in the Indian Territory after it is opened to settlement.

The other homesteaders to whom I have alluded, when they sought land, went far out upon the frontier, many miles distant from thickly settled portions of the country. They faced storms in summer and winter, and in my part of the country—and indeed all over that great West from Dakota and Minnesota to Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas—for seven years they faced a more dreadful foe than storm and wind. For these years in vast portions of the West the destructive grasshoppers by the million made their annual visitations, and as a rule they literally cleared the fields of all kinds of grain, leaving in thousands of cases nothing but the tough, wiry grass they could not destroy. Untold hardships were endured, and hundreds of poor fellows unable to sustain themselves were compelled to sell their homes for what they could get and go elsewhere.

These soldiers who went into this far West took what they could get, because they felt they must avail themselves of the homestead laws, while the others staid at home in comfortable and well-settled communities, as in District No. 9 in Illinois, which my friend, Mr. PAYSON, so ably represents. And now, after the many thousands of these sol-diers and their families have with others peopled these Territories and States of the West and established there a prosperous condition of things, we find gentlemen of this House all rent asunder with patriotism over the idea of a proposition from the Committee on the Territories in respect of the opening of these magnificent lands in the center of the continent, spread out as they are under most friendly and congenial skies-lands every quarter-section of which will within two years be placed under an admirable state of cultivation, and hence whose value must immediately be greatly augmented. And what is this monstrous proposition? Simply that the soldier homesteader in the Indian Territory shall, as the citizen homeseeker, pay to the Government one dollar and a quarter an acre for his land, just the sum the Government will have to pay the Indians for it. Let me briefly, though at the expense of repeating, urge that the conditions will be altogether exceptional; that by reason of the climate, soil, water, and surrounding civilization and development these lands possess a value unequaled by any ever opened elsewhere to homeseekers.

Now, I submit that, this being true, it is not imposing a hardship upon the soldiers who have remained far away from scenes and experiences that were in hundreds of cases sterner than war, following their avocations and generally averaging fairly well with others of like age, health, and financial circumstances, to ask them to pay to the Government what the Government pays for the land upon easy terms—$50 within six months, $50 within one year, and so on, on easy terms, for three years, to obtain lands worth from ten to twenty dollars an acre. It is no hardship to require that; and while I speak for myself as a private soldier, I feel that I am not doing violence to that proper regard for my comrades when I say that I regard this as a magnificent opportunity for them to possess valuable lands, certain of rapid and large increase in value, by simply going and living upon the land for one year and paying the small pittance of $200 for it on easy terms.

Let it be borne in mind that the same favorable distinction now existing in favor of the soldier homesteader as compared with citizen homesteaders is involved in this law; that the soldier is to have credit for time spent in the Army, or at least as to the whole extent of residence above one year, and that after having resided one year on the land he may go when and where he pleases, only so he completes his small payment to Government.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STRUBLE. Certainly.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Do I understand you to say that these lands will e worth from $10 to $20 an acre?

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes, sir. Mr. SPRINGER. In a very short time.

Mr. WEAVER. As soon as they are settled upon.
Mr. CUTCHEON. It is proposed to sell these lands to the ordinary settler at $1.25 an acre. Now, what I want to ask my friend from Iowa is, would it not be worth while to throw in the $1.25 an acre, so as to give to the patriotic Union soldiers a little advantage in that regard? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope my time is not exhausted, or that time sufficient will be given to me, because I want to answer the gentleman's question. I say to him that he and other gentlemen propose here to alter the relative position or relation between the soldiers as the law now exists and as it has existed for years past. As my friend from Minnesota said, and as the gentleman from Kansas said, you have maintained for years the same relations with respect to the soldiers taking homesteads as we propose to continue them with respect to this Territory. But now you are proposing by this amendment to single out a few from the great mass of soldiers that you have held to the law for twenty-five years past, and propose to throw special conditions and privileges in their behalf over the general policy which has been adhered to for a quarter of a century, privileges which can only be realized and attained by a very small fraction of the soldiers now living.

And right here let me make another point briefly, and one which will serve as an answer to the gentleman's question. No one proposes to guaranty that a single acre of this land shall be reserved for the soldiers. He simply takes his chance among the thousands of active, vigorous, and pushing men, young, middle-aged, and old, in the grand scramble for the allowance of land to each, and the number of soldiers who succeed in acquiring a quarter-section each will, in comparison to the whole number in the United States who have not had homesteads,

But the point I wish and intended to make is this: Gentlemen talk about adopting the so-much-talked-of general policy of granting a quarter-section of land to each honorably discharged soldier. That has been the talk for a quarter of a century. Is this the way to inaugurate such general policy when only a few, comparatively, of those you pretend to desire to benefit can be benefited, and these few less needy than thousands who can not avail themselves certainly of this law as you would have it? Sir, I maintain this, to be brief: Pass this amendment, let it become law, and you have what may well be termed class legislation among soldiers, and which will forever make impossible accomplishing that larger and more just measure of equity and fairness about which we talk when we say we favor a more general and generous land policy toward the soldiers.

No, sir; hold this question until it can be administered for the benefit of all the remaining honorably discharged soldiers of the Republic who have not had homes and who should all be treated alike.

Mr. JACKSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Then my colleague's objection to giving the soldiers there homesteads in this Territory under this bill is founded on the fact that it is a better thing than the Government has heretofore granted under the law to the Union soldiers?

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question if I have time.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the amendment make it open for any and all soldiers to go and take homesteads?

Mr. STRUBLE. Oh, my friend must know that this "open to all" can not but result in a comparatively few receiving the benefits by reason of the great scramble for these lands, as I have already described.

It is open to all who choose to go and settle there and pay the $200 for a quarter-section; and the soldier is credited with the time he spent in the Army as under the present law, but the soldier only has his chance with any other citizen capable of entering the race.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman think that more soldiers would get homes if this land was open to homestead entries than if they are compelled to buy it?

Mr. STRUBLE. I think this, that the soldier who can not afford to pay on the most reasonable terms $200 for 160 acres of valuable land will turn up too late in that mighty rush of able-bodied men who will be found crowding for entries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. WARNER. I how yield live influtes to the general from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield in my loyalty to the Union soldiers of the late war to any man upon this floor, not even to my distinguished friend from the State of Illinois who offers this amendment. For four years I stepped to the music of the Union, and for almost two years of that time I carried a musket and marched in the ranks as an enlisted man.

I know what the services and sacrifices of the soldiers were, and I appreciate the debt of honor and gratitude this Union owes them, and at all times I shall stand by their interests, but I am here looking at this question as a practical one. I want briefly to suggest that in the general law providing for the pre-emption of land no favors are granted to the Union soldiers over those granted to the people generally. In the timber-culture act no favor is granted over that granted to the peo-ple generally. In the desert-land act no favors are granted to the Union soldiers except those which are granted to the people in general, and in the homestead laws no favors are granted to the Union soldiers more than are granted to the people generally, except as to the time they are required to live upon their lands, and that advantage and benefit is given the Union soldier by the provisions of this bill. If my friend from Illinois is so anxious to serve the Union soldier, why is it that during the eight years he has had the honor to speak for this House upon the Public Lands Committee he has never offered a proposition favorable to the Union soldier in regard to the pre-emption laws, the desert-land act, the timber-culture act, and the other public-land laws? [Applause.]
Mr. PAYSON. Because under those three laws—the pre-emption law, the timber-culture act, and the desert-land-entry law-it was impossible to give the Union soldier any advantage. The pre-emption law and the timber-culture law required the performance of certain conditions. Under the timber-culture act there were conditions in the way of raising trees, and the desert-land laws required reclamation of the arid lands; and therefore no advantage can be given to the Union soldier as to any of these lands over the ordinary civilian.

Mr. PERKINS. Why is it that the gentleman from Illinois comes here to-day with the enemies of this bill, and proposes that this peculiar provision of law shall be attached to a proposition which proposes to buy and to open for settlement some Indian lands? [Applause.] Lands that should be opened to settlement and made the home of a thrifty, intelligent, and patriotic people—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WARNER. I reserve the balance of my time until we hear from the other side.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. This amendment proposes to give to the Union soldier an advantage over the civilian. For that reason I shall Union soldier an advantage over the civilian. For that reason I shall vote for it; and in doing so we will be but carrying out the pledges of both the great parties in this country. Because it has not heretofore been done is no reason why it should not now be done; and, sir, if this advantage results in settling every foot of that vast territory by ex-Union soldiers, so much the better. [Applause.] We will have a liberty-loving commonwealth planted in a section of country where it is needed; whose patriotism will always be unquestioned, because the men who go there will, by their future as by their past lives, demonstrate that they stand for the Union; and it will bring no harm to the Republic to have one commonwealth situated in the most favored portion of the country composed for the most part of ex-Union soldiers

Mr. Speaker, one argument made here is that it gives the Union soldier an advantage. He is entitled to it.

A MEMBER. We give it to them in the offices.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. We have agreed time and again to give it to him, and I appeal to the men upon the other side of the House who fought against him, in their magnanimity and present regard for this Republic, to aid us in doing this act of justice to the soldier; and let the neuralgic, the asthmatic, the rheumatic, and consumptive and weak soldiers of the North leave their rigorous climate, go into this favored land and find homes in their old age, and give them that fair land because they were Union soldiers. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Missouri has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WARNER. Objection seems to have been made, and some gentleman's feelings seem to have been wounded because it has been stated that gentlemen who favor this proposition are against the Oklahoma bill. I concede, sir, that that is stating the proposition too broadly, but I do say that the men who are most active in pressing this amendment are the men who have fought this bill from the commencement. The gentleman, after the amendment was ingrafted upon this bill, raised the question of order to prevent the further consideration and the possible passage of the bill at this session—

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. WARNER. I have only three minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You would not lose that time. The motion was entered last night-

Mr. WARNER. I am simply stating what has taken place upon this floor. If any gentleman feels aggrieved by it, then he is aggrieved by the record and by the facts.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And from misrepresentation.

Mr. WARNER. No, sir. The gentleman may have made misrepresentation when he stated yesterday that he was for this bill—

Mr. GROSVENOR. You have misrepresented me.

Mr. WARNER. When we put on the amendment; and to-day he says I am misrepresenting him. It is time for it to stop. My friend knows that back of this he has fought this bill at every inch. I am not here to speak for anybody but myself and my district.

When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] yesterday said that he was opposed to this bill because it discriminated against the Union soldier he showed his entire ignorance of the provisions of the bill. There is no discrimination against the Union soldier.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say there is.

Mr. WARNER. There is everything in his favor in this bill that is found in the homestead law. I yield to no man in my devotion to the Union soldier. I indorse to the widest and broadest extent that sentence of an eminent citizen of this country, that this is no time to use the apothecary's scale to weigh the rewards of the men who saved this

Mr. WARNER. I want general legislation. I do not want legislation such as my friend from Illinois says

Mr. GROSVENOR. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent to have one minute to make a personal explanation to the House. Mr. KERR and others. I object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A man who would object under such circumstances does not deal fairly. I rise to a question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] states that he rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has made a statement to the House in reference to an utterance of mine on this floor yesterday which reflects upon my character and my integrity as a member of this House. He states that, in view of the state-ment which I made on yesterday that if this amendment was placed in the bill I would vote for the bill, my insincerity was manifested by m the bill I would vote for the bill, my insincerity was manifested by my making a point of order this morning that the bill was not properly before the House as a matter of privilege. That is an attack upon the good faith of my statement made here yesterday, and that is my question of privilege. I do not want to take any advantage or violate any of the proprieties of this occasion, and I now submit to the Speaker the question whether I am entitled under these circumstances to explain the research why I have done what I have the reason why I have done what I have.

The SPEAKER. The ninth rule of the House defines questions of privilege. The rule provides that-

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence, etc.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when a member of the House makes a statement of what he will do in a certain event, and when thereafter he is charged with duplicity and insincerity upon the floor in his representative capacity, that presents a question personal privilege.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is somewhat doubtful. The language of the rule is "rights, reputation, and conduct."

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is conduct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to hold that the gentleman would have a right under the rule to make a statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, never while I am a member of this House, upon a great question of legislation, will I be found losing my temper to such an extent as that in the closing moments of a debate I will charge a brother member with insincerity, and, practically, with dishonesty, and then refuse him a moment of explanation and demand the regular order upon him when he is seeking to avail himself of an opportunity to say one word in defense against an attack like that.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not.

Mr. WARNER. No, because you make a misstatement. I never demanded the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was equivalent to it.

Mr. WARNER. Well, that is an equivocation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The charge was made in the closing moments of the debate by a gentleman holding a position which he is seeking to wield in the interest of a piece of legislation about which some day or other the House will know more than it does now. Not happening to live quite so near to the famous Oklahoma convention held last fall at Kansas City as some other members, I am not quite able to formulate my views upon that subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this: I stated yesterday that if this amendment was put into this bill I should vote for the bill. I made that statement in absolute good faith, and those associated with me upon this floor know it. They understand it perfectly well. There are numbers of them that have come to me since that statement was made and asked me the question, and I have steadily insisted that if this amendment was put into the bill I would vote for it, and I repeat

In the first place, I may be allowed to say that the motion to adjourn last evening was understood by everybody to be for the purpose of organizing a reconsideration of this vote; and no man had more to do with it than the gentleman who has attacked me here. Yesterday the attempt was made to enter the motion to reconsider, but the member making it was ruled out of order because he had not voted on the prevailing side of the question. During the evening it was understood throughout the whole city that this motion was to be made. It was announced this morning in the public press that the motion was to be made. Communication was brought to the author of the amendment on the floor this morning that the motion was to be made. Telegrams had come from a distant portion of the Union demanding that a certain gentleman here should change his vote; and he came to me and told me of these telegrams, and told me exactly what the situation So I had a right to assume that just what has taken place was going to take place, and what has taken place justifies me also. The desperation with which this battle has been fought warned me, espedesperation with which this battle has been lought warned me, especially in view of the utterances which were made all about me here, that the introduction of this "soldier amendment" into this bill made the bill "worthless to us," as one of its promoters said—"worthless to us!" I understood perfectly well who were here, who were in the galleries, who were in the city; and I knew that this thing would be done; I knew that the member from Missouri would press the matter as he has done and a large under a soldierition word or the thereign. has done. And so I was under no obligation, moral or otherwise, to be determit the opportunity to go by to raise the question of order which did raise. That is my answer to the allegation of insincerity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, retain this amendment, let it stand in this bill has done. I did raise.

as it stands at this moment, and I will vote for it. Much as I hesitate to believe that the purposes of this bill are what is claimed, yet under the circumstances I will vote for it. I will vote for it with that amendment and not without, Mr. Speaker, because from one end of the counment and not without, Mr. Speaker, because from one end of the country to the other the soldiers of the Union understand, and for months have understood, that this bill is to perpetuate their rights under the homestead laws of this country in this land. And I will contrast my position upon this subject one year from to-day with the position of the gentleman who has assailed me on this floor; and I will submit to the whole country, in the light of his future connection with Oklahoma Territory, whether or not he is the disinterested passes who has a right Territory, whether or not he is the disinterested person who has a right to arraign other people here for "insincerity" on this occasion. [Ap-

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman who has just taken his seat has made two charges, which were, as I understood him, one that he knew who were in the galleries yesterday, and that he therefore knew that the "gentleman from Missouri" would press this matter as he has done; second, that my future connection in the next year with Oklahoma will show the reason for my zeal and my purpose in advocating this will show the reason for my zeal and my purpose in advocating this

Let me say to the gentleman that he certainly is as reckless in the statement he makes when he says I knew who were in the galleries

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not said so; I said I knew. Mr. WARNER. And your inference was that I did. Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all.

Mr. WARNER. Let the gentleman not be quite so disingenuous. The gentleman said he knew who were in the galleries yesterday, and therefore knew that I would press this matter as I did. I submit it to the gentleman himself whether the direct inference, whether the assertion and charge is not made-not possibly as boldly as some men would have made it, but made covertly, as some men like to make charges, that I had been consulting with these gentlemen in the gallery, or women, whatever they may be, the gentleman did not say—

Mr. SPINOLA. What part of the gallery do you refer to? [Laugh-

Mr. WARNER. And that therefore it had an influence upon me. I will say to the gentleman, for whatever my assertion may be worth, that I did not know any one that was in the gallery yesterday, except when I went home last night my wife told me she was there, and she

Now, if the gentleman has kept his eye upon the galleries, his long experience in legislative matters may make him look around and be suspicious, because the gentleman is above reproach; but take a comparatively unknown member, a man who has not the national reputa-tion for integrity and straightforward dealing of the gentleman from Ohio, and a charge of this kind, going out unanswered, when it reached his neighbors in Kansas City might perchance injure his reputation with some—possibly it might; I doubt it.

Now, as to the other point, as to my future connection with Oklahoma.

do not know with what gift of prophecy the gentleman is endowed. I know, Mr. Speaker, that he has many wondrous qualities. I know that he can see things—I will not say that have no existence save in his imagination, but I will say that at times he may look "through a glass darkly" and may see "by the eye of faith" things that never have occurred and never will occur. Let me say to the gentleman now, if by his remark he meant to intimate that I have ever thought of going to Oklahoma, that I have a relative, that I have a friend living, who ever has spoken to me or whom I have ever advised to go to Oklahoma, that I have ever expected, directly or indirectly, one cent of pecuniary benefit, that I ever expect a political favor there, or that I ever expect a social courtesy from its inhabitants, the gentleman speaks of that of which he knows nothing and has no foundation for.

I know that a cattle syndicate occupies 6,000,000 acres of land in this proposed Territory. I know the law officers of the Government have said those leases are null and void. I know those law officers have said these cattle-men were there as trespassers. I do know they are occupying those lands to the exclusion of men who want to settle on them. I do know my city and the district I represent on this floor in my feeble way are interested not in Oklahoma as Oklahoma, but interested in the building up of the West. They are interested in driving out intruders. They are interested in making that land a land for the homeless, where there will be American citizens who will produce something, where they will buy something, where they will add to the great channels of commerce of this country, instead of standing, as this territory does now, in the language of General Miles, "a blot on the map of the United States." Instead of having those lands occupied by halfbreeds, blanketed Indians, who have neither the energy of the chase nor the genius of the fisherman, I would have them opened as homes for families, that they may be made to blossom like the rose under the tender care of the husbandman. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment.
Mr. PAYSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the right of all such honorably discharged soldiers and sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead laws shall extend to any and all land which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative-yeas 110, nays 140, not voting 71; as follows:

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out section 9 and insert the following as a new section:

"Sec. 9. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reserve on any public land in said Territory town sites for any existing or prospective town, city, or village, in area not exceeding 640 acres each, in compact form, or such additional area in governmental subdivisions as may be wholly or in part occupied as a town, city, or village site; and no application to enter any land shall be allowed until approved by the Secretary of the Interior of any tract of land, first, where any exterior line of the land is within one-half mile of the line of any railroad which is constructed or of the line of any railroad not constructed but where its map of location shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior at the date of the application to enter is a town or village settlement; and no settlement in advance of survey by proper authority shall give any right as against the power to reserve town sites hereby given; it being the object of this provision to secure to the inhabitants of all towns, cities, and villages in said Territory the benefits and profits arising from the sales of lots therein; and to that end where town sites shall be located upon any public lands in said Territory, the provisions of chapter 8, Title XXXII, Revised Statutes, entitled 'Reservation and sale of town sites on the public lands,' shall apply except as otherwise provided herein. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lots in any site now existing or to be located to be offered, sold, and conveyed as provided in sections 2382 and 2383 of the Revised Statutes. The money so received from the sale of lots in each town site, less such amount as shall be required to be paid to the Indians as provided in sections 5 and 6 of this act, shall be held by the Secretary of the Interior as a separate school fund for the benefit of the inhabitants of such towns and shall be expended under his direction for the erection of school bui in this section; and patents for such reservations to be maintained for such public purposes shall be issued to the towns respectively, when organized as municipalities."

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the amendments; but it appears from the RECORD that when the House adjourned on yesterday afternoon an amendment was pending, which the Clerk will now read.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was agreed to this morning.
The SPEAKER. The amendment in relation to taxation?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then it was agreed to during the temporary absence of the present occupant of the chair.

The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment which I had offered, to strike out the thirteenth section of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that was not agreed to in committee, and was not reported to the House. Mr. HOOKER. But the gentleman from Illinois agreed that this amendment was understood as having been offered in the committee. Mr. SPRINGER. It was offered in the committee, but owing to the expiration of the time fixed for the consideration of the bill the amendment was not reached.

Mr. HOOKER. But it was a pending amendment, and I think is embraced in the order or agreement by which this bill is now before the House

The SPEAKER. The special order provides that the amendments which are reported from the Committee of the Whole shall be voted upon, and two others, which are specially provided for in the order. The amendment to which the gentleman from Mississippi refers does not seem to have been reported.

Mr. HOOKER. But there were a number of amendments, Mr. Speaker, I will suggest, which were not reached by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Then of course they are excluded under the order.
Mr. HOOKER. But this was offered in the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Illinois said he would regard it as a pending amendment. There were a number of amendments offered—for instance, the substitute of my friend from Georgia, which is certainly a pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the amendments are not reported from the Committee of the Whole they are not embraced in the order.

Mr. HOOKER. But the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole shows that there was no resolution upon the subject at all, and it was understood in committee that the motion to strike out this thirteenth section would be entertained and regarded as pending.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair knows nothing about what agreement was made in the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. And I think the House in fairness will allow a vote on this amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state that I have no objection to a vote upon the amendment, although the Speaker has ruled correctly that only those amendments agreed to in committee and reported to the House were to be voted upon. But I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have the right to offer his amendment.

Mr. REED. What is it?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the section in relation to the cattle lands. Mr. HOOKER. It is the section which proposes to strike down the title of these people upon their lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not the effect of the section by any means.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not the effect of the section by any means.
Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore in this discussion, by my voice and vote, supported this measure in its general purposes to secure some form of government for this Territory.
But I have been and am opposed to the third section, which declares void leases made with Indians upon these lands. I oppose it, as I opposed the bill in respect to the Des Moines River land, in which this posed the bill in respect to the Des Moines River land, in which this House sought to quiet the title to certain settlers' land, because it is not within the province of the legislative branch of the Government to make a judicial decree. I am fully advised as to the decisions of the Attorney-General, which have already declared such leases void under existing laws and treaties. If such be the law (and my own convictions are in accord with it), then this legislation is unnecessary. If it is not the law, there is no constitutional power in this House to annul said leases

In either event the section is, in my judgment, improper legislation, and it should be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that a vote may be taken upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the section named?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the section proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That all leases of lands belonging to the United States or held in common by any of the Indian tribes within the Territory of Oklahoma, as organized by this act, including the Cherokee Strip west of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude, whether controlled by persons, corporations, or others, except such leases as are held for the purpose of cultivating the soil strictly for farming purposes, are hereby declared void and contrary to public policy; and it is hereby made the duty of the President, immediately after the passage of this act, to cause the lessees of said lands, and any other persons illegally occupying the same, to be removed from said lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the motion is to strike out this I have no objection to a vote being taken without debate.

Mr. HOOKER. On that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative-yeas

Mr. Houk with Mr. Neal, for the balance of this day.

Mr. Davidson, of Florida, with Mr. Pugsley, for the rest of the

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BARNES. It was understood that a certain amendment, which is a substitute for the whole matter, should be voted upon. amendment has been considered pending all the time, and the friends of the bill gave us an assurance that there should be a vote upon the amendment. I do not propose to detain the committee or the House by a full explanation of it, but would like to have it read; and I will simply make the statement that it is in conformity with the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Atkins, in three different reports.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to negotiate and make treaties with the Choctaw, Chick-asaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians, for the purpose of securing homes and reservations east of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude for the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Cheyenne, and Arapaho Indians, and the Wichita and affiliated bands living with them.

Sec. 2. That in order to open up the country for occupancy by citizens of the United States west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude, now occupied by the Comanches, Kiowas, and Apaches, and the country occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and by the Wichita and affiliated bands, said commissioners shall treat with said Indians for an exchange of the lands now occupied by them for permanent homes and reservations east of said ninety-eighth degree of longitude.

Sec. 3. That in treating with the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians for the occupancy by American citizens of the country west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude leased, sold, ceded, or agreed to be ceded by them to the United States for the settlement of Indians and freedmen thereon, it shall be stipulated that the lands so to be occupied by citizens of the United States shall not be paid for at a greater rate than $1.25 per acre, and that any and all sums of money heretofore received by any of said Indians as a payment thereon shall be deducted from the amounts agreed to be paid.

Sec. 4. That negotiations with the tribes and bands of Indians now living west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude shall proceed upon the basis of securing to them homes and reservations east of said degree of longitude in perpetuity, and compensation for their removal and settlement in a new country, and pay for their improvements.

Sec. 5. That in treating with any and all of said Indians, consideration shall be give SEC.7. That the President direct the speediest accomplishment of the requirements of this act; and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to carry the same into effect.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken upon this, not by yeas and nays, and that the point of no quorum shall not be made.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Let us have the yeas and nays. Mr. SPRINGER. I will give you a vote. I will agree to that. You can take a standing vote or by tellers.

Mr. BARNES. This substitute was prepared by the minority of the committee, and it was made in conformity with the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in three different reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deny all of that; but I will simply go to the question as to whether they are willing to take a vote without the yeas and nays and not to make the point of no quorum. This House has indicated time and again that it is in favor of this bill, and we want to get a vote on it.

Mr. OWEN. That is not in accordance with the understanding heretofore.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may now offer an amendment, which is the substitute that has been reported by the Clerk. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object to save time. Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I object.
Mr. DUNHAM. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, no, it is not. Mr. STEELE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEELE. Division. The House again divided.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the yeas and nays.
Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the result of the vote be announced, as I want to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 46, the nays 97.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask now that the vote be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia by yeas and nays.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays. The SPEAKER. Then the noes have it, and the House refuses to adjourn. Mr. BARNES. I now renew the motion to substitute the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk for the bill, and on that I ask a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right. That is agreed to.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MRS. ELLEN HAND-VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 3264, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen Hand."

The husband of the beneficiary named in this bill enlisted August 22, 1862, and was mustered out with his company July 10, 1865.

He filed a claim for pension in 1881, sixteen years after his discharge, alleging that he contracted rheumatism about December, 1862.

He died in February, 1883, the cause of death being, as therein certified, typhoid fever.

His claim for pension on account of rheumatism seems to have been favorably determined after his death, for it was made payable to his widow, and was allowed from the time of filing his petition to February 25, 1883, the day of his death.

The facts of the case as now were the contract of the facts of the case as now were the contract of the case as now were the contract of the case as now were the contract of the case as now were the case as now were

The facts of the case as now presented appear to me to lead in the most satisfactory manner to the conclusion that the soldier's death was in no way related to any incident of his military service. GROVER CLEVELAND.

It was purchased in Montreal by a gentleman of New Haven, Conn., and subsequently purchased from him by the present owner in New York. He did not know that there was any particular trouble about it until he called for the inspection of the boilers, when the steam-boat inspectors declined to inspect them on the ground that the yacht had not been admitted to American registry. There is evidence in the papers showing that the original importer paid between $300 and $400 duties on the little vessel when he bought it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3890) granting a pension to Adelaide E. Spurgeon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3891) for the relief of W. H. Huson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 3893) for the relief of Samuel Ferguson Beach, executor of Anthony R. Fraser, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3894) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying the same into effect; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HAMPTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT STEAM-RAILROAD HEARINGS

Mr. FAULKNER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ a stenographer to report hearings before said committee on the subject of steam railroads in the District of Columbia, the expenses therefor to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

SAMOAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved. That the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved. That the Committee on Foreign Relations is instructed to inquire into the condition of affairs in the Samoan Islands and report at an early day what measures are necessary and proper to protect the interests of American citizens residing therein, and to discharge any obligations of the United States to the people of those islands in the maintenance of their own local government free from the exclusive interference of any foreign power and to secure the just rights and interests of the United States in the future control and government of said islands.

CONDITION OF MARINI'S BUILDING.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the District commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to examine into the condition, sanitary and otherwise, of Marini's building, now occupied by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, and the officials, clerks, and employes under him, and report to the Senate whether such building is safe in respect to the life, health, and physical comfort of those occupying the

SUNDAY-REST HEARING.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

I have received recently a considerable number of applications for copies of "the hearing on the Sunday-rest bill before Senator BLAIR'S committee in December, 1888," as it is styled. Upon inquiry I find that I am entitled to two copies only. Yesterday I received from a correspondent an application for a number of copies of this document, and inclosed was the following printed slip which explained the reason of the applications:

THE AMERICAN SABBATH UNION.

THE AMERICAN SABBATH UNION.

The Senate Committee on Education and Labor recently gave to the friends and the opponents of the Sabbath a hearing on the "Sunday-rest bill" now pending in the Senate of the United States.

The opponents of the bill were from the Seventh Day Baptists, the Seventh Day Adventists, the Personal Liberty League Party, or infidel element.

This historic and valuable collection of arguments, which presented both sides of this all-important subject, forms a valuable addition to our Sabbath literature that should be in every household.

Copies of it can be had free of charge by writing promptly to the Senator from your State, asking for "the hearing on the "Sunday-rest bill" before Senator BLAIR's committee in December, 1888."

Rev. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Rev. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, Field Secretary, 74 East Nineticth Street, New York City.

G. P. LORD, Recording Secretary, Elgin, Ill.

At the bottom of the slip is printed the following:

Please put one of these slips in each pew in your church, and publish in your local paper.

When each Senator has but two copies of this document it seems to me a little bit unfair to members of the Senate that these reverend gen-tlemen should advise our constituents all over the United States that copies of the document can be had free of charge, and, as it would seem, copies of the document can be not free of charge, and, as it would seem, in almost an unlimited number, by simply applying to Senators. I have had a number of applications and have been to the trouble of writing to very excellent people from my State that I had no copies and could not get any.

I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether we are to have this document in very large numbers and how many we are to have.

I wish to call public attention to the fact that we have but a limited number, to the end that we may not be censured for not sending out in great numbers this document upon application, especially after this printed slip has been distributed in the pews of all the churches of the ountry.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will take pleasure in giving to the Senator from Arkansas all the information I have upon this subject-matter.

The hearing before the Committee on Education and Labor, whether because of the great merit of the arguments that were had there, or because, it may be, of the circular which has been read by the Senator because, it may be, of the circular which has been read by the Senator from Arkansas, has excited not only a great deal of comment through the country but an enormous demand upon members of the Senate, and particularly upon members of the Printing Committee, for the printing of a large number of this document. From some of those who have been officially connected with the matter, representing associations, there has come the suggestion that at least a half million copies of the hearing should be printed. The Committee on Printing in considering the matter felt that that number was hardly needed, but that in view of the importance of the subject metter the demand but that in view of the importance of the subject-matter, the demand, whether it was forced or natural, would be sufficiently met by the action already had by the Senate.

Under a Senate resolution introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and adopted by the Senate a few days ago, 8,300 copies were printed, that being the limit which could be printed under the $500 law that governs us in the matter of Senate printed the decorate has governs as in the matter of Schale printing. Yesterday the Senate passed a concurrent resolution ordering printed 10,000 more copies of the hearing for the use of the Senate, 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor. This will give, in addition to the two copies the Senator speaks of that come from the usual number that was ordered printed, 240 copies to each member of the Senate, 60 copies to each member of the House, and 200 copies to each member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

That is the present status of the matter, and if the consurrant reconstruction.

That is the present status of the matter, and if the concurrent resolution passed by the Senate shall be adopted by the House of Representatives that will be the result.

PAINTING OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is there anything before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate as morning business the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] in relation to naval officers' claims, coming over from a previous day.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow me to call up the bill for the purchase of an oil painting of Mr. Lincoln, which comes from the Committee on the Library with its full approbation. It will not take any time nor excite any discussion. It is the bill (S. 3384) to purchase a painting of Abraham Lincoln. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will it not be just as convenient for the Senator to wait?

Mr. VOORHEES. It will not take five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is morning business. The Senator from New Hampshire yields to the Senator from Indiana for the purpose of asking the consideration of the bill (S. 3384) to purchase a painting of Abraham Lincoln. Is there objection to the present consideration of

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the Library Committee of the Senate to purchase of its owner the life-size oil painting of the late Abraham Lincoln (painted by G. W. F. Travis), to be hung in the United States Capitol, for a sum not to exceed $15,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator from Indiana, who I know is very liberal, should explain this matter. If he is able to assure us that there is a painting of Mr. Lincoln worth $15,000, I shall be very glad to pay it, but if this is a mere gift to some one—
Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, no.
Mr. SHERMAN. If it is not for the work of art, but because the subject-matter is good, I should not like to see it done.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senate has the assurance of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who is present, the chairman of that committee, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is the other member, that this is an extraordinary painting.

Mr. SHERMAN. Whom by?

Mr. VOORHEES. The name is given in the bill. There is a printed If the Senator from Ohio desires to hear it read, there is a printed report in regard to this painting; but I would say that it having been my good fortune to be closely associated with Mr. Lincoln in my early days in a circuit of the West practicing law, I never saw an oil painting of him that seemed to me worthy of purchase except this one; and that is the opinion of the committee. It is a superb painting, of life size. The matter has had very full consideration. There is a written report, which has been printed, accompanying the bill. I thought I would not take up the time of the Senate, unless compelled to do so, by asking for the reading of the report.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask a question?

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, certainly.
Mr. HALE. Is this the portrait of Abraham Lincoln that for some time has hung in the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it is. I think it is there. That is the same painting. I will say to the Senator from Maine that it hung at first for a while in the reading-room of the Riggs House. He may have seen it there, under a very favorable light. If Senators desire it, I shall have the report read.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is quite confident that it is the same picture that has been lately hanging in the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

val Affairs?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it is.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow the bill to go over until tomorrow morning, so that we can look at it?

Mr. VOORHEES. I would rather have it passed now if I can. I have got the Senator's own opinion in the report, the Senator from Illinois himself, certifying that it is a work of great merit. His own statement is here in the report, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Indiana will allow me to say that I know that portraits in the highest style of art, by the most eminent American painters. in full life size are painted at from $2,500 to nent American painters, in full life size are painted at from $2,500 to $5,000. I am perfectly willing to pay whatever an intelligent artist who is competing in this business would say this painting is worth; but I know of no portrait painter in this country who pretends to charge any such price as $15,000 for a full life-size painting.

Mr. HAWLEY. And in no other country, either.
Mr. SHERMAN. And in no other country, the Senator from Connecticut says; but I do not know that. However, I know that $2,500 method says; but I do not know that. However, I know that $2,000 will buy a full-length life-size portrait by the best artist in America.

Mr. VOORHEES. It might buy a portrait of some people.

Mr. SHERMAN. The mere fact that it is a portrait of Mr. Lincoln, while it gives additional interest to us, is not the question. When we are purchasing his portrait we ought not to pay a large sum merely because Mr. Lincoln was a great man and highly esteemed and beloved by every American citizen. That is not the measure of value. The measure of value is the cost of producing a like article.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Indiana be kind enough to state the name of the artist?

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Travis. Mr. HAWLEY. Where does he live?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think this is a good price, but it is an admirable picture of a very great man. I thought in committee, and so did the committee, that we should not belittle the subject by trying to get it for a small price. I really think that we should be doing ourselyes injustice as well as the subject of this great painting by haggling about the price to be paid.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I dislike to say anything obstructive of any measure that the Senator from Indiana may propose, because he is always generous and liberal with all of us on this floor; but I have never heard of a modern portrait being charged for at a price of $15,000. I think the Senate should have a chance for inspection and a chance for inquiry before they are committed to any such amount. It seems to me that probably the portrait may be worth $2,500 if this artist has a very high reputation; otherwise not, because reputation is very often what determines the price.

Mr. HAWLEY. The reputation of the artist?

Mr. PALMER. The reputation of the artist. We should have a chance to look at the painting before we commit ourselves to its purchase. I think that Mr. Eastman Johnson, who is the most eminent portrait painter in America, as I understand, never charges over $5,-

Mr. MORRILL and Mr. HAWLEY. Not over $2,500. Mr. PALMER. I understand he does not charge over $2,500 for a portrait.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the question is not what would be the rate by which an eminent artist would now produce a portrait of Mr. Lincoln. This portrait was produced by a portraiture from life. It is not, therefore, a question of what price artists could now be found to make a portrait to dignify and adorn any of the halls of Government; it is a question whether we should buy this portrait. The owner of the portrait has affixed this as the price at which he will part with it to the Government. The committee were desirous that the Government should possess it, and we have laid before the Senate our proposition, that the Government shall buy it at the price which the artist has affixed.

We can not go beyond that. The committee have no fund committed to them, because that was denied us in the act of last year. We shall endeavor again to have placed in the hands of the committee a certain fund by which they can make transactions to acquire valuable paintings for the United States. There is no mode for the committee but to pass upon the question whether a painting of Lincoln of the dimensions and the lineaments and the approval given by those familiar with his and the lineaments and the approval given by those laminar with his countenance, shall be acquired or not; and we propose it to the Senate. Now, Senators say, and certainly so far as I am concerned I have no objection to make to it, that they desire to have some opportunity to pass their own judgment upon the value and interest of this portrait. The committee have examined it; the committee have heard testimony concerning it. All the members of the committee were, I believe, quite familiar with the person and traits of Mr. Lincoln's figure and countenance. If it is only desired that the bill may lie over in order that Senators may look at the portrait, which I suppose is still in the room of the Naval Committee

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not now in the Naval Committee room.
Mr. HAWLEY. Where is it?
Mr. EVARTS. I do not know where it is. It was for several years in the Naval Committee room.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Indiana know where it now is?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is in the Naval Committee room, I understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not there now.
Mr. VOORHEES. I have not seen it in the last six weeks, but it certainly was there the last time I saw it.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Indiana is not very desirous of pressing the bill to a vote to-day I shall be obliged to him if he will let go over until to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, I always yield to an appeal of that kind; it is wise to do so; and I hope, in parting from the subject now until to-morrow, that Senators will interest themselves and see the portrait.

Mr. CULLOM. In the first place, I have not a very definite recollection of the picture, although I remember receiving letters from Chicago asking that it be sent out to the exposition there, or something of that kind. I may have seen the picture at that time, but not with a view of inspecting it very definitely. I have an impression, too, that $15,000 is a pretty large price to be paid for an ordinary painting.

This may be an extraordinary painting.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it was not extraordinary we would not offer such a price for it.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no opinion, however, upon that point for the present, and I should like to have the bill go over until to-morrow. Mr. VOORHEES. The matter may go over subject to call to-morrow, or the first day we are in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the from New York to desire to speak further on the subject.

Mr. EVARTS. I wish to say a word further on the subject. The Chair understands the Senator

Mr. EVARTS. I wish to say a word further on the subject.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator from New York had taken his seat, or I would not have said what I did.

Mr. EVARTS. I find that Senators about me have regarded this proposition as rather relating to the amount that should be paid to an artist for producing as a work of art a portraiture of the late President. That is understood now to be entirely different. The artist had it for disposition at this price, and if it is not sold to this Government then it may be disposed of in other directions.

Mr. PLATT. I have just been looking at the printed report, and I

Mr. PLATT. I have just been looking at the printed report, and I think the Senator from New York must be mistaken in saying that the artist has the painting for disposition at this price. The report states think the Senator from New York must be mistaken in saying that the artist has the painting for disposition at this price. The report states that it was purchased by Consul Webster, at Sheffield, England, and was sent by him to the Centennial Exposition, where it was exhibited, and it is now the property of the gentleman who was formerly consul at Sheffield, England, and not the property of the artist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read in the Committee of the Whole will resume its place on the Calendar if there he no objection.

be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not be

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not be willing to let the bill pass this morning and be done with it?

Mr. HAWLEY. If it is really necessary I should dislike to object for this reason: Mr. Travis is wholly unknown to me, and it would not be right to say an unkind thing of him; it is my misfortune, perhaps, that I do not know of him. I, however, do happen to know the names of some great American painters—that is, I know their reputations; I know very little of them personally, I am sorry to say. If it was Mr. Huntington's picture I should be willing to give a good deal—$2,500 or $5,000. There are some marvelous paintings by the head of the American Academy, a man of established standing, and I have no idea that he would ever think of getting $15,000 for any painting of his, or $10,000, or more than $5,000. Fifteeen thousand dollars will more than command, if I am not greatly mistaken, the highest art in Europe.

This is simply a portrait of Lincoln taken in his lifetime by, to us, an unknown artist; and we are captivated, of course, by anything that an unknown artist; and we are captivated, of course, by anything that mentions the name of Lincoln, and people will be for centuries to come; but I am obliged to say, not trifling with the subject, that we are acting somewhat as if it was a portrait by Lincoln. I would not care then to talk about price. I have not seen this portrait, nor has the reputation of it spread all over the United States like the reputation of the famous engraving by Marshall. If it is necessary, in order to have a chance to look at this, to object, please enter me as objecting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will resume its place on the Calendar the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture, and agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr.

CHANDLER on the 25th of January:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay or allowances due such officers, known as the longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowance of such claims; and also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, contained in Executive Document No. 91, received on January 28, 1889, transmitting to the Senate statements made by the Fourth Auditor and the Second Comptroller on the subject of the receiving-ship claims.

An examination of these replies shows that the Fourth Auditor and the Second Comptroller are of the opinion that no lists of claims have been given out from their offices, and that no access to any such lists pre-pared in their offices has been allowed to any claimants or counsel for claimants. The exact statement of the Fourth Auditor concerning the preparation of lists is as follows:

No such lists have been prepared. But immediately after the decision of the Supreme Court allowing sea pay to officers serving on receiving-ships a very large number of claims of this character was filed. In order to settle these cases it was necessary to examine the roll of the receiving-ship on which the officer served. I instructed the clerks whose business it was to trace these rolls to take a memorandum of all the officers on said roll. This was done for the purpose of saving time and labor in going over the roll in each individual case.

And the Auditor then proceeds to say that after careful investigation he is satisfied that no access has been allowed to any lists by attorneys or claim agents.

Nevertheless, I hope the Committee on Appropriations will be instructed to make the inquiry proposed, for I believe from information which has come to me that access has been obtained to these lists and that the proceedings of some of the attorneys and claim agents have been based upon information derived from the office of the Fourth Auditor; and I can conceive of no injury that will be done by proceeding with the inquiry.

The resolution instructs the committee to report "whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowances of such claims." I have indicated in an amendment which I have proposed, and which has gone to the Committee on Appropriations, to be made to the general deficiency appropriation bill, my own idea of a remedy which ought to be applied to correct what I believe to be a very serious public evil. My remedy is to provide as follows:

The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to suits brought by officers of the Army and Navy for arrears of pay, of milage, of traveling expenses, or of personal allowances of any kind. This prohibition shall extend to all suits now pending.

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department shall not, without express authority of law hereafter enacted, settle or allow any claim of any officer of the Army or Navy for arrears of pay, mileage, traveling expenses, or personal allowances of any kind where such claim covers any period of time more than three years before the presentation of such claim. This prohibition shall extend to all claims now pending.

In justification of the action which I propose I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the deficiency appropriation act of October 19, 1888, under the head of "Claims allowed by the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller, for pay of the Navy prior to July 1, 1885," there was appropriated the sum of $154,594.03; also by the same act, under the head of "Navy Department claims allowed by the Fourth act, under the head of "Navy Department claims allowed by the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller, for pay of Navy prior to July 1, 1886," the sum of $369,463.64. I find in one of the documents printed for the use of the Senate a list of these two classes of claims, and upon referring to the items that make up the sum of $154,594.03 I find such allowances to naval officers for arrears as $7,296.43 to one officer to cover the period from 1860 to 1885; that is, twenty-five years; an allowance to another officer of $2,266.05 from 1870 to 1885, covering a period of fifteen years. of fifteen years.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask if he is now reading from the estimates of the present year or the estimates for bills that have already passed? Mr. CHANDLER. I am now reading from the list of claims which have already been paid, the amounts contained in the deficiency appropriation bill of last year.

Here is the amount of $7,068.36 to cover the service of a naval officer from 1860 to 1867. I find the sum of $6,073.30 allowed an officer to cover the period from 1861 to 1881; the sum of $9,346.56 to cover the period from 1861 to 1881; the sum of $9,458.86 to cover the period from 1861 to 1881; the sum of $10,466.72 to cover the period from 1860 to 1885, twenty-five years.

Mr. HALE. Is that a single case?

Mr. CHANDLER. This last is an allowance to the heirs of a deceased officer. I will in this case give the name, "John Thornley, deceased, heirs of, 1860 to 1885, $10,466.72." All these sums are among the items which make up the amount of $154,594.03.

Turning now to the larger sum for pay of the Navy prior to July 1, 1886, $369, 463.64, I find similar extraordinary payments in a long list; for instance, $7,788.37 allowed to a naval officer now living for the period from 1861 to 1881. I will read a few of the larger sums: $8,209.76 to cover the period from 1870 to 1885; $8,969.20 to cover the period from 1862 to 1880. These are all allowances for "pay of the Navy prior to July 1, 1886." I will make some statements shortly showing why the allowances are made. Here is another item: $6,991.50 to a chief engineer of the Navy from 1861 to 1881.

Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. This resolution has been laid over for two or three days in order to afford an opportunity for the examination of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for which the balances of appropriation are exhausted, aggregating $1,200,559.05. A large portion of the allowed claims making up this sum are Army claims, concerning which at this time I say nothing because I am not so well informed about them as I am in reference to the Navy claims.

There are included in this sum of $1,200,559.05, naval claims, to which I shall call the attention of the Senate, amounting to $282,790.41, and in this list of naval claims there are several of these same enormous amounts which I have been noting, a few which I will recite and which yet remain to be paid: $3,809.56 to cover period from 1867 to 1886; $4,493.36 allowed a naval officer during the period from 1870 to 1886; $3,117.33 to cover the period from 1859 to 1878; $3,145.36 to cover the period from 1864 to 1884, and so on until the sum of $282,790.41 is reached.

Mr. President, all these claims which I have described, although they have been paid or are being presented for payment according to the form of law, are in my judgment destitute of real merit. It is my opinion that the naval officers in whose favor they have been allowed have no equitable right to these sums of money.

The classes of cases to which I am inviting the attention of the Senate are three in number:

First. There are what are known as the claims for longevity pay according to the decisions in the cases of Mullan, Rockwell, Baker, and Cook, and the approximate amount expended, including judgments in the Court of Claims, is $500,000.

Secondly. There are what are known as the mileage claims for the differences between actual traveling expenses of officers and mileage allowed under the decision in the cases of Temple and Graham, the approximate amount already expended being $385,000.

Thirdly. There are those cases especially referred to in this resolution of instructions to the Committee on Appropriations, which are for the difference between shore and sea pay on training and receiving ships, under the decisions in the cases of Symonds and Strong, the approximate amount of which to date is $500,000. In the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, from which I have just read, the letter of the Auditor of January 24, 1889, states as follows:

The total amount of all receiving-ship cases allowed since the decision of Supreme Court in the Strong case is about $450,000 up to date.

The resolution of the Senate made inquiry concerning "the total amount of such claims now pending." The answer of the Auditor is:

There are about four hundred and forty-one claims pending, but it is impossible to state what amount will be required to pay them until each claim has been settled.

All these claims have grown up in this way: Some one has discovered, either some naval officer or some attorney for some naval officer, that under some construction which may possibly be given to the various statutes allowing pay to naval officers, those officers in the past have not received all the pay or allowances to which they have been legally entitled, and the first step has generally been to have a suit brought in the Court of Claims by an officer for a small amount of money. case has gone into the court and has been defended by an Assistant Attorney-General, and a finding of facts and a decision of law have been made by the Court of Claims

There has then ordinarily been an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and inasmuch as the Supreme Court has been bound by the findings of the Court of Claims upon questions of fact, the judgments of the Court of Claims have usually been affirmed by the Supreme Court, and the small judgment in the particular case has been

Thereupon the accounting officers of the Treasury have commenced the allowance to all naval officers or to the heirs of such officers of the sums to which they would have been entitled if the rule of allowance established by this decision of the court had been in force during the whole period of their service in the Navy; and the great wrong which has grown up in such cases has been that there has been no statute of limitation applied by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. They have gone back, as I have already shown, in cases of this sort twenty years, and in some cases forty years.

Advertisements have been inserted in the newspapers by claim agents, calling upon the heirs of naval officers who died forty years ago to come forward and learn something which will be to their advantage; and their claims have been presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, they have been allowed by these are allowed by these mry Department; they have been allowed by them, and they have come as settled and allowed claims to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which, I am sorry to say, has inserted items for the payment of such claims in many cases where I think payments should not have been made.

Sometimes in this kind of quest it has been necessary in order to successfully found the claim against the United States to procure new legislation by Congress, and I wish to bring before the Senate, in reference to the longevity claims especially, certain legislation which took place in February, 1883, and as I see the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] kindly listening to me, I desire to ask his attention to the clauses which were inserted in the naval appropriation bill under which these longevity claims have grown up.

The account of the debate is to be found in volume 14 of the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 3091 and 3092. There had been inserted in the naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882, the following clause:

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer army or navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy: Provided, That nothing in this clause shall be so construed as to authorize any change in the dates of commission or in the relative rank of such officers.

When the next subsequent naval appropriation bill, which became a law March 3, 1883, was before the Senate, there finally found its way into that act the above clause with amendments and additions, the whole of which I will read:

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer army or navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since his last entering the service: Provided, That nothing in this clause shall be so construed as to authorize any change in the dates of commission or in the relative rank of such officers: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give any additional pay to any such officer during the time of his service in the volunteer army or navy.

I will not take the time of the Senate to go much at large into this debate; but the point was that a suspicion was entertained by the mem-bers of the Committee on Appropriations that there might be a claim founded upon this second clause, if it should become a law, for arrears of pay, and that point was distinctly announced in the debate, and assurances were given that under no circumstances could there be founded upon the clause any claim for arrears of pay.

The clause has been forwarded to the Navy Department for the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, and a letter was written, dated "Navy Department, Washington, December 10, 1883," to the Senator from Maine now in his seat [Mr. Hale], signed by myself, and which I will ask leave, without reading it, to put in the RECORD:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., December 10, 1883.

SIR: In response to your request, I have to state that the words in lines 121 and 122 of the naval appropriation bill as reported February 19, 1883, "in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service," which the Senate committee propose to strike out, were undoubtedly intended to lay the foundation for claims that an officer who at some previous time had served in a grade below the lowest grade in which he served upon last entering the service shall receive additional back pay for the whole period of such previous service at the same rate as if his service had been continuous in the superior grade.

such previous service at the same rate as if his service had been continuous in the superior grade.

It will also be noticed that by the prior clause an officer of the Navy is to be credited as an officer with the actual time which he may have previously served as an enlisted man. Therefore the effect of the clause which the committee propose to strike out would, if kept in, give him additional back pay for all the time of his service as an enlisted man equal to the pay which he received when first an officer.

Last year this clause about crediting officers with all their actual time of service was first placed in the bill without the proviso that it should not authorize any change in dates of commission or in rank of officers. The proviso was added during the pendency of the bill, and the clause and proviso became a part of the law of August 5, 1882, and are to-day in force. There is no occasion for now re-enacting them, except to make a cover for the insertion of the words which the committee propose to strike out, and to invite unjust claims against the Treasury.

which the committee propose to the the Treasury.

Unless this result is desired those words should be stricken out, as proposed; or, what is better, the whole clause, beginning on line 115 with the words "and all officers of the Navy," etc., should be stricken out.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,

WM. E. CHANDLER, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. Eugene Hale, Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The Senator was then Secretary of the Navy

Mr. CHANDLER. I was Secretary of the Navy. The objection of the letter was that in the opinion of the Navy Department the clause would give back pay to officers and men who might come within the purview of the clause. The letter was read in the debate, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees] disclaimed such a purpose in the following language:

Mr. Voorhees. Now, Mr. President, I had not the remotest thought or idea or purpose of legislating to accomplish what the Secretary seems to think is to be accomplished by this clause.

Mr. Hale. I know the Senator had not.

Mr. Voorhees. I never thought of such a thing.

Then the Senator from Indiana proceeded to explain that the object of this clause was to give credit in reference to the future longevity pay; but the Senator repeated that there was no thought, so far as he knew, on the part of any one, that back pay would result from the adoption of this clause. The Senator from Indiana said:

The Senator from Maine is so well versed in naval affairs that it is not worth while to explain to him the value of this credit as to time. It puts a man forward as if he had served longer in his present place. It is a credit as to time, not a credit as to money. It amounts to something to him on his pay as he goes along, but not as back pay.

This disclaimer was reiterated several times in the debate. The Senator from Michigan, Mr. Conger, made inquiry:

Mr. Conger. It does not pay them anything?
Mr. Voorhers. Not at all. The Senator is right.
Mr. Conger. The object of the amendment is to allow men to have the benefit of their services, although there was an interval between their service in the volunteer force and the time when they came to the regular Navy? They are to be credited with actual service in making up what you call longevity pay? Mr. VOORHEES. That is it. The Senator understands it. Mr. CONGER. It is an increase of pay allowed for length of service? Mr. VOORHEES. That is as I understand it. Mr. CONGER. It does not give any back pay for anything? Mr. VOORHEES. Not at all. It gives a man credit for the time he served his country, so that in going from one grade to another now in the service he has the credit for the time he served his country in the volunteer force. It closes a the credit for the time he served his country in the volunteer force. It closes a little gap.

Mr. Conger. It credits it so as to bring him to that time when he has the benefit of fifteen or twenty years' service?

Mr. HALE. That is it.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is my object.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], in order to cover this point and make it absolutely certain that under no circumstances could back pay be derived from this act, moved to add an amendment, which was adopted, in the following language:

Or to give any officer in the regular Navy any additional pay or amount of money for the time when he served in the volunteer army or navy.

"So that it shall not be retroactive" the Senator from Maine said: Mr. VOORHEES. Nobody wants that at all.

There was some division of opinion upon this subject, and the clause was considered by the conference committee and reported from that committee as appears in this same volume, volume 14, part 4, page 3573, where the language was finally agreed upon which found its way into the act. The amendment as proposed by the Senator from Maine, which had been adopted by the Senate, was as follows:

Or to give to any officer of the regular Navy any additional pay or amount of money for the time when he served in the volunteer army or navy.

The clause as it was adopted by the committee of conference and went into the act read as follows:

And provided further. That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give any additional pay to any such officer during the time of his service in the volunteer army or navy.

I am not now prepared to say whether any result which has followed has come from this change of language; but at all events this was the clause on account of the passage of which there has been paid from the Treasury of the United States I think three or four hundred thousand dollars already, while I have been unable to ascertain how many more claims there are or what will be their amount which are likely to be presented hereafter.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator whether he has been able to form any estimate of what will be the future drafts upon the Treasury by reason of this provision? Mr. CHANDLER. I have not been able to form any idea on the subject. I have not been able to learn that the Committee on Appropriations, when, notwithstanding the express disclaimers in the debate, they were led to put some of these payments into the appropriation bill, formed any idea as to the extent to which they would be obliged to go.

Mr. President, this is all I desire to say in reference to these longevity claims.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to say simply this-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CHANDLER. I would rather finish my remarks, unless the Senator wishes to make a very brief statement.

Mr. VOORHEES. All I want to say is that the statements read from the RECORD made by me in 1883 I recall very distinctly, and they contain my opinion at that time. But the Supreme Court has decided differently, construed the law differently, and it is not the first time that I have had my legal opinion overruled by the highest tribunals of the country. That is all I can say on that subject. I very sincerely believed that the law bore the constrution I put upon it, or I should not have stated it so positively. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have given the history of what are known as the longevity claims. Without undertaking to criticise the circumthe longevity claims. Without undertaking to criticise the circumstances under which the clause which gave rise to these claims was originally placed in the act, although it was placed there against my earnest protest and my assertion of my belief that it would result in taking large sums of money from the Treasury, I do feel at liberty to make this distinct point, that these claims having been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury going back to the beginning of time, the Committee on Appropriations do not seem to have understood that it was their privilege and duty to apply to such claims the statute of limitations.

It does seem to me that when they found that this clause, contrary to the understanding of the Senator from Indiana, contrary to their own un-derstanding, and contrary to so many assurances, had been so construed by the courts as to give large sums of back pay to officers, they might have applied the statute of limitations, which would have been most justly applied, because, as I have said, these claims are destitute of any real equity whatever.

Now I come to the mileage cases, which have already amounted to half a million dollars, and of which there is no end—the arrears of mileage. The facts are simply these: Under the construction of the Navy Department put upon the statutes of Congress, the Department held that mileage, 10 cents or whatever the amount was per mile, could not be allowed to naval officers traveling abroad on foreign waters—traveling on the ocean—but that mileage allowances were to be confined to traveling on land within the limits of the United States. Many naval officers traveled abroad and on the ocean, and they received under this decision of the Department in every case their actual traveling expenses. Every dollar which they paid out for their traveling expenses was refunded to them. Yet after a decision of the Supreme Court that by a strict construction of the law they were entitled to mileage, these allowances for mileage are being made, going back forty years or more, and giving these naval officers so much bonus, to which, as I say, and say deliberately, they are not in equity entitled upon any principle whatever. Those are the mileage claims.

Next are the receiving-ship claims. A few years ago some naval officer or some claim agent conceived that naval officers serving on receiving-ships were entitled to sea pay. Prior to the setting up of this claim the Secretary of the Navy had supposed that he had a right to determine what ships were in commission for sea service, and he had declined to put receiving-ships in commission for sea service for the very simple reason that the receiving-ships never go to sea. They are simply unseaworthy vessels of the Navy which lie at the docks in the navy-yards where enlisted men of the Navy are received and kept until they are needed for service upon sea-going vessels.

Inasmuch as these officers were living on the receiving-ships with their families, at home to all intents and purposes, it was not thought by the Navy Department that they were at sea within the meaning of the statutes of the United States which allow increased pay to officers who are on sea duty over the allowances to officers who are on shore duty.

But this question was taken to the Court of Claims on a suit brought by some officer for a small sum of money. The facts were put in in some sort of shape; the case was decided by the Court of Claims, and it came to the conclusion that an officer on a receiving-ship, never moving and incapable of moving from the navy-yard wharf, was at sea within the meaning of the statute; and therefore it gave judgment in favor of the officer for the small sum demanded by him. An appeal was taken from the decision of the Court of Claims, and it went up to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court made its decision, bound down of course by the facts as they appeared in the record sent up from the Court of Claims; and the Supreme Court, in these receiving-ship claims, and also in a similar claim for sea pay for service on the training-ships, sustained the decision of the Court of Claims. These decisions in the receiving-ship cases are The United States vs. Symonds, 120 United States Reports, page 46, January 10, 1887; The United States vs. Bishop, 120 United States Reports, page 51; and The United States vs. Strong, 125 United States Reports, page 656, decided April 16, 1888.

These claims having been thus fastened by the decisions of the Supreme Court, there immediately began a raid upon the Treasury for arrears of pay to officers who at any time during the preceding half century had been serving upon receiving ships, and the Committee on Appropriations will be confronted with a large number of these claims, amounting I do not know to what sum of money, but the statement is made by the Auditor in the letter which I have read that $450,000 have been allowed up to date and that there are 441 claims pending, and the Committee on Appropriations will be called upon to determine whether they will allow this kind of claim to be presented in this way, thus worked up through decisions of the courts, and then will pay the amounts found due without setting up any statute of limitations what-

Mr. President, I believe that the attorneys who are presenting these claims are able to obtain the data upon which to base them from information derived in some way from the Fourth Auditor's Office. I know that attorneys are advertising over this country for the heirs of naval officers who died ten, twenty, thirty years ago to come forward and make contracts with them for the recovery of the pay to which those officers would be entitled according to these recent decisionspay while serving at the dock in a navy-yard on board a receiving-ship.

I have in my hand a long advertisement containing the names, I think, of a thousand officers. I will not give the names of the attorneys, as I should not care to thus bring them to the public notice without their consent, but the advertisement in the Boston Herald of December 12, 1888, is headed as follows:

The following officers of the United States Navy (or their heirs) will learn something to their advantage by addressing the undersigned.

And I find in this list the names of officers as follows:

Lieut. John Q. Adams, died 1854; Lieut. L. B. Avery, left service 1855; Surg. S. R. Addison, died 1860; and so on.

There are officers named whose deaths, it appears, took place in 1856, There are omcers named whose deaths, it appears, took place in 1856, 1857, and 1859. Here is a clause calling upon the heirs of Surg. Elisha K. Kane to come forward, who died in 1857—the Arctic explorer—and Surg. J. Vanghn Smith, who died in 1848. It is my belief that claims thus worked up are being rushed into the Fourth Auditor's Office in great numbers, and that the Congress of the United States is to be confronted with a million dollars of such demands.

Mr. President it has severed to me that it was that it was the formal to myself, have

Mr. President, it has seemed to me that it was due to myself, having fought this class of claims always, that I should bring the facts I have narrated to the attention of the Senate, that I should ask that they might be investigated by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and that I should urge that in some way the Government should be protected from this kind of foray upon its Treasury in behalf of claims which, although they may by this style of prosecution be brought within the forms of law, have no real, substantial, equitable merit of any kind.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has in some degree reflected upon the Committee on Appropriations does not in any way prevent me from thanking him for having brought this important subject to the attention of the Senate. In what he is doing and in what he has said he has contributed invalnable aid to the Committee on Appropriations in the work in which it has been engaged for years of resisting the flood of claims which are poured in upon it through the auditing offices of the Treasury Department.

I do not think I am overstating in any way the action of that committee when I say that it has steadily resisted this flood of claims and has endeavored to see that proper scrutiny should be given to all of them when presented to the committee. But the Senator from New Hampshire will bear in mind, as other Senators will, that it is literally impossible for the Committee on Appropriations in considering the provisions of appropriation bills, thousands upon thousands in number as those provisions are, to investigate the facts in each personal case. Committee on Appropriations in making up these large appropriation bills, notably the deficiency appropriation bill upon which such items as have been referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire are always placed, finds itself in this condition, that the general law which has been enacted by Congress and become the settled rule fixes the duties and powers of the auditing and controlling officers, and the committee has felt itself constrained heretofore, when through the Secretary of the Treasury there have been presented lists of claims which are certified to have been duly examined and reported as due according to law and sent in by the Secretary of the Treasury with the request that an appropriation be made therefor, to receive those claims and embody them in the appropriation bills.

I do not say that in every case heretofore the Committee on Appropriations has been entirely free from blame in not having followed up the significant and pertinent and in this case vital question whether or not the Treasury Department, through its head and through its auditing officers, had literally complied with the law as laid down in the Revised Statutes and in other statutes that have been imposed thereon; and the notice that has been served by the Senator from New Hampshire and the facts he has adduced here to-day will be valuable to the Committee on Appropriations in putting its members upon notice that when these estimates come from the Secretary of the Treasury certified to as having been examined and reported under the general law, the committee will inquire first, and without perhaps being obliged to go into the circumstances and details of each case will see to it that the Treasury Department, through its auditing officers, has observed the general law.

In that regard the Committee on Appropriations, I may say—and I feel constrained to say this because I have had the honor of reporting and conducting all the deficiency appropriation bills here for several years past—returns thanks to the Senator from New Hampshire for having called its attention to these things.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. HALE. Certainly.
Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether the Committee on Appropriations has ever undertaken to enforce any statute of limitations on these

Mr. HALE. That is a point I am coming to.

The Committee on Appropriations for years has felt impatient at this condition of things. As the Senator from New Hampshire has said, a condition of things. As the Senator from New Hampshire has said, a clause in some cases without notice, escaping attention, will become embodied in the provisions of an appropriation bill, put on in the House of Representatives, put on by an amendment moved in the Senate, that for the time being discloses no danger. The human mind is fallible; human attention is not always at its best; human scrutiny can not always be invoked at a moment's notice, and amendments to appropriation bills steal upon them in the other House and in this body and mass and no one person can be blamed but it is discovered by the Compass and no one person can be blamed, but it is discovered by the Compass and no one person can be blamed, but it is discovered by the Committee on Appropriations soon afterwards, and too late to remedy unless some provision is made that shall apply strict limitations to these cases—the Committee on Appropriations discovers that in the mind of somebody the clause that was put on in that way, apparently so simple and harmless, carries with it the seeds of future claims upon the Government, resulting in decisions of the courts that take hundreds of thousands of dellars from the Transmy. But the committee has felt thousands of dollars from the Treasury. But the committee has felt that in such cases where the courts had construed these provisions the responsibility was largely taken from its hands.

In the case that has been referred to and described somewhat at length in regard to the longevity pay of naval officers, the provision placed upon the appropriation bill of 1882, I have a distinct recollection when it was proposed to add the provision, which in itself was proper and correct, that naval officers who had served in the volunteer navy should have the credit in the longevity consideration of their grade of the service that they had rendered in the volunteer navy the same as if it had been in the regular Navy, it appealed to the sense of justice of every Senator. It did to mine. It was proper. If a gallant officer of the Navy found four years of his service in actual war in the volunteer navy, he had been subjected to peril and to privation and hardship as much as if those four years had been in the regular Navy, and he was entitled in making up his longevity record to the credit of that service.

But when it was proposed to add that provision it excited the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, and my attention was especially called to it, and I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Navy. the place then held by the Senator from New Hampshire, and so well held, as we all know, asking him for his view, and the letter he has read was the reply to my request for the opinion of the Department. He stated clearly in that letter that the clause as proposed would not only give the officer the credit of his service, but would give back pay; and then the Committee on Appropriations, acting through me as its organ in charge of the bill, proposed the amendments that have been read by the Senator from New Hampshire; these two: First—

That nothing in this clause shall be so construed as to authorize any change in the dates of commission or in the relative rank of such officers.

And additionally:

I find on examination that so great was my own care in that matter and the desire to shut out back pay, that after receiving the letter from the Secretary of the Navy that the Senator has read, I consulted him as to what provision would be necessary in order to cut off this back pay, and the provision that was proposed by me was a provision drawn by him as effectually protecting the Department and the Treasury from any raid that might be afterwards made upon it by reason of that provision, and that provision, with the single exception of the word "during" which was substituted for the word "for"—and I do not think that changed the construction of it at all—was embodied in the bill.

When it was discussed here the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voor-HEES], who was the foremost advocate of the claim, declared in terms that there was no intention to come upon the Government for back pay. The clause had been drawn by the Secretary of the Navy and myself for the purpose of shutting off that, and when that bill passed and became a law I felt as certain that we had done two things as that I live here. The first was that we had given to these gallant men the record of their service in the volunteer navy; and, second, that we had also shut off any claim of theirs for back pay; and so content, the Committee on Appropriations allowed the bill to pass.

Now, the Senator from Indiana says that he remembers distinctly his repudiation, and that he had no idea that that clause, so scrutinized and so carefully drawn, would be the foundation of this raid upon the Treasury, and I have no doubt the Senator speaks frankly and correctly as to his recollection and as to his attitude upon the matter. But there was somebody behind that clause, there was somebody behind the intense interest and earnestness that were displayed at the time why the clause should be added, who knew what was in it afterwards or who had reason to believe what would be construed from it; there was some cunning lawyer, some claim agent here in Washington with more time to devote to this subject than either the Secretary of the Navy or I or the Committee on Appropriations or the Senate, who knew that out of that would be evolved such a construction that the whole object and aim of Congress would be crossed and thwarted and destroyed. And so it followed when a single case was taken up to the Court of Claims it passed in favor of the claimant, went to the United States Supreme Court, and was there passed upon and became the foundation for all these claims.

I do not take to myself or to the Committee on Appropriations any reproach as to its course in that matter. It framed in a bill, at the suggestion of the then Secretary of the Navy, now the Senator from New Hampshire, a clause that apparently cut off everything in the nature of back pay; we believed that it would; it did not; and the court decided rather in favor of the claimant; and so this has gone.

I am not here going into discussion of the other amendments to an

I am not here going into discussion of the other amendments to appropriation bills under which decisions have been rendered out of which there is this constant demand and claim upon the United States Treasury that Congress never intended should be enforced. I only say it is high time that they were stopped. I only say that in the work that the Senator from New Hampshire has blocked out for the Committee on Appropriations he has my cordial co-operation, and again I say that the committee thanks him for having called attention to these subjects.

The committee dealt at one time with a class of cases like this, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who was associated with me upon the bill, will remember, upon what were called the old Spalding claims upon the Treasury through the Post-Office Department, where, under a forced construction, the whole compensation of postmasters for years back, who were content with what they had received, and who only became claimants when they were urged thereto by claim agents in Washington, was sought to be reopened. The whole process and system of allowance of postmasters' pay was revolutionized and old claims brought in against the Treasury Department and allowed; and the committee found itself confronted with a condition that was endless, where from year to year it would be called upon to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars to different claimants throughout the United States, 25 per cent. of which the committee found invariably went into the hands of one single man, who boasted in his advertisement that he had procured from Congress what was called the Spalding act. The committee took that subject by the throat, and with the valuable assistance—and I am glad to bear testimony to the valuable assistance that that officer rendered at that time—of the then Postmaster-General, now the Secretary of the Interior, the committee framed a provision by which it enacted a specific limitation and declared that every claim that was not presented within a certain time after the date of the passage of the act containing the provision should be shut off entirely, and that no classification or correction of the pay of old postmasters should be made other than what had been settled by the Department, aside from the Spalding act.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator right there

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator right there whether the committee allowed claims extending back over six years.
Mr. HALE. Some of those claims ran back not as far as these the Senator has called attention to, but some of them ran back eight and ten and twelve years.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator right here—

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me at present. I am coming to what the Senator refers to in the statute. I have it here before me

The committee put that provision on an appropriation bill, and the Senate and Congress gladly adopted it; and so intense was the feeling of the claim agent, so bitter at the result, that he set himself in the way, in the path of Congress, and brought suit against the Postmaster-General for his course under the direction of Congress, endeavoring in that way to obstruct the policy that had been laid out by Congress, which the Postmaster-General after that strictly followed. I am glad to say that the agent did not succeed. Now I come to what is—to say that the agent did not succeed. Now I come to what is—

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator will permit me to interject here that that matter has not been permitted to rest where we placed it by law and where the Supreme Court of the United States placed it. If I am not mistaken there have been at this session of Congress, at this Congress certainly, two or three different resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives, at the instance of some claim agents, in regard to the salaries of these postmasters, and each one of them has been reported adversely. One of these resolutions was introduced in this body on the 16th day of August last, and after some delay was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and reported adversely on the 17th day of December, 1888, with a long report setting out all the facts. And in the face of that report another resolution has been introduced here calling upon the Postmaster-General for certain statistics referring to the same matter, intending, when the statistics come in, to base a claim upon them and ask new legislation, and that resolution is now before the Committee on Post-Offices and PostRoads.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Missouri is correct. Men may come and men may go, but the Washington claim agent lives on forever. Beaten, baffled, overthrown, exposed, he still comes up smiling with a little innocent resolution that some Senator, knowing nothing about its purpose or end, when requested, introduces, properly enough, as he says "by request," and if nobody's attention is called to it nobody can tell what will be the result. In the case of Spalding, after the exposure and overthrow of his claim, even then he had got $1,089,000 out of the Treasury, of which he pocketed 25 per cent.; and not content with that he is at the door of Congress to-day and every session beating his feet there for the purpose of opening the door again.

Now I come to what is a remedy and what ought to be enforced, what

Now I come to what is a remedy and what ought to be enforced, what the Committee on Appropriations ought to enforce, and that is a statute of limitation. There is already upon the statute-book a provision which, if enforced and regarded, would dispose of nine-tenths of these claims. There is no general statute of limitations applicable to all claims against the United States. In all other respects, between citizens, between corporations, between citizens and corporations, between States, there is a statute of limitations based upon the theory that there should be repose, not that a claim is outlawed, but that there should be repose and rest for old claims. There is, however, no general statute of that kind applying to all claims against the United States. There are specific statutes when courts are created, when a tribunal is set up, when an act is passed, but no general statute. In the law creating the Court of Claims there is this provision, which is found in section 1069 of the Revised Statutes:

Every claim against the United States, cognizable by the Court of Claims, shall be forever barred unless the petition setting forth a statement thereof is filed in the court, or transmitted to it by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives as provided by law, within six years after the claim first accrues.

The Court of Claims can not consider and pass upon a claim against the United States unless it comes within that six years' provision, and the Court of Claims has in no case that I know in the instances furnished by the Senator from New Hampshire gone beyond this and has only decided cases within the six years and rendered judgments for the amount, and the Supreme Court has certified and approved those judgments. The auditing officers of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting estimates and asking for appropriations, had no more right to ransack the archives of the Department to bring up old cases that are beyond the six years' time provided for the Court of Claims than they had to go outside and bring in claims against other governments. That ought to have been the strict rule in the Treasury Department. When claim agents come in and ask that the Department hunt up old claims under the longevity acts or the mileage acts or the receiving-ship acts, the Secretary of the Treasury and his subordinates should have said, "Whatever there is here that would be a claim for six years that the Court of Claims can consider can be presented to Congress for its discretion in passing upon it."

And here, Mr. President, I am free to say that the scrutiny of the Committee on Appropriations in the future will be closer and sharper and keener than it has been heretofore to see to it that the officers in the Treasury Department do not submit, or if they do that they shall be cut off, all claims beyond the time when the Court of Claims might consider them. That is the farthest it will go. But I will go farther. I would in all this class of cases, which are not in themselves meritorious, apply a specific statute; and I hope when the next deficiency appropriation bill is reported to the Senate we shall put upon it a provision that in all such cases as these there shall be a limitation of three years or two years or whatever the committee and the Senate may agree upon, because there is no merit in these claims.

The cases that have been cited by the Senator from New Hampshire go to destroy the equalization of the pay of the Navy. There is no reason why one officer who has served on his regular pay in the years past on his service as dictated to him by the orders of the Department and has received that pay and been content with it, should find that another man under a technical decision gets $10,000 that he does not get. That is a hardship to the Navy, and every one of these claims that has been paid to the parties who have presented them to the Treasury and that the Committee on Appropriations has permitted to go through, has inflicted a hardship upon the other officers who have rendered like service and who do not come within the decision; and it is time this thing should be stopped. And I say in closing that I join heartily with the Senator from New Hampshire in the work to which he has set his hand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3401 in relation to the Pacific railroads.

ished business, being Senate bill 3401 in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the doors of the Senate be closed and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent to present a paper for publication. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I hope the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire may be passed before we go into executive session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to allow

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to allow the vote to be taken on the resolution I offered, if no one desires to debate it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the resolution which was pending at the time the morning hour expired may now be acted upon. Is there objection?

Mr. PUGH. I was unable to hear a good deal that was said by the Senator from New Hampshire at the beginning of his remarks, and I prefer that the resolution go over until to-morrow morning. I have not the slightest objection to an investigation, but I desire to see if anything was said in reference to the Fourth Auditor that requires any reply. I prefer that the vote on the resolution be taken to-morrow in the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution, then, will lie over until to-morrow, when by unanimous consent it will be subject to consideration in the morning hour.

AFFAIRS IN SAMOA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a letter from the Secretary of State addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, inclosing a copy of a formal concession made by the Government of Samoa in pursuance of the treaty existing between the United States and Samoa to what is called the Bay of Pago Pago, and also the adjoining shores, so much as may be necessary. I ask that it may be printed so that we may have the benefit of it in debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document presented by the Senator from Ohio will be received and printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, if there be no objection.

This extension shall not be held to determine the character of the land nor to affect any contest now pending, or which may be hereafter initiated, or as in any wise affecting any right or claim adverse to the claim or entry of said Harriet Young, nor to affect the character of proof required by existing law, except as to the time of making improvements required by law and final proof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. Who makes this request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Dakota [Mr. GIFFORD], who states that a bill precisely similar in terms has been reported from the House committee.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House bill similar in terms to this will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. The bill reported from the House committee on this subject was, I believe, reported with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill just passed was a Senate bill.

Mr. McRAE. I think the House committee reported amendments. This bill had better remain on the Speaker's table until it can be ex-

The SPEAKER. The bill has passed, but a motion to reconsider can be made.

I presume this bill is all right, but to avoid any Mr. HOLMAN. mistake I think it had better lie over for the present.

Mr. McRAE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the matter be reconsidered that it may be examined.

Mr. McRAE. If I can be assured that the amendments of the House committee have been incorporated in this bill, I have no objection to it. I know that the committee agreed to certain amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the motion to reconsider be regarded as pending, and meanwhile the bill can be examined.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider will be entered, and the bill will remain in that position until gentlemen have had an opportunity to examine the matter.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Whiting, of Michigan, for one week, on account of important business

To Mr. Fisher, for one week, on account of important business. To Mr. Pugsley, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a privileged report. I am instructed by the managers on the part of the House upon House bill No. 8191 to make the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. Sigh) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and concur in the same.

W. H. HATCH,
JUSTIN R. WHITING,
E. H. FUNSTON,
Managers on the part of the House,
T. W. PALMER,
H. W. BLAIR,
WILLIAM B. BATE,
Managers on the part of the Senate,

The following statement of the House conferees, submitted in accordance with the rule, was read:

Report in writing to accompany conference report on H. R. 8191, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture."

create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture."

There was but one material amendment involved in the conference, the others being verbal and readily concurred in.

The managers on the part of the House endeavored most zealously to induce the managers on the part of the Senate to recede from the Senate amendment, striking out the fifth section of the bill, transferring the Weather Bureau to the Department of Agriculture.

In this we were unsuccessful, the decisive vote in the Senate on this proposition being interpreted by the managers on the part of the Senate as peremptory instructions which they felt compelled to respect.

The managers on the part of the House then endeavored to bring about an agreement by offering an amendment to the Senate amendment, transferring to the Department of Agriculture the Geological Survey and the Fish Commission.

After earnest and patient examination of this proposition it was disagreed to by the managers on the part of the Senate on the grounds that it would open up discussion of new subjects not embraced in the original bill, cause delay, and perhaps defeat the final passage of the bill this session.

To avoid the strong probability of delay in its proper consideration, and the possibility presented that in the short time remaining the final passage of this important measure might be again defeated, your conferees unanimously agreed to submit the accompanying conference report concurring in the Senate amendments, and respectfully recommend its adoption by the House.

Mr. HATCH. I will not detain the House by any further explana-

Mr. HATCH. I will not detain the House by any further explanation of this report than is embodied in the written statement submitted by the managers on the part of the House. We have endeavored very earnestly for a month to bring about such a conditiin of things as would add to the Department of Agriculture either the Weather Bureau, or, in lieu of that, the Geological Survey and the Fish Commission. Being satisfied that any further conference would involve delay which might result in the defeat of this important measure for this session, the managers on the part of the House have agreed to recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS ON PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report back a resolution that the 11th and 18th days of January, 1889, after the morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bills on the Private Calendar of the House, except pension bills, the consideration of which is already provided for at the Friday evening sessions, together with the following substitute therefor:

Resolved, That when the House shall again proceed under the rules to consider bills on the Private Calendar, Senate bills shall have precedence, in their order, for two legislative days, not to interfere with the order of the House assigning evening sessions for the consideration of pension bills and bills removing political disabilities.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How does this come before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] introduced a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and this is reported back in lieu of the resolution sent to the committee.

Mr. CANNON. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard briefly upon the report of the Committee or Pulse, which as I understand it is many report of the Committee on Rules, which, as I understand it, is manifestly and viciously unfair.

The course pursued by this Congress at its former session permitted members of this House who were present upon the call of the Private Calendar, as their names were reached on the list, to ask the consideration of one bill and have it passed upon in the absence of a certain number of objections. Under that call the House reached, I think, the letter "M" on the roll. Those on the alphabet, therefore, prior to where the roll was suspended, have had their opportunity to call up one bill from this Calendar, a House or Senate bill as they saw fit, and have it passed upon. Common fairness, Mr. Speaker, would require, it seems to me, that before other bills upon that Calendar are considered, this list should be called through, and that those upon the roll further down, and not so fortunate as to have had their names called further down, and not so fortunate as to have had their names called in the lower part, shall each have an opportunity of asking consideration of a bill, thereby preventing the manifest injustice which would be done by permitting two-thirds of the House to have their opportunity to call up one bill and the remainder to be cut off from that privilege by a side movement like this.

This resolution seems to be in the interest of giving those who have already had an opportunity a chance to repeat that opportunity, and excluding those who have had no chance from any opportunity in the future. Therefore I say the proposition seems to me to be a vicious one, which I hope will not be adopted.

Mr. HERMANN. Would the gentleman propose to limit the arrangement he suggests to Senate bills?

Mr. PARKER. I should propose to call the list of names through, as originally agreed upon, so that every man on the roll may have had at least a chance of calling up a bill, before the adoption of any new rule which would interfere with that arrangement.

Mr. HERMANN. And without regard to whether they were Senate

Mr. HERMANN. And without regard to whether they were Senate or House bills so called up?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.
Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is true, as stated by the gentleman from New York, that by unanimous consent we did proceed under an order which permitted gentlemen when their names were called on the roll to ask consideration of one bill on the Private Calendar, which request brought the bill before the House unless a certain number of members objected to its consideration. I attempted earnestly to revive that rule at the beginning of this session of Congress, but I was utterly unable to procure an agreement to proceed in that order, and as we can not, except by unanimous consent, take up bills in that order, the next best thing to be done was to perfect such legislation as had been passed by the Senate by giving precedence to bills upon the Calendar already passed by that body. I recognize the fact that under the order previously made those names on the list which have already been called have some advantage, but it is practically impossible to make any other arrangement, and this plan now suggested is the next best thing that can be done

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman who submits this report a question: Whether under the resolution the Senate bills on the Calendar will have to be called in their regular order, or can the Committee of the Whole, when in session, establish a rule which will allow these bills to be called up in such order as the House may then determine?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, of course, that can be done as in the other case.

Mr. CANNON. There are about three hundred Senate bills on the Calendar, and this will give two days to their consideration. I believe it is pretty generally favored by the members on both sides, and I ask a vote upon it.

The question was taken on the adoption of the report; and on a division there were—ayes 91, noes 23.

Mr. MACDONALD. I make the point that no quorum has voted. Mr. MACDONALD and Mr. CANNON were appointed tellers.

The House proceeded to divide. Before the result was announced,

Mr. MACDONALD. I withdraw the point of no quorum. So (no further count being demanded) the resolution was adopted. Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

Mr. McRAE. Before that I ask leave to withdraw the motion entered a few moments ago to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill No. 3765 was passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that had better stand until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. It can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent, and objection is made.

The report was read.

The question was put on the adoption of the report; the House divided, and there were—ayes 42, noes 31.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER].

Pending the count,

Mr. BUTLER. I will withdraw the report for a time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it in order now to proceed with the business on the Private Calendar under the rule which has just been adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. That resolution has not changed any rule of the House, and relates only to the order that the House shall proceed in under its rules when the House proceeds to the consideration of private business.

Mr. LANHAM. We can still make a motion under the general rule, can we not?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the unfinished business under consideration at the time of adjournment yesterday; and although this is Friday, and set apart by the rules for the consideration of private business, the practice of the House has been long settled. The Chair caused the Digest to be read yesterday, showing that bills coming over from an adjournment with the previous question ordered on other days come up even on Friday morning for consideration.

Mr. LANHAM. If we can get to the consideration of private busi-

Mr. SPRINGER. But you can not get to the consideration of private business unless the House refuses to proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there are only four or five Fridays remaining of this session, I desire to antagonize consideration of this matter in order that we may proceed to the consideration of private business

Mr. SPRINGER. No question of consideration can be raised upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. It can be raised.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rule provided that the vote shall then be

The SPEAKER. But that was on that day. The Chair will state that the situation of the Oklahoma bill is this: The bill, if it comes up this morning, comes up, not because of the special order assigning a day for its consideration, but simply because the previous question has been ordered upon its passage.

On the day set apart for the consideration of the bill under the special order made by the House, after the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had reported the bill back to the House, the question of consideration could not have been made. But on another, subsequent day, the Chair will repeat, if the bill comes up at all, it comes up not by reason of the fact of the special order, but solely by reason of the fact that the previous question was ordered upon it; and the question of consideration can be raised against it.

Mr. LANHAM. Then, I desire to raise the question of consideration, it being my object to proceed with the Senate bills under the rule which has been adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will only take a few minutes to dispose of this matter, and I hope we will go on and finish the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. On that I demand the yeas and nays. Mr. SPRINGER (to Mr. BAKER, of New York). Do not do that. Mr. BAKER, of New York. I withdraw the demand for the yeas

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Division.

The House divided on the question of proceeding to the consideration of the Oklahoma bill; and there were—ayes 103, noes 23.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 135, noes 3.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Then the ayes have it, and the House determines to proceed with the consideration of the Oklahoma bill.

The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. SPRINGER] to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 132, nays 114, not voting 75; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the recapitulation of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

The following-named members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. Wise with Mr. Goff.
Mr. Neal with Mr. Houk.
Mr. Neal with Mr. Houk.
Mr. Mahoney with Mr. Ezra B. Taylor.
Mr. Whiting, of Michigan, with Mr. Pugsley.
Mr. Lawler with Mr. Joseph D. Taylor.
Mr. Cockran with Mr. West.
Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia, with Mr. Buchanan.
Mr. McShane with Mr. Laird.
Mr. Syvder with Mr. Rowen.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. Bowen. Mr. Greenman with Mr. Sherman.

The following were announced as paired for this day:
Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. BURROWS.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. WILBER.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. Stahlnecker with Mr. Dingley.
The following were announced as paired on the Oklahoma bill:
Mr. Stewart, of Texas, with Mr. Wilkinson.
Mr. Compton with Mr. Foran.

Mr. Flood with Mr. Yost. Mr. Glover with Mr. Spooner, Mr. HUTTON with Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. Darlington with Mr. Thompson, of Ohio. If Mr. Darlington were present, he would vote "ay" and Mr. Thompson "no." Mr. Hopkins, of New York, with Mr. Lyman. Mr. Lyman, if present, would vote for the bill, and Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, against it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have voted, but, finding that I am paired, I withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to section 13, to which I think there will be no objection. Mr. SPRINGER. I hope this amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 9, section 13, strike out the word "immediately" and insert the words "within a reasonable time;" so that it will read: "And it is hereby made the duty of the President, within a reasonable time after the passage of this act, to cause the lessees of said land and any other persons illegally occupying the same to be removed from said lands."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

Mr. FINLEY. I object.
Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SPRINGER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOOKER. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn, and pending that I desire to move that the House take a recess partial Monday. until Monday.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for a division.

Mr. HOOKER. I can for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 77.

Mr. HOOKER. No quorum. The Chair did not hear my motion that the House take a recess pending the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion could not be made pending the motion to adjourn. A motion to adjourn has priority over a motion to

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is that the House take a recess until Monday, but the Chair does not know to what hour on

The SPEAKER. That would be an adjournment. That is the motion just put by the Chair.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I move that the House take a recess till 10

Mr. HOOKER, Then I move that the House take a recess thil 10 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order against that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] makes a point of order against this motion under the special order of the House. The opinion of the Chair is that the spirit of that special order was to prevent dilatory motions, but the Chair is not prepared to say that one motion for an adjournment and one motion to take a recess should be construed as a dilatory proceeding.

Mr. HATCH. But, Mr. Speaker, the language of that order under which the House is now proceeding is that the votes specified in the order shall then be taken, and there is no chance for any interpretation of it except to carry out that order that the votes therein specified shall be taken in the order named, and they can not be interrupted by motions to adjourn or motions to take a reces

Mr. STEELE. But we have adjourned three or four times since we began the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. A literal construction of the terms of the special order would prevent the House from adjourning at all until the final vote was taken on the bill, and would also prevent it from taking a recess. Therefore the Chair has not placed upon the order such a strict construction; but the Chair thinks that it is his duty to carry out the spirit and purpose of the order, and whenever it becomes clear that spirit and purpose of the order, and whenever it becomes clear that motions are made for dilatory purposes alone the Chair will interpose.

Mr. HATCH. I do not suppose, Mr. Speaker, that even the gentleman from Mississippi himself [Mr. HOOKER] will assert that his motion is made in good faith. It is made for the purpose of killing this bill.

Mr. STEELE. Regular order.

Mr. HOOKER. The motion made yesterday for an adjournment was entertained and voted upon; and if that motion was in order at that time, this corresponding motion is in order now.

time, this corresponding motion is in order now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that this proceeding has not yet reached the point where the Chair would feel it his duty to declare the motion dilatory in its nature.

The question being taken on the motion for a recess till Monday morning at 10 o'clock, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 7, noes

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to demand the reading of the engrossed bill before it is put upon its

Then I make that demand.

The Chair will see whether the bill has been en-The SPEAKER. grossed or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this demand is insisted upon I shall have to move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes in order that the bill may be engrossed. I hope, however, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] will not delay the consideration of private business to-day by insisting upon the demand.

Mr. PETERS. I make the point of order that this is a dilatory mo-

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that every legislative body has a right to see written out, or at least printed in connected form, attested by the proper officer of the house, the proposition upon which it is called to vote. What constitutes the "engrossment" of a bill in it is called to vote. What constitutes the "engrossment" of a bill in recent times is another question. Originally it was, in contemplation of parliamentary law, a writing out of the bill in a "fair, round hand." Mr. SPRINGER. I inquire of the Chair whether the Clerk now present in the House can not attest this bill as now perfected?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that the amendments which have been agreed to have not been incorporated in the bill, but are simply attached to it on separate pieces of paper. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.
Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes. In that time this bill can be engrossed so as to be ready for the final action of the House. I appeal, however, to the gentleman from Indiana not to delay in this way the business of the Private Calendar, which can be entered upon immediately after this bill has been disposed of and which gentlemen here are anxious to reach. to the gentleman from Indiana not to interfere with private-bill day in this way. [A pause.] If the gentleman insists on the demand, I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that it will be impossible to engross this bill in thirty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House take a recess for one hour; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Is it now in order to move to recommit this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair ruled in the case of the discovered the

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair ruled, in the case of the direct-tax bill, that where the House had made an order similar in its terms to that made in this case, it was not in order to move to recommit the bill, because the effect of that motion, if adopted, would be to prevent the House from voting on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. May not the House refuse to vote on the final passage, and may it not so refuse by adopting a motion to recommit, as well as in any other way?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses to vote, it must refuse in some way in accordance with its rules and orders.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed with other business until 3 o'clock, and that then we vote on this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my motion for a recess and ask that the House remain in session until the Clerk has engrossed this bill, if the gentleman from Indiana insists upon his demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that the House proceed to the consideration of private business until 3 o'clock.

Mr. BLAND. I object.
Mr. CLARDY. I rise to a privileged question, and submit a report from a committee of conference

Mr. CHEADLE. I will withdraw my demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. In the mean time the gentleman from Missouri has presented a conference report, which is a privileged question.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. FELTON. Mr. BIGGS would vote for the bill and Mr. FELTON against it.

Mr. McADOO with Mr. NUTTING, for the rest of the day, and also on the Oklahoma bill.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded the previous question on the adoption of the title to the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the title was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to submit a conference report, The SPEAKER. It will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

A. M. BLISS, R. R. BUTLER, MILTON DE LANO, Managers on the part of the House, PHILETUS SAWYER, C. K. DAVIS, D. TURPIE, Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the statement accompanying the conference report be read.

The SPEAKER. There seems to be no accompanying statement as required by the rules of the House. Is the consideration of the report objected to on that account?

Mr. LANHAM. I object, if there is no accompanying statement.
The SPEAKER. The rules of the House require the managers on the part of the House to submit a statement to accompany the report showing the effect of agreement between the conferees of the two Houses. Mr. LANHAM. I object, and demand the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask by unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to submit be allowed to file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports

Mr. LANHAM. I move to dispense with the morning hour, and ask by unanimous consent to allow members to file their reports with the Clerk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will that include reports on public as well as private case

Mr. BUTLER. I object, and demand the regular order.

MARITIME CANAL OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I submit now a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to antagonize the consideration of this report. Every Friday for the last half-dozen the private business has been defeated by the consideration of matters which could come in on any other day just as well.

Mr. HERMANN. Was an objection made to the request that members having reports to make might file them?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] objected. The gentleman from Texas raises the question of consideration against the report submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows.

Report of committee of conference on the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the entire report demanded before the question of consideration is submitted?

Mr. HÖLMAN. In consequence of the importance of that report, I trust that the gentleman from Missouri will consent to let it go over, and allow it to be printed in the RECORD, to be called up to-morrow

Mr. HERBERT. Not to-morrow morning, because I propose to call up the naval appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, on Monday, then. I hope the Chair will submit the request. The SPEAKER. Pending the question of consideration the gentleman from Indiana asks the gentleman from Missouri to allow this report to be printed in the RECORD, and lie over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. CLARDY. I would have no objection to that but for the fact that the gentleman from Alabama has already given notice that he proposes to call up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have suggested Monday.
Mr. CLARDY. Monday is suspension day, and I have endeavored to avoid antagonizing other measures before the House, but find it impossible to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then say Tuesday.
Mr. SPINOLA. This is a matter of a great deal of importance, and will keep two or three days, especially as it is privileged.
Mr. HOLMAN. It ought to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in case this bill is not acted upon now, when would it come up in its regular order?

The SPEAKER. Being a privileged matter, it can be called up at any time, subject, of course, to the right of the House to determine whether or not it will consider it.

The Chair will submit the question of consideration raised by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division there were-ayes 66.

Before the negative was announced,

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn. This is a very important matter, and the gentleman has been appealed to to allow it to go over and be printed.

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. COX. I think we can obviate the position by a remark, if the Chair will permit me.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPINOLA. This is such an important matter that the report ought to be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the vote on the divisionayes 66, noes 39.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum; and now I renew my request that this be printed in the RECORD, and lie over.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw the report for the present and bring it up to-morrow, meanwhile allowing it to be printed in the RECORD, and thereby acquiescing in the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that request will be granted.
Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be the wish of the House that this should be printed in the RECORD, and to that request I certainly have no objection. I only insisted upon taking it up to-day because I did not wish to interfere with the gentleman from Alabama to-morrow, who wants to call up the appropriation bill. But I will state now that this is a matter of such importance that I will call it up for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal tomorrow

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman will not do that. The appropriation bills certainly ought to be passed. I shall endeavor to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri agree to the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, and that this report be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. CLARDY. I do.
Mr. HERBERT. But that is as far as the agreement extends.
The SPEAKER. That is as far as the agreement extends; but the gentleman gives notice that he will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. CLARDY. To-morrow after the reading of the Journal.
Mr. HERBERT. And I shall ask the House to consider at that time the naval appropriation bill.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders, or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject the charter to forfeiture."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substituting for the words proposed to be stricken out and the words proposed to be inserted the following:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 9, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Line 3, after the word "verified," insert the words "on oath;" line 5, after the word "any," insert the word "willfully;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all the words proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"This act shall expire and be of no force or effect at the end of three years unless the construction of said canal shall be commenced and prosecuted in good faith within that time."

And the House agree to the same.

MARTIN L. CLARDY, ISIDOR PAYNER

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE HOUSE CONFEREES.

The conferees on the part of the House beg leave to submit the following

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to the House amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out that part of the House amendment providing that stock, bonds, and other securities shall be issued at the principal office in the city of New York, and further, that the stocks and bonds or other securities shall be issued for cash only, and substituting therefor the words:

"May issue stock to the amount of the just value of such estate, property and rights and for work and labor done or materials provided in the execution of the work of constructing said ship-canal; and the stock issued for these purposes shall be deemed paid-up stock and shall not be liable to any further calls or assessments."

shall be deemed paid-up stock and shall not be liable to any further calls or assessments."

The effect of this amendment as proposed is to authorize the issuance of stock to the just value of property necessary in the construction of the canal and for work and labor done in connection therewith as well as for the concessions acquired from Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

From their disagreement to amendment numbered 2, which provides that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to commit the United States to any liability whatever for or on account of said company, etc., the Senate conferces also recede, with the following amendments: Before the word "liability," in line 71 of the printed bill, insert the word "pecuniary;" and after the word "act," in line 77, strike out the words "or otherwise;" and strike out the provise in lines 79 to 81, inclusive.

The first two verbal amendments proposed by the Senate conferces, and agreed to by the conferces on the part of the House, do not change in any wise the meaning of the amendment as adopted, but express perhaps the intention of the House more clearly than it is expressed in the original. The words stricken out in the latter part of the amendment relieve the company of the necessity of printing on every bond, on every contract, and on every certificate of stock, and on any other obligation the words of the amendment.

The Senate conferces recede from their disagreement to amendment numbered 3, on page 6 of the printed bill, with an amendment striking out that part of the House amendment that requires all bonds, stocks, and other securities issued by the company to be paid for in cash only, and substituting for the first clause of that amendment the words "all shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities which the company may issue to raise the corporate capital shall be executed and issued at the principal office in the city of New York."

From their disagreement to the fourth amendment the Senate conferces recede, with an amendment striking

From their disagreement to the fourth amendment the Senate conferees recede, with an amendment striking out section 3 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC, 3. That no certificates for stock, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be issued till at least 10 per cent, of the par value thereof shall be fully paid for in money and such money deposited in the treasury of said company; and there shall be at least $1,000,000 in money paid on such subscriptions into the treasury of said company within one year from the passage of this act; and said company is hereby prohibited from returning or repaying any part of the money so paid. No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject this charter to forfeiture."

The effect of this is to require 10 per cent, of all certificates of stock issued for cash to be deposited in the treasury of said company, and to leave it in the power of the owners of the stock so issued to assign the same; and further to require at least the sum of $1,000,000 to be deposited within twelve months in the treasury of the company.

Amendment numbered 5 is merely a change in the numbering of the sections, to which the Senate agrees.

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, with an amendment striking out the words "the directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States."

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to amendment numbered 7, which requires the vice-president to be a citizen and residents of the United States.

The conferees on the part of the House recede from the House amendment numbered 8, which provides that no change of concessions heretofore or here

The House conferees recede from amendment numbered 12, which provides "that nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations, or that may be acquired through treaty stipulations, with respect to the rights of transportation of the citizens of the United States, or their property, over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace or war."

Mr. LANHAM. I renew my request that unanimous consent be given to file reports. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

I submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia submits a privileged report, which will be read.

Mr. LANHAM. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill on which the conference report is submitted will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S.2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. LANHAM. Against that I raise the question of consideration. I do not think it necessary to read the report.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman require the reading of the report in full before the question of consideration is submitted?

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to hear the entire report read, so that we may know on what we are acting.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce." approved February 4, 1887, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered S.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And the commission is hereby authorized and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act; and, upon the request of the commission, it shall be the duty of any district attorney of the United States to whom the commission may apply to institute in the proper court and to prosecute, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and for the punishment of all violations thereof; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States."

STATEMENT OF HOUSE CONFEREES.

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (8, 2851) to amend an act entled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, submit the following in explanation of their report herewith submitted:

Amendments 1 and 2 relate to publicity of rates; and the Senate agree to the same as they passed the House.

Amendment 4 relates to false representation of contents of package of freight.

The Senate agrees to the amendment of the House.

Amendment 6 relates to the free transportation of soldiers, sailors, and orphans to homes provided for their reception. The Senate agrees to the House amendment with an amendment, the effect of which is to allow the carriers to transport free persons about to enter and returning from such home amendment with an amendment, the and returning from such homes after discharge.

The House recedes from amendment numbered 5, the effect of which is to strike that amendment from the bill. That amendment requires the commission to prescribe for the use of common carriers in making their schedule of rates and charges for transportation of persons and property one uniform classification.

The substance of amendment numbered 3 is agreed to by the Senate, and we have inserted the same in lieu of amendment numbered 5 in order that it may appear in the proper place in the bill. This amendment relates to the enforcement of the act by the commission, and the effect of it is to require the commission to apply to the district attorney of the United States of the proper court, the court having jurisdiction, to prosecute any carrier subject to the provisions of the act who violates the terms thereof, and requires such district attorney so to do.

The conferees have failed to agree as to House amendments numbered 3 and 7. No. 3 relates to conferring concurrent jurisdiction upon the State courts to hear and determine questions arising under the act.

CHARLES F. CRISP,

ALBERT R. ANDERSON,

CHAS. O'NEILL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NELSON. This is a very important matter, and I ask unanimous consent that all these matters be printed, with the bill, in the RECORD, and that consideration may go over until to-morrow. It involves changes of the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. CRISP. It is very important that it should be considered. It is an open secret what the report is. It has been known for a week to anybody who wanted to know, and the only reason why it is important that there should be no further delay is because to-morrow it is desired to go on with an appropriation bill. This is not an agreement; it is a disagreement as to two important points. There will necessarily have to be another conference, and it is certainly necessary that something should be done in the direction of getting the assent of the two Houses to an amendment of the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. LANHAM. I think it is important that we should go on with the private busines

Mr. CRISP. I think it is wholly unimportant whether we should go on with the private business. This is a great question, and one which should be considered; and it is unimportant whether Brown's or Smith's bill is passed as compared with this.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BACON and Mr. MAISH. Division.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 36, noes 50.

So the House refused to consider the report.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD, with the bill, with the amendments in italics.

Mr. CRISP. The bill with the amendments has been printed and reprinted; but I have no objection to the conference report being printed in the RECORD without the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Has the bill been printed as it is now?

Mr. CRISP. It has. The bill is twenty-three pages long.

Mr. NELSON. Then I will not ask that the bill be printed, but ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee of conference be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] renews his request to dispense with the hour for the call of committees, with leave to gentlemen to present reports on both public and private bills to the Clerk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,

Mr. McMillin in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the rule which was adopted this morning, and the Clerk will report the first Senate bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the House for just one moment. We have adopted a resolution this morning giving preference to Senate bills on the Private Calendar in the order in which they appear on the Private Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has announced that the House was in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar under the special order, and has instructed the Clerk to report the first Senate bill.

Mr. LANHAM. I was going to make a request for unanimous consent that we proceed in the order we have heretofore, namely, that the names of members may be called alphabetically; that gentlemen when their names are reached may call up a bill, either Senate bill or House bill, and that it may be considered unless five members shall object to its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the rule that has been adopted instructs the committee as to what bills shall be considered; and the Chair thinks the gentleman's request is in conflict with that rule.

Mr. LANHAM. Can we by unanimous consent adopt this rule?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that in this matter the House has given an instruction to the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I call up the first Senate bill on the Calendar. HENRY H. SIBLEY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 518) for the relief of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask that the report upon that Mr. O'FERRALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he withdraw his demand for the reading of the report, as it is quite long, and allow a statement to be made, in order to save time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is authorized to adjudicate the claim of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, growing out of a contract made by Henry H. Sibley, in his lifetime, with the Goyennment of the United States for the use of a patented invention in the manufacture of a tent known as the Sibley tent, and for this purpose the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction, notwithstanding any bar of the statute of limitations.

SEC. 2. That either party to any suit that may be brought under the provisions of this act shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from any final judgment the Court of Claims may render.

Mr. KERR. I ask for the reading of the minority report.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman can de-

KERR] furnish it?

Mr. OATES. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that the minority report accompanies the House bill.

Mr. KERR. I filed a minority report with the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no minority report accompanies this bill, and the gentleman's remedy will be to get the report to which he refers and have it sent to the desk.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill for the relief of the heirs of Henry H. Sibley. The facts in regard to the case are these: In the year 1858 Henry H. Sibley was in the service of the United States Government in the Indian wars, and he then invented what is called the "Sibley tent," which is very like a wigwam. It did not require any inventive genius to get up a tent of that kind. Any man who has ever seen a wigwam knows what the Sibley tent is. But, having got his patent by some means, he obtained from the Secretary of War, John B. Floyd, Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1278) for the relief of James A. TerSouthern Confederacy and was engaged in trying to advance the interests of that side during the entire war, and he now seeks, or rather his representatives seek, to obtain a royalty of $5 apiece not only upon the tents used up to the beginning of the war but also upon all tents used during the entire progress of the war, while he was on the other side fighting to destroy the Government and helping to create the necessity for the use of the tents upon which he now demands $5 apiece royalty. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Perhaps it was a matter of business with him.

[Laughter.]

Mr. KERR. Now, Mr. Chairman, there was filed in favor of this bill a long argument, which I will also say is a very able one, one of the most closely presented arguments I have ever seen, in which Mr. KERR. many fine-spun theories are set forth to show why the heirs of this man should be allowed this large sum of money. I have not yet been able to first the minority report, and therefore I ask the Clerk to read now, in my time and as part of my remarks, the portion of the minority report on the Senate bill which I have marked.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me a moment?

Mr. KERR. Yes, sir.
Mr. LANHAM. I suggest that as the report in this case is quite lengthy we had better not consume time in reading it. The object of this bill is simply to refer the claim to the Court of Claims with a right of appeal on the part of the Government.

Mr. KERR. I forgot, Mr. Chairman, to state that the House bill in this identical case was laid on the table.

Mr. LANHAM. I think that we might very well pass the Senate bill without further discussion, as it merely refers the whole matter to the Court of Claims.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly opposed to burdening the Court of Claims with a proposition which involves a question which we can dispose of right here. The question in the case is simply whether the United States is under any obligation to pay to this man Sibley, or to the heirs of Sibley, who was all the time engaged in the rebellion, the sum of two or three hundred thousand dollars as a royalty upon a tent for which a patent ought never to have been allowed in the first place, and for which, certainly, compensation ought not to have extended longer than the two years on which the inventor had the benefit of it before he went into the rebellion. He has been paid for that period, and now his heirs are asking for additional compensation extending over the entire period of the rebellion. There are plenty of valid claims requiring investigation to be referred to the Court of Claims without burdening the court with cases of this kind. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I think the report in this case ought to be read.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If the gentleman from Texas will yield to me for a moment, I wish to state that, as I understand this case, it is simply this: In 1856 Henry H. Sibley, who at this time was a Federal soldier, as has been stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kere], invented what is known as the Sibley tent. He made a contract with the United States Government, under which it was to pay him a royalty upon every tent that was used for the Government purposes.

That contract with him and with his partner, a man by the name of Burns, to whom he had sold a half interest in the patent, was carried out by the Government up to some time in 1861—a short time, I think, after the commencement of the war. This Federal officer, Sibley, reafter the commencement of the war. This Federal officer, Sibley, resigned his commission, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kerr], and went into the Confederate army. During all the war, however, his wife was loyal. His children were then young, one only fifteen years of age, the other still younger. The evidence in the case shows that during the entire war the wife of this man was protesting against his participation in the Confederacy and objecting at all times to the position which he held in the Confederate army. A suit was instituted, I believe, after the war by Mr. Burns, who, as I have said, held a helf interest in the rotent, and a indement was recovered in his held a half interest in the patent, and a judgment was recovered in his favor.

Mr. KILGORE. For how much?

Mr. O'FERRALL. For $101,000, I think.

Now, all that is asked in this case is that this claim may be referred to the Court of Claims; that, so far as it affects this claim, the statute of limitations may be wiped out and that the widow, this loyal woman, and her children may have the same opportunity to be before the Court of Claims as had Mr. Burns, who held the other half interest in this patent. That is the whole of this case.

Mr. BREWER. When did Mr. Sibley die?
Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not remember; and I do not think the re-My impression, however, is that he died some time since

A MEMBER. In 1886.

Mr. BREWER. Then he died quite recently.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not know that I can state as to that.

Mr. BREWER. Why did he fail to prosecute his claim from 1861 up to the time of his death?

Mr. O'FERRALL. My understanding is that during his lifetime he was knocking at the doors of Congress seeking relief.

Mr. BREWER. Has his case ever been reported upon before in this

Mr. O'FERRALL. I can not answer that question. I know that this bill—at least such is my information—passed the Senate without a dissenting voice.

Mr. KERR. There was a minority report filed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] in this case in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not think it necessary that the report on this bill be read. I have endeavored to state the substance of the claim and to give all the points involved.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to inquire how much money is involved in this transaction?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I can not say; that is a matter for the Court of Claims to determine.

Mr. KILGORE. How much has been heretofore claimed?
Mr. O'FERRALL. I suppose that the claim under the contract which Mr. Sibley made with the Government was for a royalty of $5 for every tent used. How far Mr. Sibley may have debarred himself from recovering that royalty by his participation in the Confederacy, or what may be the liability of the Government for tents used after the commencement of the war, will be matters for the court to determine, not for me.

Mr. KILGORE. How much did the partner receive?
Mr. O'FERRALL. One hundred and one thousand dollars I think Mr. Burns brought suit against the United States the report states. in the Court of Claims for his share of the royalty and recovered a judgment, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court in 1871. That judgment has been paid in full.

Mr. KILGORE. How much interest did he have in the patent?

Mr. O'FERRALL. He had a half interest.

Mr. KILGORE. And that judgment has been paid? Mr. O'FERRALL. That judgment has been paid in full. The amount recovered was $101,242.50.

Mr. KILGORE. Would not the question arise whether the other party was estopped from setting up any further claim, if there should be no legislation on the subject?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that this House is undertaking to sit as a court to determine these legal questions. They are questions which will properly come before the Court of Claims for consideration. All that this bill asks is that Congress wipe out the statute of limitations so far as it affects this case, and allow the Court of Claims to hear and determine the matter.

Mr. KILGORE. I should like to state my objection to this proposition, as I understand it. The Court of Claims ordinarily, I believe, inquires first into the loyalty of the claimant, and secondly, determines the amount involved in the controversy; but it never determines the question of the liability of the Government for the claim, unless that is provided for in the act referring the matter to the court. I do not know what the provision in this bill is, but under the reference usually made of these questions the Court of Claims does not go any further than what I have just stated.

Now, when a question of this kind comes up here it is usually said, "This is only to refer the matter to the Court of Claims and let them determine the loyalty of the claimant and the amount involved in the controversy." Then, when the case is reported back to Congress, the argument is that the Court of Claims has passed upon it, and Congress, therefore, is in a measure estopped from objecting to payment—that Congress ought to make the appropriation because "the Court of Claims has passed upon the matter." In this ingenious, roundabout way Congress is induced to appropriate money to pay claims as to which the court has only ascertained the amount, without reference to the question of the liability of the Government for the claim.

Now, the Government is not liable in this case, and this legislation is intended to make it liable. It is the settlement of questions of law by Congress itself. The only inquiry which can be made by the Court of Claims is as to the amount, and the Government has the poor privilege of appealing to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine whether the Court of Claims has ascertained the facts as they are.

The difficulty here is to ascertain how many of these tents have been used by the Government.

Mr. HOOKER. You say the Court of Claims have two functions: one is to ascertain the person's loyalty, and the second the amount. Does not that come to the Congress of the United States in the finding of the Court of Claims upon the evidence as to whether the property belonged to the party or not and whether the party was not entitled to compenstation therefor? That is a finding and not a judgment of the court.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; this is not a finding.
Mr. HOOKER. I do not speak of this; I speak generally. It is a finding of the court as to the amount between the Government and the litigant. If that was not the case the finding of the court would amount to nothing.

Mr. KILGORE. It never determines the question of liability, never determines the question of law; it finds the amount due and whether the party was loyal or not. Mr. HOOKER. Wheth

Whether the Government owes so much or not. Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman states the law as to claims referred under the Bowman act.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, this is not to refer this case under the Bowman act to the Court of Claims. It is a bill to refer this case to the Court of Claims for final adjudication, giving the Government the right to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the The Court of Claims unquestionably never renders a final judgment under the Bowman act. All those cases, I know, come back for consideration to this House. The court finds the facts in the case and ascertains whether the party was loyal or not, in case there is any question of loyalty, and the amount involved between the Government and the claimant

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. McADoo having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announcing the passage without amendment of the bill (H. R. 12009) to provide for keeping open the Potomac

It also announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 3824) to provide for an American register for the steam-yacht Nautilus, of New York; and A bill (S. 1092) for the relief of certain property in the District of Columbia

It further announced the adoption of a concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; in which concurrence was re-

It also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the House amendment to the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. PLATT, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. BUTLER as conferees on its part.

HENRY H. SIBLEY.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. McADoo in the chair.

Mr. O'FERRALL. These facts are reported to this House and the House passes upon them. The House sits in judgment upon the decision of the Court of Claims. It is not intended, however, by this bill that this case shall be referred under the provisions of the Bowman act, but that it shall be referred where judgment shall be rendered for or against the party, with the right on the part of the Government to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, sir, if Henry H. Sibley were here asking relief in person there might be some question as to his right to recover. Henry H. Sibley, however, was pardoned—

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him to ask whether his wife or children can obtain any better standing before this body than he himself could have obtained?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I think in a great Government like this, where loyalty seems to be at a premium, that his widow, who was loyal, ought to stand before this body in a higher position than he would have occupied had he been present in person making the application. The evidence shows beyond a question that she was loyal, and her two children, one fifteen years old and one less, were too young to be disloyal. Her loyalty is proven beyond a question by the affidavits on file, and which are printed with the report of the committee.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess a familiarity with the merits of this claim, but I do think as a member of this body that if the claim is an honest one, or has a prima facie standing, that it ought to be investigated, and if found to be a just claim, that it should I believe that this Government is strong enough and great enough to pay all of its honest debts, and that it should furnish facilities to parties having just claims to present them for consideration. I do not believe, sir, that the statute of limitation should be interposed by the Government as a defense against any honest claim. I never favored that position during my term of service here, and hope I never will favor it. All claims that are meritorious as against the Government of the United States should be given a fair hearing, and if the Government is found owing an honest debt, then I think it should be paid, and that the statute of limitation should not be pleaded. Notwithstanding the lapse of time since the origin of a claim against the Government, all honest claimants should have the opportunity of presenting them, and if it is an obligation against the Government, without regard to time, it should be discharged. So, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the pending claim, and not pretending to know anything as to whether it is based on merit or not, whether something is due to the heirs of this man or not, but believing that if anything is due to his heirs that it should be paid by the Government, I favor the bill, and, as I understand, that is all the bill does. It is simply to remove the statute of limitation and enable an investigation of the matter, and if there is an honest claim due that the Government should discharge it. I think it is only fair and just and commends itself to the conscience of all.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration was referred to the committee of which I have the honor to be a member and to the subcommittee of which I am chairman. The subcommittee of which I am chairman examined the case very carefully, and the full committee indorsed and favorably reported and recommended the passage of the bill.

I think if gentlemen will take pains to read this bill they will find that the observations of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] in regard to it are calculated to make an erroneous impression.

Mr. KERR. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask if the full committee recommended and favorably reported this bill? I understood him to intimate that it was the unanimous report of the committee. Mr. LANHAM. He said that the subcommittee's report was favorably acted upon.

Mr. TAULBEE. The Committee on Claims is that to which I refer. From that committee I filed in the House a favorable report, which was done by the authority of the committee.

Mr. KERR. But there was also a minority report.
Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly. I did not say anything about that, nor did I say anything that might be construed as meaning that there had not been a report.

But if you read the bill carefully, you will find that you can not vest any rights in the claimants whatever, except such right as was had before the statute of limitations barred their action in law. It does not authorize the Government to ascertain the ground of the claim, but it authorizes the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount due, without regard to the statute of limitation. No other question, then, but that of the limitation which now bars the action in court is determined by the bill. Jurisdiction is only given to the court which they would have had but for the statute of limitations.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I would like to ask for information.
I understand this claim, if allowed, goes to the heirs, and that the original claimant, or father of these parties, is dead. Does the evidence show that he prosecuted or attempted to prosecute the claim in his lifetime?

Mr. TAULBEE. This claim was not prosecuted until after the statute of limitations had run.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, one further question. What excuse is there for not having prosecuted it?

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, I will state that he did prosecute the claim.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Why was it not acted upon?

Mr. OATES. There was a technical objection raised then just as now; that is, as to the question of loyalty. Although he was the inventor and the Government had used his invention, and the Supreme Court had decided in the suit brought by Burns for the half interest assigned to him by Sibley that the Government was liable, yet the objection was raised against Sibley's claim because of disloyalty, and that only.

Mr. BOWDEN. The fact is that this claimant could and would have prosecuted his claim but for the fact that he was required to make oath as to his loyalty before he could claim recompense from the United States. That had been settled in the case of Armstrong vs. The United

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. And he could not do it.
Mr. TAULBEE. Now, the fact is that the statute of limitations has run against this claim before the claimant, Sibley, could have a status in court. The question of his loyalty had theretofore prevented its prosecution. On the general merits of this claim it is only right to state that the payment of this claim would be merely a fulfillment of the contract between the Secretary of War and Mr. Sibley, the propriety of which contract and the force and effect of which contract have never yet been questioned by any officers of the Government. It simply means, if you pass this bill, that you give the Court of Claims the right to determine whether a contract made between the Government and one of its citizens shall be carried out by which the Government procured advantage of a patented invention and derived great benefits from it. This bill simply looks to reimbursing the claimant for the benefits derived from that contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. In answer to the point made by my friend from Texas [Mr. Kilgore] I desire to call his attention to the wording of the bill as it comes to us from the Senate. It is:

That the Court of Claims is authorized to adjudicate the claim of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley.

These are the words:

Adjudicate the claim.

What does that mean? That means to decide whether the claim is just; whether it is legal. It is not, as the gentleman said, a mere question of how much is the claim; but the question is, in the first place, whether anything at all is due or not under the law and the facts of the case.

Then having ascertained, if the court shall so find, that something is due, the next question will be, how much? It seems to me that that is a sufficient answer to the point made by the gentleman from Texas. That is the whole proposition—to waive nothing except the mere plea of the statute of limitations which the Government might set up.

As to this case the Senate report says on this question of loyalty: As to this case the Senate report says on this question of loyalty:

But we think, on an appeal to the sense of equity and to the indulgence of Congress, the case of Mrs. Sibley and her children stands differently. She was unquestionably loyal to the Government, as were all her kindred. She endeavored to induce her husband to remain loyal. As he is dead, one-third of his property would become hers, either by his will or by the policy of most of the States in spite of his will if he undertook to convert it from her. If he had a clear and unquestionable claim against the Government, nothing in his own misconduct or in any other fact which has occurred has ever impaired or extinguished it. It is a mere question of consenting to waive the statute of limitations.

That is the only question in the passage of this bill. It is still left for the court to say under all the circumstances and from the facts and the law, is anything due; if so, how much? And a court like this, or any other court, would be governed by the law just as it was in any other case; and that is all there is of this case.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I reserve the balance of my time unless gentlemen desire to speak on the other side. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. KERR. I yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. There is such great difficulty in honest claimants obtaining pay justly due them from the Government of the United States that I would be very loath to oppose any claim that I thought had merit in and of itself. I would be one of the last that would oppose a claim upon the ground of limitation alone. I believe I have never urged that as a reason against any claim that has been considered since I have been a member on this floor; but it strikes me from the investigation I have been able to give this claim that it has no merit in itself. If I understand the history of General Sibley correctly, he was educated at the expense of the Government, at West Point, and was an officer of the United States, in service in the Army at the time he is alleged to have invented a form of tent for which he obtained a patent, by reason of which royalty from the Government is now claimed. I think it ought to be against public policy for any officer of the Government, who is receiving pay for all of his services, to obtain patents in the line of his professional duty in inventions discovered when he ought to have been giving all his services to the Government.

It scarcely seems as if this form of a tent is novel or ought to be the subject of a patent by any one, still less by an officer educated and paid by the Government. This is not like the case between employer and employé. In such case it is very justly held that the employé is entitled to a patent on anything novel he may invent. But it is much like the case where the Government appropriated several hundred thousand dollars to be expended by Government officials in experimenting on different processes for making beet-sugar. On discovering an improved process, the officials undertook to patent it, which is universally denounced as wrong. This claim purports to be based upon a contract with the Government, but I observe that by the terms of that contract it had expired before the time when these services were rendered; or rather, that when these tents were used there could be no claim for the royalty, except under a provision of that contract that it was not to te:minate unless the Government gave notice to Sibley. Shortly after obtaining the patent, and securing from a Government official a contract that the Government should pay him $5 royalty on each tent that the Government should use, Sibley abandoned the flag he had been educated and sworn to support, and entered into rebellion against the Government; helped organize and carry on a rebellion, to suppress which required the Government to organize large armies and use great numbers of these tents. He had a contract that continued to run unless the Government should notify him that it desired it to cease. The terms of the contract required the Government to give him notice.

But how? Sibley himself, by abandoning the flag that he had been educated to defend and going outside of the control of the Government, made it impossible to give him notice that the Government no longer desired to operate under the control. desired to operate under the contract. Hence it was by his own fault that he received no such notice. He made it impossible that the Govthat he received no such notice. He made it impossible that the covernment should give him that notice. And now he claims pay from the Government for using his form of tent to shelter its soldiers in whipping him and his associates back into obedience.

Mr. TAULBEE. Did that proviso extend to the use of the tent? Or was it not the proviso in the contract that the Government might or was it not the proviso in the contract that the Government might refuse to use the tent by serving notice upon Sibley?

Mr. JACKSON. I do not know that I can answer that question, but either provision would apply to the argument I make. The Government is under no legal obligations to pay royalty for use of any patented article. Where it is equitable and just its practice is to pay.

Mr. TAULBEE, Did the Government continue to use the tents?

Mr. JACKSON. I think it did to some extent. It had paid Sibley Mr. JACKSON. I think it did to some extent. It had paid Sibley before he joined the rebellion some $16,000 royalty for this tent, which I think was all wrong. The contract was unjust to the Government. It ought not to pay anything for the use of these tents, because whatever Sibley could do for the Government in the way of military service he was receiving pay for. He ought never to have had his patent in the first place. Even assuming that this contract was made with Sibley by an honest officer, in good faith, it was made only with the expectation that, at most, a few hundred of these tents would be used per annum and any one can see at once that when it became processary to annum, and any one can see at once that when it became necessary to use thousands of them, if Sibley had been within reach the Govern-ment would have notified him that it did not want to proceed further under the contract.

Mr. TAULBEE. Was any such proceeding taken in the case of Burns?

Mr. JACKSON. Not so far as I know of. And the Burns payment was all wrong. It ought never to have been made, and it is no reason was all wrong. It ought never to have been made, and it is no reason why we should authorize other wrong payments. Burns was an assignee. He could have no higher right than Sibley, and must claim through him. So the widow and heirs of Sibley in this bill can have no higher right than Sibley had. If Sibley ever had any rights under his patent and contract he forfeited all rights to the use of the United States courts to enforce them by engaging in rebellion. That is the plain provision of the statute. I know that in its great and unexampled leniency this Government pardoned this man, who proved false to the flag after being educated to defend it, and that the courts did eventually decide that the effect of a pardon was such that he might sue in court.

It is said that the bill is only for the purpose of removing the bar of the statute of limitations. But before the time arrived at which the courts held that the pardon would allow him to sue, the statute had already prevented his suing. So we see that there never was a time when Sibley could have maintained a suit on his contract in the Court of Claims. Hence, this bill is giving the wife and heirs rights under this contract Sibley never did have.

The payment of royalty on a patent by the Government is always a matter of favor; hence, we see that for two distinct reasons this bill is asked as a favor. To be granted, it should be as a matter of equity and justice. In my judgment, it has neither character to commend it. I venture to say that before no other civilized government than ours would a citizen presume to make a claim such as this.

This bill goes further than bills we usually pass for the most honest and deserving of claimants. It is not simply to authorize the court to hear, inquire, and determine whether the applicants have a just or equitable claim against the Government, and directing the court to report its conclusions to Congress for further action as is the usual way; but it repeals for the benefit of this shadowy claim the statute of limitations; in effect, recognizes the validity of the continuing contract on which it is based and makes the simple finding of the court as to amount a judgment against the United States

I will say no more on the subject at this time. The bill ought to be defeated.

Mr. TAULBEE. But Burns got his pay.
Mr. JACKSON. Well, perhaps he got what he ought not to have I am not advised as to that. Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state it?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will it be in order to offer an amendment to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing that on the trial of this case the Government to this bill providing the trial of the case the Government to the trial of the case the Government to the trial of this case the Government to the trial of the case the Government to the trial of the case the Government to the Government to the Government to the case the Government to the Government t ment shall have the right to set off against this claim the value of the tents that Sibley destroyed while he was in the Confederate service? Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes.
Mr. OATES. It is not a subject of set-off as it sounds in damages. The gentleman would perhaps like to put his plea in legal shape, which would be that of recoupment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will have a right to offer any amendment he desires that is in order.

The committee rose informally to receive a

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced the approval of House bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2686) for the relief of William Knowland; and
An act (H. R. 12107) to increase the maximum amount of international money-orders from $50 to $100.

HENRY H. SIBLEY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KERR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read, as a part of my remarks, the minority report of the House committee. The Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The minority of your committee, to whom was referred House bill 3007, by leave of the committee submit the following reasons why the recommendation of the committee should not be concurred in. The claimants make their claim as the heirs of Henry H. Sibley. An equity does not of necessity exist in favor of an heir, even if it existed in favor of the ancestor. The rights of an heir to the property of his ancestor are merely statutory, and are not shown to exist in this case. The deceased, Henry H. Sibley, a general of the United States Army, presumably observed in his service in the Indian wars the form of the Indian wigwam, and patented a tent after its form in 1856. In 1858 he made a contract with the Government, through John B. Floyd, in which the Government agreed to pay him $5 royalty for every tent manufactured or used until 1859, or until Sibley gave notice to the contrary. It does not appear that John B. Floyd had any legal authority to make this contract. The contract itself was not produced. We submit the question whether the patent was not fraudulent against the Government in its inception; and whether there are not strong presumptions of fraud in the contract, even if the then Secretary of War, John B. Floyd, had authority to make it; and, if so, there could be no equities existing in favor of the original claimant. Concerning these questions, the minority of the committee in the last House used the following language, which we make a part of this report:

We submit the question whether the patent was not fraudulent against the Government in its inception; and whether there are not sivrong presumptional conventions in its inception; and whether there are not sivrong presumptions authority to make it; and, if so, there could be no equities existing in favor of the original claimant. Concerning these questions, the minority of the committee in the last House used the following language, which we make a part of the royalty, and recovered the amount. Sibley took no steps to collect his. How we had not also the convention of the royalty, and recovered the amount. Sibley took no steps to collect his. How we had not not do so under the law. We are willing to believe that he then felt that he had now calams that his failure to do so was owing to the belief that he could not do so under the law. We are willing to believe that he then felt that he had now had not been conventionally the convention of further legislation? The rejoinder is, the statute of the convention of further legislation? The rejoinder is, the statute of the convention of further legislation? The rejoinder is, the statute of the convention of the decrease of further legislation? The rejoinder is, the statute of the convention of the convention of the statute of the convention of

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. KERR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, by the rule adopted by the House this morning seventeen bills acted upon by the committees of the House are passed over without note or comment for the purpose of reaching this bill. I believe that most of the time which has been spent upon the Private Calendar during this Congress has been for claims which were semi-Confederate in their character, and this is one more.

Now, to call attention to the bill, if the gentlemen had proposed to Now, to call attention to the bill, if the gentlemen had proposed to refer this case under the Bowman act it would be very different, but they ask for an absolute final judgment, except that there is to be a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. Therefore, whatever Congress can do or may do, it must do now. Otherwise it passes its full and final power over to the Court of Claims. Now this is a very singular claim. We find that the man whose representatives make this claim was a major in the service of the United States. He was in the service of the United States at the time he made this invention. He was in the service of the Covernment at the time he made this contract. ice of the Government at the time he made this contract. He resigned from the Army of the United States in May, 1861, and accepted a command in a rebel service, and continued in that service during the war of the rebellion; thus acting directly in contravention of the interests of the Government which had given him his education, which intellectually and morally created him, and gave him the skill to invent this tent, thus placing himself in direct antagonism to the Government against which his heirs now make this claim.

Further than this, the success of Sibley after he went into the Confederate service tended to increase the destruction of the Government property. Therefore, the more successful Sibley was against the Union atmy the more tents he destroyed, the more armies it was necessary to raise, the more men there were needed, the more successful was he in drawing his royalty from the Government which he was trying to de-

It seems to me that the position of the claim before the House is far different from what gentlemen have stated. They tell us that the proposition is merely to remove the disability resulting from the move the disability consequent upon rebellious service; it is to enter-tain a claim which shall contradict the rules that have been adopted in this House and to change the whole action of the House in relation to questions of this sort. When a claim comes here from one who was in the Confederate service, or from those who represent one who was in that service, and who was himself a party to the increase of the use and the destruction of the subject on account of which he seeks to draw royalty and pay from the Government to the amount of a quarter of a million of dollars, it seems to me intolerable that in such a case the Government should now allow to him or to those who represent him that amount.

Mr. KERR. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson], or to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

BUCKALEW

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I intended to submit some remarks upon this bill, but the reading of the report of the minority of the committee presents the case in opposition to the bill, I think, with sufficient fullness; and it is quite unnecessary that the negative should be discussed at length upon the floor. If gentlemen are not con-vinced from the facts set forth in the report that this is not a case to be sent to the chances and accidents of a hearing in the Court of Claims if they are not convinced that the representatives of this deceased man can have no greater right than he had while living—it would be impossible to convince them "though one rose from the dead." So far as am concerned, therefore, without entering into the general debate on this subject, I shall content myself with saying that, with clear mind and untroubled judgment, I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. KERR. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] desire any time?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I believe I do not wish to occupy any

Mr. LANHAM. I hope, then, we may now have a vote on the proposition.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I believe I had some time remaining. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] five minutes, or whatever more of my time he may desire.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the questions involved in this bill are not difficult. As to the legal rights of the claimants there can be no doubt, but for the bar of the statute of limitations, or in other words, the absence of a law authorizing the claimant to go into the Court of Claims; that court can proceed only by virtue of a statute, and the statute which would have allowed such proceeding has expired by its own limitation. This bill proposes to allow the heirs at law of General Sibley to go before the Court of Claims and enforce whatever rights may exist in them, and which can not be enforced in that court in the absence of some such act.

As to the legal status of General Sibley, it has been adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States in several well-considered cases that his pardon fully restored him to all his civil rights. However much he or any one else may have engaged in the rebellion, such conduct, once pardoned by the President, is completely wiped out; and the standing of such a person in law is just as though he had never the standing of such a person in law is just as though he had never participated in the war against the Union.

I concede that whether Congress will pass this bill and give the heirs at law of General Sibley a right to go into the Court of Claims and have this claim considered, is a matter of grace. It strikes me, sir, that inasmuch as the war has been over a quarter of a century, and it is to be presumed that the Executive never exercises the right of pardon except in proper cases, General Sibley's participation in the war against the Union ought to cut no figure whatever in this case.

Now, as to the fact of his having been an officer in the Federal Army at the time he made this invention, having been educated at the West Point Military Academy, it is insisted by some gentlemen on the other side of this question that he was not entitled to any compensation for his invention. That proposition would have been a very correct rule to have established in the first instance. But, sir, it has not been the practice of the Government. Just the reverse has been the practice. Therefore that argument is entitled to no weight. The reverse has been considered right and proper through the whole history of the Govern-Ment.

Now, the single question is presented to gentlemen here, this man having been once disloyal but pardoned by the President of the United States and restored to his civil rights, whether the fact of his disloyalty ought to be brought into consideration here in bar of the rights of his heirs at law to prosecute this claim? I do not understand that there is any controversy as to the right of recovery against the Government in the first instance. That was adjudged by the Supreme Court in the case of the assignee. Burns, and the Government was hald to be lighted. case of the assignee, Burns, and the Government was held to be liable. Now, if this is a case where the Government ought to pay, it matters not whether the sum involved is ten dollars or a million. If the principle be correct upon which the claim is to be considered, if these claimants ought to be allowed to go before the court, the amount they may recover should cut no figure whatever in our consideration of this

I believe, sir, that is not the fact. The disloyalty of General Sibley ought not to prevent the passage of this bill, because he was, by the constitutional authorities of the Government, relieved of all that he had incurred and was fully restored to the rights of an American citi-

I do not care to say anything more.

Mr. KERR. I will yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson].

Mr. O'FERRALL. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. KERR. No; I reserved all of my time, and yield now to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ENLOE in the chair). Did the gentleman reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. KERR. I certainly did. I only yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Jackson]. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson].

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I only wish to make a few remarks in answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES]. strained to vote against this bill, and I wish to state briefly the grounds upon which I do so. It is not because General Sibley was disloyal or because his heirs are disloyal. I vote against it on other and entirely different grounds. I think this bill is intolerable in any view in which we look at it.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that this claim is not for rights accruing to him or his heirs under a given patent, but it is for certain rights accruing under a given contract.

In 1856 General Sibley, having obtained a patent on the form of a tent known as the Sibley tent, entered into a contract with the Secretary of War in 1858 by which it was agreed that a royalty of $5 should be paid him on each of such tents manufactured by the United States. This was to continue till January, 1859, and thereafter till notice was given of its termination. The number of tents manufactured by the United States after the making of this contract until August, 1861, was 3,583, and the royalty of $5 was paid on 3,377 of that number. So it will be seen that the royalty was paid up until about the beginning of the war of the rebellion. General Sibley went into the rebellion, and thereafter it does not appear that any royalty was claimed or paid.

The statute of limitations having long since run against the claim and General Sibley being dead, this bill is introduced to remove the bar of the statute and to give to his heirs the sum which would be due on the theory that the contract referred to has continued to be in force, and that the Government owes $5 royalty for each of these tents used.

I deny that this claim is supported by either law or equity. That there is no legal claim is conceded, otherwise there would be no need of this act. It is for that reason we are asked to remove the bar of the statute and to validate the claim.

This should never be done unless the claim that is barred and which it is sought to revive and validate is an equitable one, for it would be neither reasonable nor just to breathe life into a claim that is not founded in equity. Now I shall attempt to show that this claim is not equitable.

It was a very singular claim to begin with, a very singular contract, royalty of $5 on every tent!

Mr. OATES. The question involved in the suit by the assignee of a half interest and settled by the Supreme Court of the United States is against that position assumed by the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No, it could not be involved in that Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No, it could not be involved in that suit very well, for when the Government made a contract to pay $5 per tent for every tent manufactured the question did not arise whether $5 was too much or too little. It was simply a question of contract.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Do I understand the gentleman to raise a question of contract.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Do't inderstant the gentleman to raise a question as to the legality of the contract?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Not at all.

Mr. O'FERRALL. How if the Government made a bad contract?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will come to that in a minute and will show that the Government made a bad contract; but I believe in living up to a bad contract as well as to a good one. I wish to show that we do not owe in law or in equity one dollar or one farthing to these parties, and that by this bill we propose to legislate into their pockets between one and two hundred thousand dollars. Here is a contract which was to last up to the year 1859, with the right then or thereafter to give notice to terminate it.

The war of the rebellion began in 1861, and the patentee, whose heirs here make this claim, placed himself beyond the reach of notice and therefore made service upon him impossible, and now his heirs claim that because such notice was not formally served on him the Government is liable. I deny that he could take advantage of his own wrong, and they merely stand in his shoes. They can by no possibility have a better claim or greater rights than he had.

Mr. BOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a ques-

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will permit you or any other to ask me a question if you will give me more time to answer. Mr. BOWDEN. On that point would not that apply to Burns's one-half interest?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes; and I say the fact that Mr. Burns got judgment in the Court of Claims for over $100,000 for the buths got Judgment in the Court of Claims for over $100,000 for the half interest in this contract assigned him by General Sibley shows us what will be gotten in this case if we give the power here proposed to the Court of Claims. Because we have done wrong in the Burns case is no reason why we should do the same thing in this case.

Mr. HERBERT. And the Supreme Court affirmed the decision. Mr. WILSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to go a little fur-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes of my time, as he has been a great deal interrupted.

Mr. KERR. I believe I have twenty-seven minutes remaining, and if the gentleman desires it I will yield him seven minutes of that time.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in this case we might just as well by this act resolve that we will pay to the heirs of General Sibley from one hundred to two hundred thousand dollars ourselvesfor we can compute the amount just as well as the Court of Claims as to pass this bill in its present form. That is what it will amount There is no question of law for the courts in this case. This bill makes it incumbent on the courts to award that sum.

Mr. LEE. Ob, no. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. When we remove the bar of the statute of limitations this contract by its terms will require the Government to pay this sum. As I have attempted to show, this would be inequitable, for it is clear that it was never contemplated by the parties that this contract should be kept alive during the war of the rebellion. That this Government should pay to him and his heirs and assigns nearly a quarter of a million of dollars for the right to use this tent during that war, when it might legally have used it without the payment of a dollar, is not for a moment to be admitted.

That the parties to the contract contemplated such a result is incredible. Had the Government thought such a notice necessary, and had General Sibley not put it out of the power of the officers of the Government to serve it, we must suppose that it would have been received.

Mr. LEE. Would it?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Would it? Why certainly. Do you believe that the Government of the United States since 1858 would have gone on for thirty-one years paying $5 royalty on every tent that was manufactured by the United States Government for the use of the

Mr. COBB. Which year does the gentleman refer to as the date when the contract was to terminate on notice, 1859 or 1869?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Eighteen hundred and fifty-nine or

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Eighteen hundred and hity-nine or any year thereafter.
Mr. COBB. Why did it not terminate in 1859?
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Because of the failure on the part of the Government to give the required notice; but no person was making a claim on it after 1859, or I should say after 1861. We were engaged in a gigantic war which took up public attention at that time.

Mr. DIBBLE. Not in 1859.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I should have said in 1861. For some time after 1859 the royalty was demanded and paid.

Mr. BOWEN. And two years after the time the gentleman mentions, during which time Mr. Burns was always present to have received that notice.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. And Burns came with exactly the same argument you are making to-day, that we simply give to the Court of Claims jurisdiction, etc. And the act which we are asked to pass allows the enforcement of a contract which was wrong from the beginning and that is already dead by reason of the statute of limitations. There is no foundation in equity for the demand that is made here to-day, and I am opposed to the enactment of a law that will work inequity

Mr. O'FERRALL. Do I understand the position of the gentleman to be this: That the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States affirming the judgment of the Court of Claims was erroneous and wrong?

[Laughter.]
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Not at all. When you galvanize that contract into life, the court is bound by its letter, and can not consider the equities of the case. There was not a strict compliance with the letter of the statute through inadvertence and inability to comply.

Mr. LEE. In 1859?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Since 1859, or rather, I should say, 1861. There is a contract under which neither General Sibley nor any one else had the right to one cent after that time. The bar of the statute of limitations has forever set at rest any legal claim on the contract. Now you propose to remove that bar and give life to the contract, which was permitted to run only by inadvertence, or rather by the illegal act of the person whose heirs now claim the benefit of it, and it would be against both law and equity to permit them to take advantage of this wrong.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Certainly.
Mr. COBB. You talk of inadvertence. How can you make that appear from 1859 to 1861? There was no war then.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. My friend will see by the report that the royalty was paid up until August, 1861, within about $1,000, and there was a great deal of confusion prevailing in public matters then.

Mr. COBB. Was it not an error on the part of the Government itself that there was a failure to give notice after 1859 of the termination of the contract? No notice was given at all. Is it not therefore true that because of the failure to give notice when the time came for the termination of the original contract that that failure was a substantial renewal of the contract? Is it not true that a failure to give that notice when it should have been given was, in fact, a renewal of the contract?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I would rather say this, and it is a position that would appeal, it seems to me, to the mind of every reasonable man, that the patent expired in 1870 or in 1871, and that there was no pretext or reason whatever for giving to any person one dollar or one cent after that time. And my learned friend will see by refer-ence to the report that notice could be given any time after January, 1859, and the failure to give it at any particular time did not renew or expand the contract.

Mr. O'FERRALL. And there has not been a dollar or a cent given since then, nor has there been a claim for a dollar after the expiration of the patent. It expired in 1873, and General Holabird, the Quartermaster-General, certifies that there has not been a solitary tent used by the Government since the close of the rebellion. It was only during the rebellion that they were used.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. As I understand the claim set up here it is in effect compelling the Government to pay a royalty of $5 a tent on account of a patent that had expired five years before.

Mr. COBB. Oh, no; the rebellion terminated in 1865 and the patent in 1870 or 1871

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is true. I correct myself in that respect.

Mr. LEE. The gentleman says that this contract expired in 1859, and that from 1859 to 1861 this contract was allowed to run by inadvertence. But has the gentleman forgotten that the United States troops were then making war in Utah, and that the United States Army was using these tents? I had the honor to follow the flag in that war myself and slept under a Sibley tent.

Mr. LEE (to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota). You said that notice ought to have been given in 1859. I infer it was a mere inadvertence.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. After the war commenced—

Mr. LEE. You said in 1859.

Mr. WILSON of Minnesota. I said often the war had commenced.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I said after the war had commenced this man had gone beyond the reach of any notice that could be served on him, and that the Government failed to give this notice. But if you come in here to-day and succeed in getting this bill through you will make the Government liable for the failure to do an act which his wrong made impossible.

Mr. LEE. Why should not the Government have given notice in 1859 if it did not want to continue the contract?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It had the right to keep using the tents if it wanted to, and he was paid his royalty up until about the time the war broke out.

Mr. LEE. It continued to use the tents. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It had the right; but very soon thereafter, or as soon as the war broke out, he went beyond the reach of no-

Here the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

WILSON] has expired.

Mr. KERR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it does appear to me that there is enough in this report as made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] to convince every man upon this floor that this bill The report starts out by stating that General Sibley, should not pass. the person through whom these heirs are to claim, was educated at the expense of the General Government; that he became the owner of a patent while he was in the service of the Government and while he was a Government officer. Then he makes a contract with the General Government to pay him a royalty upon tents. While that contract was in existence he resigned, violated his oath to the Government, and forsook the Government that had educated him and prepared him for the service. While he was in the Confederate service, destroying public property, and possibly destroying these very tents manufactured by the Government, this report says the Government manufactured 43,000 of them. This bill proposes to go back and let the heirs recover a royalty for the tents manufactured during the war that the father may have burned up and destroyed.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHINGTON. What has that to do with the justice of the claim?

Several MEMBERS. Oh! Oh!

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. If the father had no right to recover he could give none to the heirs. The heirs could have no greater right than the father.

Mr. BOWDEN. Then the gentleman would go beyond the Constitution and let attainder go beyond death.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. No, sir. The father in his lifetime could not recover, and he dared not prosecute his claim in Congress, because he would not have gained it. No man would have dared to vote for it. The statute of limitation had run, and now I am opposed to giving it back to the heirs.

I do not want to follow it and take property, but I do not believe that the heirs of a man should be permitted to come in here and recover when he could not have recovered himself. I am willing to give to the men who are upon the other side all the rights they can claim—the right to vote, the right to hold office, the right of property, and the right to every contract that they have made with the Government which they have not forfeited; but when the father forfeits his right, then I insist that the children have no greater right than he had.

insist that the children have no greater right than he had.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB. Do you understand that this bill would give a greater right than Sibley would have had?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB. Well, then, you have misunderstood it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. This bill gives to his heirs the right to go back and collect for 43,000 tents manufactured while Sibley himself was in the Confederate service; and he could not have recovered. self was in the Confederate service; and he could not have recovered against the Government for a previous contract existing between him and the Government while he was in rebellion.

Mr. McCULLOGH (to Mr. Johnston, of Indiana). You did not

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, I did. These tents were manufactured while he was in the Confederate service.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Certainly. Mr. COBB. Is it not true that if this bill simply gives to Sibley's children a standing in the court as heirs every right which they can establish in that court must be established as representatives and heirs of Sibley himself, and that they could have no higher standing than he would have had if he were living?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. But then it removes the statute of limitation. Now, then, if he had any rights, when his rights were in existence the statute of limitation ran against him and he was barred. Now you propose to take away the bar which the Government has got interposed between itself and this claim.

Mr. COBB. Well, that is the question at issue, and it is not a question as to whether we will give to the heirs greater rights than the ancestor had.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I say that no man who was in the Confederate service would have dared to stand up in the halls of Congress and advocate the payment of this claim to Sibley himself, because while these tents were being manufactured and used by the Government he was in the Confederate service, engaged in destroying the very tents that this bill gives his heirs the right to recover for.

Mr. KERR. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McCullogh].

Mr. McCULLOGH withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining. Mr. KERR. The question whether this claimant will have any standing anywhere will depend upon the action of Congress. man Sibley had no legal right in this matter, and that is why his heirs ask for assistance. Now, here is the broad question: Is it right, is it equitable, to give a legal standing to a man in the courts of the United States to recover a royalty upon tents used during the time he was engaged in the rebellion and in destroying those very tents? I am surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] should rise here and ask if there was no distinction between these men. I believe this man had no equitable right in this matter. There is not a court in Christendom that would say that there was any equity there, and I do not think that in such a case as this we ought to give a legal standing to a man who has no legal standing.

Now, in regard to whether he was a traitor or not, I have not used that language, but I notice that gentlemen on the other side seem to be very uneasy because my colleague has used a word that we are not in the habit of using here. But what does the Constitution say upon that subject? It says that treason shall consist in levying war against the United States and giving aid and comfort to its enemies.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Is that original?

Mr. KERR. I believe that is constitutional, and I do not suppose that any of the gentlemen who were upon the other side will deny that he did that.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this bill be limited to ten minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then let it be understood that there shall be five minutes in favor of the bill and five in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be so understood.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the communication sent by the Quartermaster-General to the Senate has not yet been read, and I request that it be now read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., February 13, 1888.

Washington, D. C., February 13, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the communication from Hon. J.
C. Spooner, chairman of the Senate Claims Committee, dated the 8th instant, calling for certain information regarding the use of the patented Sibley tent by the Army of the United States.

In reply to the several interrogatories, I beg to state—
1. That the tetal number of Sibley tents manufactured by the Quartermaster's Department from March I, 1858, to August 31, 1861, inclusive, was 3,583, upon 3,377 of which royalty has been paid to both owners of the patent (Burns and Sibley) at the rate of $5 for each tent. Royalty upon 206 tents, at $2.50 each, has been paid to Mr. Burns only.

2. No Sibley tents were used by the United States since the termination of the rebellion and prior to the expiration of the patent in 1873. Since 1873 the total number purchased and manufactured was 935.

3. The number of Sibley tents used by the United States during the rebellion was 43,958.

4. As stated in answer 1, the total number of Sibley tents manufactured prior to the war of the rebellion was 3,583, as follows:

to the war of the rebellion was 3,583, as follows:
1858	1,449
1859	1,184
1861	206
Total	3.583

Note.—The number of tents manufactured from September 1 to 3, both dates inclusive, can not be given owing to the fact that returns of articles manufactured were rendered only at the end of each month.

The total number of tents manufactured during the month of September, 1861, can not be ascertained. The number manufactured at the Schuylkill arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., during the month of September, 1861, was twenty-four.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have but a single suggestion to make based upon that statement. It is obvious that if this bill becomes a law, and a recovery is had, the amount recovered will be a little rising $104,000. It seems that no Sibley tents were manufactured after the war for the use of the Army, so it may be assumed that it was chiefly during the four years of the war that this tent was used. During the preceding four years the whole number of such tents used for the Army was 3,583, and there was a payment made to the parties owning the patent of the royalty on that number, amounting to some $16,000 or $17,000. Now it is obvious taking the most conitable view of this matter, that inceit is obvious, taking the most equitable view of this matter, that inasmuch as General Sibley was connected with the great movement, the late rebellion, which resulted in the increased demand for the use of these tents by the Army, he should be entitled to recover only upon the state of things which would have existed had not that rebellion occurred.

So that in fairness and equity, under any circumstances, the recovery, instead of being for the sum of $104,000, should not exceed one-half of the sum paid during the preceding four years, which would make the amount a little more than $8,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, you do not think that this man ought to be paid for taking steps to enlarge his business? [Laughter.]
Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. I think that the bill as it now stands ought not to pass.

Mr. SHAW. Does not this bill provide only for a reference of the matter to the Court of Claims?

Mr. LANHAM. Let us have a vote.
Mr. O'FERRALL. I believe I have five minutes remaining, and I ield that time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb]. [A pause.] The gentleman from Alabama does not desire to occupy the time-Mr. LANHAM. Let us have a vote; there are other bills on the

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL], that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not now in order, as the question is being taken on another motion.

The question being again taken on the motion of Mr. O'FERRALL, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, there were—ayes 46, noes 58.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. O'FERRALL and Mr. KERR were appointed.

The tellers proceeded to count. Before the result was announced,
Mr. LANHAM said: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a quorum in the House. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be withdrawn for the present, not to lose its place on the Calendar, and that we may proceed with other business.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If any arrangement can be made by which there may be a vote some time on the bill, either in the committee or in the House, I shall be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. KERR. I have no desire to prevent a yea-and-nay vote whenever it may come.

Mr. TAULBEE. I suggest it be agreed that the previous question be ordered on the third reading and the passage of the bill, and that then the bill go over.

Mr. KERR. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us order the previous question on the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us order the previous question on the bill.
Mr. KERR and others. Oh, no.
Mr. LANHAM. I renew my request.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, not to lose its place on the Calendar.
Mr. O'FERRALL. I shall object to that.
Mr. CUTCHEON. We did not hear the proposition submitted by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas requests that this bill be passed over, not to lose its place on the Calendar. Is there objection to that request?

Several members objected. Mr. LANHAM. I have made the proposition in the interest of other business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. KERR. I do not object to the bill being laid aside. The gentleman from Virginia insists on the point of no quorum. I have no objection to the bill being passed over.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the result of the count by the tellers ought to be announced.

Mr. O'FERRALL. As I understand, the laying aside of the bill under the circumstances means its total defeat, and I can not consent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order while the committee is Mr. KERR. How does the vote stand?

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has yet voted.
Mr. HOLMAN. Has the result been announced?
The CHAIRMAN. It has not been. Unless there is a quorum, the Chair sees no necessity for making the announcement. The Chair will, however, state for the information of the committee that the ayes are 56, and the noes 68.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make a parliamentary suggestion. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. KILGORE. I submit that when the Committee of the Wholo finds itself without a quorum, it must proceed to call the roll.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the committee rise, my object being to avoid a roll-call, which, if a quorum should not appear, would prevent a session this evening.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to call attention to some authorities on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, that the committee rise, is in

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Under what rule of the House is that motion in order

The CHAIRMAN. A motion that the committee rise is always in order, just as a motion to adjourn is always in order in the House.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Under what rule?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the rule read, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. KILGORE. The point I make is this—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. Enloe reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (S. 518) for the relief of the legal and personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SAMOA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States,

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As supplementary to my previous messages on the subject, I have now the honor to transmit a report from the Secretary of State relating to affairs in GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 1, 1889.

To the President:

As the question of German action and American rights in Samoa is under consideration by the Congress, I beg leave to transmit herewith, with the view of their being laid before Congress, copies of certain correspondence touching affairs in Samoa, which has taken place since January 30, the date of your last message to Congress on the subject.

These consist of a telegram to this Department from Mr. Blacklock, the vice-consul of the United States at Apia, dated January 31, and the paraphrase of my telegraphic instruction of the same date to our minister at Berlin, of which a copy was also sent to the chargé d'affaires of the United States at London, and my note of the same date to Count Arco-Valley.

To-day I was waited upon by the German minister at this capital, who read me a note from his Government, which I transcribed from his dictation, and now inclose a copy of its text.

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

T. F. BAYARD.

Washington, February 1, 1889. BAYARD, Secretary, Washington:

AUCKLAND, January 31, 1889.

German consul declares Germany at war with Mataafa, and Samoa under martial law. BLACKLOCK.

JANUARY 31, 1889.

Mr. Bayard instructed the minister of the United States at Berlin to inform the German Government that advices from Apia stated that the German consul had declared Germany to be at war with Mataafa and Samoa to be under martial law.

Mr. Bayard informed Mr. Pendleton that the German minister at this capital, under instructions of Prince Bismarck, had already acquainted this Government of the declaration of war by Germany against Mataafa, and had accompanied the notification with the statement that Germany would of course abide by the agreements with America and England touching Samoa, and observe, under all circumstances, the rights of those Governments established by treaty. But in view of the advices from Apia Mr. Bayard instructed Mr. Pendleton to say that this Government assumed that the German officials in Samoa would be instructed carefully to refrain from interference with American citizens and property there, since no declaration of martial law could extend German jurisdiction so as to include control of American citizens in Samoa. Such a pretension could not be recognized or conceded by this Government.

[Communication by Count Arco-Valley to Secretary of State, under instruction of the Prince Chancellor.]

When the state of war was declared against Mataafa, the commander of the German squadron issued a proclamation by which the foreigners established in Samoa were subjected to martial law. International law would to a certain extent not prevent such a measure, but as Frince Bismarck is of the opinion that our military authority has gone too far in this instance, the military commander has received telegraphic orders to withdraw the part of his proclamation concerning foreigners.

In negotiation with Mataafa our consul at Samoa has asked that the administration of the islands of Samoa might be temporarily handed over to him, which demand, not being in conformity to our previous promises regarding the neutrality and independence of Samoa, Mr. Knappe has been ordered by telegram to withdraw immediately his command.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 31, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that this morning I received a telegram dated this day at Auckland, from Mr. Blacklock, the United States vice-consulat Apia, as follows:

"AUCKLAND, January 31, 1889.

"BAYARD, Washington:

"German consul declares Germany at war with Mataafa, and Samoa under martial law.

And not knowing what construction might be given to his authority by the German consul at Samoa under such proclamation of martial law, I deemed it expedient at once to communicate with our minister at Berlin, informing him of the precise language of the telegram from Mr. Blacklock, and stating that a declaration of a state of war by the German Empire against Mataafa and his party in Samoa had been previously communicated through you, and that Prince Bismarck in his instruction to you also stated that the German Government would "of course abide by the agreement with America and England with respect to Samoa, and pay due regard under all circumstances to the rights of those powers as established by treaty."

Our minister at Berlin was therefore instructed to make it known at the German foreign office that the United States assumes that German officials in Samoa would in this sense be instructed scrupulously to abstain from all interference with American citizens and their property in Samoa, and that no increase or expansion of German jurisdiction over American citizens or their property would be caused by the German declaration of martial law, nor would such jurisdiction be recognized or conceded by the United States.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

BAYARD.

Count Arco-Valley, etc.

The SPEAKER. The message and accompanying papers will be re-ferred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed; and, together with the accompanying papers, which are brief, will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6217) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture;
A bill (H. R. 9040) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.
Mr. KILGORE. I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

QUESTION OF ORDER.

Mr. KILGORE. When the House was in Committee of the Whole House a division showed there was no quorum present, when, instead of complying with the rule which required the committee to rise necessarily and go into the House and have the roll called and the absentees noted, instead of complying with that rule of the House in calling the roll, the committee rose on motion—

The SPEAKER. This is not a question for the present occupant of the chair to decide. The Speaker does not preside in the Committee of the Whole House. The rules require him to call some other gentleman to the chair.

JOHN W. ROBINSON.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 317) for the relief of John W. Robinson and to put the same upon its passage at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill and report be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing on the said rolls and records against John W. Robinson, late of Company A, One hundred and tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; and, when so restored, that the said John W. Robinson be restored to all rights suspended or lost by said record.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have a statement from the gentleman from Kentucky, as I see the report is quite lengthy.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The report shows all the facts. I know
Mr. Robinson well. I know he is a worthy citizen. He did valuable service.

Mr. COBB. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LAIRD) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. LAIRD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 317) for the relief of John W. Robinson, submit the following report:

The committee find from the evidence that John W. Robinson was enrolled August 12, 1862, to serve three years in Company A, One hundred and tenth Illinois Infantry Volunteers. On December 31, 1862, he was reported "Absent without leave; supposed to be captured October 8, 1862." In February, 1863, he is borne as "Deserted near Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1852." Prisoners-of-war records show him "Absent from Camp Wallace, Ohio, without leave," and no date is given. A parole on file in the Pension Office shows this soldier to have been captured and paroled October 16, 1862.

It is further shown by the testimony in this case that as soon as the claimant was physically able he made his way home and there remained. He says he was never exchanged, and he has filed his affidavit to that effect. It appears that the War Department regarded the soldiers captured in Kentucky during October, 1852, as exchanged without specific act on the part of the individual men after January, 1853; but it would be a severe construction of the ruling to assume that every enlisted man who went home after the release by parole should know that he and his fellow-captives had been exchanged constructively and in a body without any of them being present.

This charge of desertion should be removed.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, January 31, 1888.

Washington, January 31, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to return House bill 317, Fiftieth Congress, first session, authorizing the removal of the charge of desertion against John W. Robinson, Company A, One hundred and tenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, transmitted by the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and in compliance with instructions to report as follows:

John W. Roberson (or Robinson) was enrolled August 12, 1862, to serve three years, in Company A, One hundred and tenth Illinois Volunteers, and on muster-roll of company, dated December 31, 1862, is reported "Absent without leave, supposed to be captured October 8, 1862." on roll for January and February, 1863, he is borne as "Deserted near Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1862," and his name is dropped from all subsequent rolls of the company, which was retained in service until June 8, 1865.

On records of prisoners of war on file in this office his name appears with remark, "Absent from Camp Wallace (Ohio) without leave;" but the date of such absence or the date and place of his capture and parole is not stated.

In May, 1883, certain papers were presented to this office by the Commissioner of Pensions in the case of this soldier, of which papers the following is a synopsis, the originals having been returned to the Pension Office, with decision that the "charge of desertion can not be removed," to wit:

1. An original parole, dated Headquarters Sixteenth Georgia Battalion, Barboursville, Ky., October 16, 1862, to the effect that Robinson had that day been captured and paroled.

2. A receipt dated Barracks No. 1, Louisville, Ky., November 4, 1862, signed by D. S. Tallerday, captain Thirty-eighth Ohio Volunteers, commanding Barracks No. 1, "for an old sorrel horse and an old saddle and bridle."

3. A statement by Robinson to the effect that the horse turned over by him was purchased by him after his parole to aid him in reaching his home: that he was never exchanged or released from said parole; that he returned to his home in Illinois as

GEORGE W. DURFEE.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the name of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] was called at the last session of the committee, and a request was made that his name be passed over, retaining his right to call up a bill, to which request the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD] objected, and afterward withdrew the objection.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is correct.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I now ask consideration of the bill (S. 3052) granting an increase of pension to George W. Durfee.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Durfee, late private of Company I, First Regiment New York Volunteer Dragoons; this act to take effect from its passage, and the pension hereby granted to be in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

It very clearly appears from the Senate report in this case, which is hereto annexed and made a part hereof, that the soldier, after a long and dangerous service, received a gunshot wound, the ball passing through the upper and outer portion of his left lung, so injuring the axillary nerves as to render his left arm almost entirely useless, and that also a disease of the head resulted from such wound; that he is wholly disabled for manual labor. He is now receiving a pension of $30 per month.

While the soldier does not now require the constant attendance of an assistant, the committee believe that he is fairly entitled to receive a larger sum than that he is now receiving; and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment, striking out the word "fifty," in the fifth line, and inserting the words "forty-five" in place thereof.

SENATE REPORT.

SENATE REPORT.

Claimant enlisted in Company I, First New York Volunteer Dragoons, July 31, 1862, and was mustered out of service June 30, 1865. His company participated in forty-two engagements, and claimant was wounded at Newtown, Va., August II, 1864. He was granted a pension of $8 per month from July 1, 1865; $18 per month from April 2, 1873; $24 per month from March 3, 1833, and $39 per month from May 26, 1887.

The present claim is for an increase of pension to $72 per month, on account of gunshot wound of left lung and resulting disease of heart, disabilities for which he is already pensioned.

In affidavit filed May 8, 1867, Dr. Benjamin F. Kneeland, late a surgeon of the Nineteenth New York Volunteer Cavalry and One hundred and thirtieth New York Volunteer Infantry, testifies that while in the line of his duty near Newtown, Va., claimant received a wound by a ball passing through the upper and outer portion of his left lung, so injuring the axillary nerves as render his arm almost entirely useless.

town, Va., claimant received a wound by a ball passing through the upper and outer portion of his left lung, so injuring the axillary nerves as render his arm almost entirely useless.

In affidavit filed July 10, 1876, Dr. Kneeland testifies that owing to general debility arising from injuries received in the service, claimant is wholly disabled for manual labor.

In affidavit filed July 10, 1876, R. A. Britton, late a captain of Company H. First New York Volunteer Dragoons, testifies that claimant is in bad health, and entirely disabled for manual labor by reason of a gunshot wound of his left lung, received in the service.

In affidavit filed March 5, 1887, Dr. D. E. Blackman, of Chautanqua County, New York, testifies that claimant has a gunshot wound in the left lung between the spine and left shoulder, causing the upper portion of both lungs to become solidified, and that he is also suffering from disease of heart.

In affidavit filed March 5, 1887, Erastus Brown, of Chautanqua County, New York, testifies that claimant is not able to work at his trade as a watch-maker in consequence of a gunshot wound of his lungs, and that he is wholly incapacitated for the performance of manual labor.

In affidavit filed March 5, 1887, C. H. Martin, of Chautanqua County, New York, testifies that claimant is not able to work at his trade as a watch-maker in consequence of a gunshot wound of his lungs, and that he is wholly incapacitated for the performance of manual labor.

In affidavit filed March 5, 1887, Dr. J. E. Caneen, of Chautanqua County, New York, testifies that claimant is suffering from a gunshot wound through the left lung, causing the upper portion of said lungs to be solidified, and that he also has atrophy of the heart, with feeble circulation of blood, and that he is totally disabled for manual labor.

Rufus Scott, late lieutenant-colonel, and James Lemon, late captain of claimant's company, testify to the origin of gunshot wound in the service and to the meritorious character of claimant as a soldier.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES WAGEMANN.

Mr. MANSUR called up for consideration the bill (S. 1153) for the relief of Charles Wagemann.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Wagemann, late a private in Company E, Seventh Missouri Cavalry, at the rate of $24 per month; said pension to be in lieu of that which he now receives.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1153) for the relief of Charles Wagemann, have considered the same, and now report:

We adopt the Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

We adopt the Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant, Charles Wagemann, while private of Company E, Seventh Regiment Missouri Cavalry, was thrown from his horse on a bridge near Lexington, Mo., the 14th July, 1862, and was run over by several horses of his company before a halt could be ordered, in consequence of which he suffered injuries in his head, back, and body, for which he was pensioned at $4 per month from November 7, 1862, which was increased to $8 per month from September 3, 1879. His pension was afterward reduced to its original amount. The claimant now asks the passage of a bill granting him a pension of $24 per month, alleging a disability equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot.

The claimant alleges that at the medical examination which resulted in reducing his pension he was not examined as to his serious disabilities—the injuries to his spine, and rupture—but only as to his hearing and eyesight; the board assuming that he had recovered from his spinal trouble, and so reporting. In support of his claim to continued disability, testimony is given by a number of physicians of his section, who have treated and examined him. One of these, Dr. Wesley Humphrey, deposes under date of June 23, 1887;

"I resided in Moberly, Mo., from the fall of 1878 till February, 1886, and know Charles Wagemann well, being his family physician, and know all about his physical condition. I also thoroughly examined him two or three times for pension, I being at the time president and member of the board of medical examiners at Moberly, Mo. My record is on file at Washington in his case, to which I refer you.

"As I knew Mr. Wagemann, he was myopic, and had a permanent injury to back, and my opinion is, and has been, that the hernia, both scrotal and inguinal, was caused at the time of injury to back, for which he was pensionable, and that it is permanent. I have not examined Mr. Wagemann since February,

Drs. George W. Weems and G. W. Fairgrieve, practicing physicians of Moberly, Mo., on the 24th of June, 1887, testify:

"We have this day thoroughly examined the said Charles Wagemann, and find him as regards vision myopic, resulting from concussion and compression of skull occurring many years ago, also evidence of trephining having been done some time ago. On the right side we find a scrotal hernia, and on the left a direct inguinal. We find great inability to retain urine, also inability to control the evacuation from rectum. We find greattenderness along the spine, particularly about the region from third lumbar to fifth dorsal vertebra. We find memory and hearing very deficient, resulting in our opinion from injuries received to head. In conclusion, will state that his disabled condition is permanent as to injury of head and back, and hernia."

Testimony in the same direction is also given by Drs. S. W. Holt and W. S. Austin, physicians of claimant's home, all showing a case of serious disability, and that the flippant judgment of Medical Examiner Morgan, "Claimant is probably suffering in a slight degree from lumbago, consequent upon the injury of back, for which he is pensioned; rate should be reduced to one-half for injury of back and head," and on which the reduction of pension was made, was not justified by the facts of the case.

In addition to the medical testimony herein given, a large number of the citizens of Moberly protest against the apparent injustice was done in reducing his pension, and that his condition, as sworn to by reputable physicians, justifies the committee in reporting favorably upon the bill and recommending its passage, which is hereby done.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CATHERINE M. LEE.

Mr. MACDONALD called up for consideration the bill (S. 1320) granting a pension to Catherine M. Lee.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Scoretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Catherine M. Lee, a volunteer nurse in the late war, giving her, during life, the sum of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Lynch) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S.1320) granting a pension to Catherine M. Lee, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

That the applicant was an army nurse in the hospital at the Jarvis Military Hospital, in Baltimore, Md. She served from July, 1864, until July 25, 1865, when she was honorably discharged from the service, the war being over and the hospital being then discontinued. She is now over sixty years old, feeble, and unable to work for a living. She is also without means.

The case was once before referred to the committee of the Senate and a report was made thereon by Senator BLAIR, now and then a member of that committee, recommending the passage of a similar bill for her relief. This reports hereby adopted and approved in this case, and passage of the present bill is accordingly recommended, amended, in line 6, so as to read "$12" instead of "$25."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. KOCH.

Mr. McCOMAS called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2428) granting a pension to William H. Koch.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of William H. Koch, late a sergeant of Company E, One hundred and twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $72 per month, on account of wounds received in the line of duty while a volunteer in said war.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2428) granting an increase of pension to William H. Koch, submit the following

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2428) granting an increase of pension to William H. Koch, submit the following report:

William H. Koch was sergeant of Company E, One hundred and twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. At the battle of Antietam received injuries very similar to those of General John C. Black. While aiming and getting ready to fire, a bull passed through both his arms. Several members of the committee inspected the injured arms.

Dr. J. M. Porter, his physician, says:

"That during the past seventeen years he has frequently inspected the lesions, which have enabled me to watch and estimate the increasing amount of failure in the use of his upper limbs. A portion of the ulm of left forearm was shot away and otherwise so much shattered as to oblige the surgeon to excise other fragments of the same bone, leaving that forearm for near half its length with only one bone. The same missile so tore and lacerated important muscles and nerves as to cause great waste of tissue.

"This hand and wrist are much wasted and shrunken up for want of nerve and food supply. Flexion and extension in the left arm are much limited. A ball also passed through the elbow-joint of the right arm, and some way the use of this arm and hand has gradually become very much impaired from atrophy of the interphalangeal muscles, and the consequent loss of grip. Apart from the maiming, destruction, and loss of important parts of his organism or body, his disability in the use of his upper extremities is mainly due to traumatic lesions of the nerve, and which before the wounding supplied these parts with most important functions, motion, sensation, and natrition, all of these offices being now poorly performed."

We have every reason to believe from inspection of the maimed arms that this injury is progressive, and can readily believe, as we are emphatically told by many competent witnesses, that William H. Koch has no use of his arms, and therefore request that the bill be reported back with t

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES J. ESTY.

Mr. McKINNEY called up for consideration the bill (S. 2665) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty. The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles J. Esty, late a private in Company H, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2865, having considered the same, report as follows:

This bill passed the Senate in the Forty-ninth Congress, and has again passed the Senate, the report being as follows:

"The claimant, Charles J. Esty late a private in Company H, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers, made application for a pension to the Pension Office, but such application was rejected on the ground that the claimant has not been disabled in a pensionable degree by alleged crysipelas since date of filing his claim.

"It appears, however, from the reports of the board of examining surgeons, June 27, 1883, that they rated him at one-fourth total for crysipelas, and for deafness one-eighth. Another board, on August 5, 1885, rated him for loss of second finger and forefinger; had crysipelas of both feet, and was obliged to use crutches.

"The affidavit of James M. Brown. M. D. who treated the claimant is also "The affidavit of James M. Brown, M. D., who treated the claimant, is also filed with the papers, under date of January 5, 1886. He states that he has frequently treated him, and that his erysipelations condition almost disables him from his occupation as a farmer, and that he certainly deserves aid from the from his occupation as a farmer, and that he certainly deserves aid from the Government.

"Your committee are disposed to give the claimant the benefit of any doubt there may be in tracing the present crysipelas and its effects to the service, and therefore report the present bill, which simply places him on the pension-roll, subject to future examination, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was likewise favorably reported to the House in the Forty-ninth Congress, the report being much fuller than that of the Senate committee. It appears conclusively from that report that in the fall of 1862 soldier had a very severe attack of erysipelas, resulting in blood poisoning, at Falmouth, Va. It is also shown by medical and other testimony that he has been troubled, more or less, with an erysipelatous condition since discharge, the most serious disability being in the feet and legs, although the hands are affected.

While the case is not one without some degree of doubt, yet the equities are largely with the soldier, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recom-

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN (when his name was called), Mr. Chairman, I have a bill that has been favorably reported, but the report has not yet been sent up. I would request, therefore, permission to call it up on the next meeting of the committee, and will forego the right to call up a bill at this session. I ask that my name be passed over informally, not to lose its place.

There was no objection.

I. T. HOUZE.

Mr. McRAE called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11571) granting a pension to I. T. Houze.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of I. T. Houze, who served in Captain Gunn's company, from the State of Alabama, Indian war, 1836, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11571) granting a pension to Isaac T. Houze, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant served in a company of Alabama Volunteers in the Florida Indian war of 1836. His company was commanded by Captain Gunn, and he served in said war from June 1 to September 1, 1836, and was honorably discharged at the latter date.

He is now an aged and infirm man, and in need of relief, and your committee believe he should have a service pension for his honorable services rendered more than fifty years ago.

The passage of the bill is recommended, amended, however, by striking out the name "I.T. Houze" in the caption and in line 5 of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Isaac T. Howze."

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill and another like it for E. C. Paschal, the comrade of this applicant, for $12 a month. The bill for Mr. Paschal was called up for me by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. KILGORE], and at the suggestion and motion of a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee the rate was increased to $20 per month. These men, alike deserving, ought to They are about the same age and circumstanced alike These men, alike deserving, ought to be treated alike.

I therefore move an increase in this case to twenty. The name should be Isham instead of Isaac.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. MERRIMAN called up the bill (H. R. 10216) granting a pension to William Fowler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Fowler, at the rate of $20 per month.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:
William Fowler was a captain in Company C, Twelfth New York Volunteers, and at the battle of Bull Run was wounded in the shin of left leg, and had the big toe of the left foot shot away and two next toes broken. Afterwards he resultsted and was mustered in as captain of the same regiment.

By reason of incapacity to march, on account of injury to his foot and leg, he was made chief of ambulances, and during service as such incurred, while riding on horseback, as his duty required, a partial hernia, which he did not know to be serious until about a month after his discharge in 1863. Since that time he has been greatly troubled with it and with the wounds in his foot, especially during the last fifteen years, in which time he has grown to be very large, rendering his weight on his foot a cause of pain, and any exertion liable to cause his intestine to protrude through the hernia.

He was pensioned at the rate of $5 per month for the wound in the leg, but his claim for the foot and hernia was rejected on the ground that at date of rejectien, February 5, 1884, no pensionable disability of foot and hernia had existed until April 1, 1881, the day after the filing of his application. September 20, 1887, the case was reopened, but finally rejected: nine affidavits from as many reputable physicians and surgeons, all of whom testified to his disability from wounded foot and hernia and his incapacity to follow his trade as a builder, were filed when the case was reopened. Some of these physicians and surgeons have frequently fitted him with trusses; others have attended him personally; all of them have known him well for years and have examined his physical condition. If their testimony is true, he is in a very bad way and should have the relief provided in the bill, which ought to pass.

JAMES METCALF.

Mr. MOFFITT called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11311) granting a pension to James Metcalf.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James Metcalf, father of James A. Metcalf, late of Company E, Second New York Cavalry Volunteers, said pension to date from January 13, 1865, and at the rates per month as is established by and pursuant to the pension laws and the several amendments thereto, and the provisions of the same.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

James Metcalf is the father of James A. Metcalf, who died in the service January 13, 1865, while serving as private in Company E, Second Regiment New York Cavalry. The mother of the soldier applied for pension, but her claim has been rejected on the ground that she was not dependent upon the soldier at the time of his death. This action was based upon the report of a special examiner, from which it appears that at the time of the son's death the father was possessed of a farm, probably worth $1,200, and had an income from two 2-horse teams employed in hauling. The farm was not very productive, and only partly paid for at that time. In fact, the son's bounty aided in the payment on the farm.

The father has been a sufferer from asthma and other disabilities for many years. He, being uneducated, was compelled to rely much on the son in the business of teaming. Ill health, and consequent inability to attend to the business properly, gradually reduced the income from all sources, and finally the property had to be disposed of. For years mother and father have been dependent upon others not legally bound to aid in their support. The mother died July 4, 1888, whereupon the father applied for pension. His claim, although not yet formally rejected, must be rejected upon the ground of non-dependence upon the son at the time of his death.

Present dependence of the claimant being fully shown, your committee, in view of the many precedents in this class of cases, report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "volunteers," in line 6.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the bill be reported again, so that the effect

MARY REYNOLDS.

Mr. FINLEY called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9462) restoring Mary Reynolds, widow of Lewis Reynolds, to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore and place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Reynolds, widow of Lewis Reynolds, late of Company D, Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The soldier, Lewis Reynolds, was a private in Company I, Seventh Kentucky Volunteers, from the 3d of September, 1861, to the 14th day of September, 1863, when discharged for disability. He applied at once for pension, and his name was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $3 per month from the date of dis-was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $3 per month from the date of discharge.

He died March 6, 1875, and upon application his widow, the claimant, was pensioned at the rate of $3 per month from the date of his death. In 1880 her name was dropped from the rolls upon evidence obtained through a special examination, which showed that the soldier's death was due to an acute attack of pneumonia and not to a chronic disease of the lungs, as had been shown by the testimony upon which the pension had been granted to the widow.

The claim was again specially examined in 1885, and from a careful reading of the report of that examination, as well as of other evidence in the case, your committee are of the opinion that the physician, Dr. Green, who attended the soldier during his last sickness, was too ignorant to discriminate between hectic fever and pneumonia. The former always accompanies consumption in its last stage, and this the physician denominated pneumonia.

The certificate of Surgeon A. B. Corant, dated September 14, 1863, upon which soldier was discharged from the military service, states:

"I certify that I have carefully examined the said Lewis Reynolds, of Captain Wilson's company, and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of chronic diarrhea and debility resulting from intermittent fever, and also loss of the right eye from small-pox. He is unfit for the Invalid Corps."

fever, and also loss of the right eye from small-pox. He is united to Corps."

The certificates of the examining surgeons of the Pension Bureau and the testimony obtained by that office, as well as that filed by the claimant, clearly establish the fact that from the date of the soldier's discharge to that of his death he was a diseased man, affected by a paralysis of his right side and arm, particularly affecting his right chest, and disabling him for labor.

Dr. James W. Jackson, who treated the soldier in his last illness, testified before Special Examiner Hopkins that when he was first called to treat soldier he found him with pneumonia of both lungs; that he was in general appearance a man of delicate health, thin-visaged, rather thin in flesh, and minus the ordinary vigor of robust manhood to throw off or withstand the attack of pneumonia. Special Examiner Hopkins, in his report to the office, stated:

"T believe the widow is entitled to be restored to the rolls, and I accordingly recommend the case for admission."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the bill read again. I am not sure

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the bill read again. I am not sure that it does not give arrears.

The bill was again read.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to inquire whether that bill would not draw arrears?

Mr. DOCKERY. the pension laws." It is "subject to the provisions and limitations of Mr. STRUBLE. If the proposition is to restore her name to the pension-rolls, as I understand the law, when the names are restored to the rolls, the parties draw pensions from the time they were dropped.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was the reason why I made the inquiry. I had the same impression that the gentleman from Iowa has.

Mr. STRUBLE. I think that bill had better be amended so as to make it clear.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer such an amendment? Mr. STRUBLE. I would suggest that it be made "from and after the passage of the same."

Mr. CHEADLE. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. Certainly there can be no good reason for its adoption. If the name was improperly dropped from the roll and is restored, if it carries with it any arrearage, it ought to carry it.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the gentleman from Indiana will remember that the universal practice of the House for many years, where relief has been given by the intervention of Congress, has been to make the rate from the date of passage, whatever it was. I will move an amendment to strike out the words "to restore and," and let it read "place upon the pension-roll."

Mr. STRUBLE. I will withdraw the amendment I offered if the gentleman from Tennessee intends to make one of like import.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States" and insert "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY (when Mr. MORRILL's name was called) said: The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Morrill] is absent in the performance of a duty well understood by the House, and I ask that his name be passed without prejudice to his right to call up a bill.

MRS. LOU GOBRIGHT M'FALLS.

Mr. NELSON called up for consideration the bill (S. 1757) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of $20 per month heretofore granted and now allowed to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls, widow of Capt. Thaddeus B. McFalls, be, and the same hereby is, increased to the sum of $40 per month; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to her the sum last mentioned per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of the claimant from $20 per month, the amount she is now receiving, to $40 per month. The bill was favorably reported upon and passed the Senate at the Forty-ninth Congress, and has also been favorably reported and has passed the Senate at the present session. The Senate report accompanying the bill says:

"Mrs. McFalls is the widow of Thaddeus B. McFalls, late a chaplain of the United States Army, with the rank of captain. She is now receiving a pension of $20, according to the rank of her husband when he died in the service. During the war he not only discharged the duties of chaplain, but was very efficient as a nurse in the different hospitals of Washington, where by contact with discase and the hardships of the duties he performed the disease commenced which terminated his life.

"Captain McFalls, in addition to his regular duties as chaplain, did faithful service as nurse in various hospitals and was, at different times, in fact, in charge of three hospitals in the city of Washington.

"The efficient service performed by Captain McFalls in this way, outside of his regular duties, seems to make this case an exception, and your committee reaffirm their former action and recommend the passage of the bill."

It is shown by evidence before your committee that at the beginning of Mr. McFalls's services he was a strong, hardy man, weighing from 180 to 200 pounds, but by constant contact with sick, wounded, and dying soldiers for so long a time he was reduced to a mere shadow, which terminated in death.

The committee report adversely on the bill, and recommend that it do lie on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that this is an adverse report. Mr. NEISON. The committee go on and state all the facts of the case, showing a clear case where the party is entitled to an increase, and then afterwards say it is an adverse report. It is the most singular report I have ever seen. Everything in it except the last line is favorable. [Laughter.]

Mr. OWEN. Let us have the report read again.

The report was again read.

Mr. NELSON. I can not account for that last sentence. The committee have as favorable a report as it is possible of the case, and then I think by some kind of an accident these words, that it is an adverse report, are added at the close. I move that the bill be favorably reported.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I would state that unless there is a constitutional quorum the bill will not pass to-night.

Mr. STRUBLE. Suppose there is a quorum without the constitu-

Mr. CHEADLE. Here is the action of our committee. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, after a careful hearing of all the facts, state what the report of the Senate committee had said and then report to this House adversely and that the bill lie upon the table. I think there is good reason, Mr. Chairman, why it should lie on the table, because the report itself shows that the claimant is now receiving pension at the highest rate known to the general law.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. CHEADLE. It is the highest pension known for the widow of a captain.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, for the widow of a captain. That is true.
Mr. CHEADLE. And I want to take just a few moments' time to say that you can not find, nor can any other living human being find, any reason in law why the widow of one soldier of the Union should receive a higher rating than should the widow of another soldier of the

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me? Mr. CHEADLE. I want to make one single I want to make one single statement further. There is nothing in that report to show why they should give an amount over and above the general law; not a single reason. More than that, I think all that the report has stated is true.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. STRUBLE (to Mr. CHEADLE). Is not this the same objection that you have raised to all reports favoring an increase of pension above the legal rate?

Mr. CHEADLE. I am only dealing with the case under considera-

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?
Mr. CHEADLE. Yes, sir.
Mr. NELSON. I am unwilling to have the time of the committee taken up with this bill unnecessarily, and I am always willing to meet a gentleman more than half way. I suggest, therefore, that we amend this bill, for the sake of compromise and harmony, and let it go at $30 per month.

Mr. CHEADLE. So far as I am concerned I shall not consent to

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota tell us what reason there is for giving this widow more than we give to the widow of a captain who fell in battle in the line of his duty?

Mr. NELSON. The reason, if the gentleman will allow me, is this: This officer was a chaplain in the Army. As such it was not incumbent on him to perform any other duty than that pertaining to his office; but he went outside of the sphere of his regular duty and took charge of three hospitals, and in addition to his duties as chaplain devoted his time and attention to the care of the sick—a very unusual thing in a chaplain; they generally confine themselves to things spiritual; but here was a chaplain who did what I wish to God more chaplains in the Army had done, a chaplain who looked after the temporal affairs of the soldiers. I remember very well (if the House will pardon a reminiscence of my army experience) that in the Fourth Wisconsin Regiment, of which I was an honored member [laughter], we had a chaplain who was a Universalist, and while some chaplains carried Bibles, that chaplain, A. Constantine Barry (the first superintendent of schools in the State of Wisconsin), carried a canteen of whisky, and when a poor soldier fell down he went to him and gave him a drink of that instead of a missionary tract.

Mr. STRUBLE. That is if he had any left. [Laughter.]

Mr. NELSON. Now I imagine that a chaplain who has such qualities is surely entitled to more consideration than an ordinary chaplain, and this report indicates that the chaplain in question here had something in him of the spirit of old Constantine Barry, of the Fourth Wisconsin-peace to his memory! Now, Mr. Chairman, by way of compromise, and to show our good will to chaplains of this kind, I suggest that we amend this bill and make the pension $30 a month instead of

Mr. MACDONALD. I suggest an additional amendment by way of compromise, that we strike out this man's name and insert Constan-omprofiles, that we strike out this man's hame and insert Constantine Barry's. [Laughter.]

Mr. NELSON. Oh, Constantine Barry has gone up where they pay better pensions than they do in this world.

Mr. MACDONALD. But has not he left a widow?

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, granting all that the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota has said, I ask him now in all candor what is that for increasing the payering of the widow in this case? reason is that for increasing the pension of the widow in this case? Because her husband as a chaplain went outside of his particular duty and performed other duties, shall we therefore give his widow a larger pension than is given to the widow of a man who died in the war in order that the Union might not perish?

Mr. NELSON. There is no occasion to argue the question if the gentleman will agree to the compromise I have suggested.

Mr. CHEADLE. This is only a companion piece to another case that was before this House a few evenings ago, in which it was sought to increase a pension from $50 to $100 a month; and I want to say to this House to-night in reference to that particular case, that at that time a member of this Congress was negotiating with that widow to rent her house at $150 a month, she to retain the piano; and she has a daughter who is a clerk in one of the Departments and is receiving a salary of not less than $1,000 a year. I say, Mr. Chairman, that so far as my influence is concerned this particular class legislation shall cease. Mr. NELSON. But the gentleman does not think I have any such

Mr. CHEADLE (continuing). Especially so when my position is backed up by the unanimous report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House.

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman insists on making the point of no quorum, I will withdraw the bill. Does he do that?

Mr. CHEADLE. I do, most assuredly.

Mr. NELSON. Then I will withdraw the bill and ask to substitute another.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will say to the gentleman that if he desires to have this bill go over to a full House I shall enter no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Can not it be reported to the House?

Mr. CHEADLE. Yes; with the order made that in the House the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Then let us have the bill reported back to the House with the previous question ordered upon the engrossment, third reading, and passage of the bill, and with the understanding that it shall be called up only in a full House. Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

NELSON] whether it is his purpose to call up this bill to-morrow?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; I do not want to interrupt the proceedings of the House. I merely desire to call up the bill on some favorable opportunity when it will not interfere with the general business of the House.

Mr. OWEN. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will resume the call of the roll.

Mr. NELSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I understand this arrangement is consented to.

The CHAIRMAN. The order as agreed upon between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will be entered, unless there is objection.

Mr. NELSON. And that means $30 a month instead of $40.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. NELSON. All right.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the order will

PERMELIA SMITH.

Mr. NICHOLS. I call up the bill (H. R. 10879) increasing the pension of Permelia Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Permelia Smith, widow of William M. Smith, a private in T. W. Armstrong's company, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, in the war of 1812, a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension of $12 per month as now allowed her by law.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The claimant is now in receipt of a pension at the rate of $12 per month. She is the widow of William M. Smith, who was a private in Maj. T. W. Armstrong's regiment, Twenty-fourth United States Infantry, in the war of IS12.

She is now nearly sixty years of age, in infirm health, and unable to labor for a support, and without means of any kind. These facts are certified to by prominent citizens of Liberty, Ky.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY WHITNEY.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5790) granting a pension to Mary Whitney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Whitney, widow of William E. Whitney, late a private in Company I, Twenty-first Michigan Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The husband of the claimant, William E. Whitney, was mustered into the service as a private of Company I, Veteran Michigan Infantry, July 29, 1864, and was discharged June 16, 1865. He was wounded in the line of duty at the siege of Savannah, Ga., December 13, 1854, in the knee-joint, which necessitated amputation. For this he was pensioned September 16, 1865, which pension was paid up to the time of his death, September 17, 1833.

The widow lived with her husband for over thirty years, is now over sixty years old, and has reared a family of children. She is now poor, and has no support save her labor, and her age should exempt her from work. The soldier was astrong and healthy man when he entered the service. His woundtroubled him from the time received until his end, and it is fair to presume that it shortened his life and was the cause of his death. As this is the case of an aged widow, who is very poor, it ought to receive the most favorable consideration. Her application for pension was rejected because it did not appear that death resulted directly from the amputation. Her husband left her to serve his country in the vigor of years and health. He returned to her with the loss of one leg, and health permanently impaired.

So far as she is concerned it is of no consequence whether the death was the direct or indirect result of his wounds. If amputated limbs and broken health enable a man to resist disease as if he was in health and not dismembered, also ought to have no relief. If, on the contrary, they tend to lower the tone of the constitution and impair the power to resist and to overcome disease, then she ought to have no relief. If, on the contrary, they tend to lower the tone of the constitution and impair the power to resist and to overcome disease, then she ought to have in. We recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I call up the bill (S. 3628) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Emma Biddle, widow of Charles J. Biddle, late captain of United States Infantry, transferred to a captaincy in the United States Regiment of Voltigeurs, Mexican war, and colonel of First Rifigs, Bucktails, of Pennsylvania, in the rebellion, and acting brigadier-general, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $20 to $45 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Bhiss) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8. 3628) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle, have considered the same, and report it back to the House, recommending its passage.

This committee, at the last session of the present Congress, reported favorably a bill increasing the pension of this claimant to $50 per month (H. R. 4074), which is now on the Calendar of the House. The facts in the case, and which warrant the increase of pension, are fully stated in the report accompanying said House bill, which report (No. 3030) is referred to and made a part hereof.

[House Report No. 3030, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4074) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Charles J. Biddle, who was a brave and distinguished officer both in the war with Mexico and in the war of the rebellion. His military history is given in the following communication from the Adjutant-General, United States Army:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, July 17, 1888.

Washington, July 17, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to submit herewith a letter from the Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives, dated the 10th instant, requesting for use of the committee a full military history of Charles J. Biddle, and report as follows:

The records of this office show that Charles J. Biddle was appointed eaptain of infantry February 16, 1847, assigned to Voltigeurs April 9, 1847, and received the brevet of major September 13, 1847, for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Chapultepec, Mexico.

He served with his regiment in Mexico to June, 1848, and as aid-de-camp to General Kearny, until honorably discharged, August 29, 1848.

Charles J. Biddle was mustered into service as colonel Thirteenth Pennsylvania Reserves, to date June 21, 1861, to serve three years.

Roll of field and staff, dated October 2, 1861 (first on file), reports him "colonel, present;" and roll dated October 31, 1861, "colonel, present, commanding first brigade, General Banks's division, till September 25, 1861, from August 28, 1861.

first brigade, General Banks's division, till September 25, 1861, from August 28, 1861."

Regimental return for September, 1861, reports him "colonel, present, commanding regiment," with remark: "Commanding first brigade, Banks's division, till September 24, when relieved in order to join General McCall's division; "for October, 1861, "colonel, present, commanding regiment," and for November, 1861, "colonel, absent on furlough since November 23."

He was honorably discharged on tender of resignation December 11, 1861, in special orders, Army of the Potomac.

His tender of resignation is as follows:

"Major-General McClellan,"

"Commanding Army of the Potomac and United States Army:

"General McClellan,"

"General in the Potomac and United States Army:

"General in the Potomac and United States army:

"In July last I was elected to tender to you my resignation as colonel of the First Rifle Regiment, Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Corps. In conformity with the Army Regulations (par. 1647) I state my reasons for so doing.

"In July last I was elected to the present Congress of the United States as the Representative of the Second Congressional district, Pennsylvania. At that time I was in command of two regiments of the reserve corps, which were first stationed on the southern border of Pennsylvania and afterwards occupied Cumberland, Md., and New Creek and Piedmont, Va.

"These places being within the limits of your command at that time, I had the honor to be twice thanked by you, once in your telegraphic order of July 18, and again in your order of July 19, for promptitude in the execution of your orders.

"The performance of these military duties prevented me from attending the Philadelphia.

"I have found myself strongly, indeed irresistibly, urged as a duty to my constituents to take my seat in Congress on the first Monday in December. Not without extreme reluctance, permit me to say, I now withdraw myself from your command, but I hold [Note,—This line missing in original from top of page] of the legislator and representative and those of the soldier are incompatible. For these reasons I now resign the commission of colonel which I hold from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"I have the honor to be, general, with the highest respect, your obedient servent."

"CHARLES J. BIDDLE,
"Colonel First Rifles, P. R. V. C.

"PHILADELPHIA, November 27, 1861."

Colonel Biddle declined an appointment as brigadier-general of volunteers in August, 1861, evidently for the same reason he subsequently tendered his resignation as colonel, his election as a member of Congress.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Colonel Biddle died September 28, 1873, at Philadelphia, of disease which had its origin in the Mexican war service. His widow, the claimant, is now pensioned at the rate of $20 per month. She is represented to the committee to be in needy circumstances, and her present pension is totally inadequate for her support.

The following statement concerning the services of Colonel Biddle during the rebellion is taken from a memoir of his life by Hon. John Cadwalader, read before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and published in book form in before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and published.

1874, namely:

"When the civil war broke out, in the spring of 1861, Major Biddle wrote to General Scott, then commander-in-chief, that he was ready to be again among his followers. He was one of the committee of public safety of Philadelphia, etc., and acted as prize commissioner in cases of naval capture, until he joined the army in the field on the first organization of the Pennsylvania volunteers. He was at first lieutenant-colonel, but soon became the colonel of a regiment which he brought in a very short time to a state of serviceable discipline. On the 29th of June, 1861, while in the field, he received intelligence of his nomination as a candidate for Congress at a special election to be held on July 2, only three days distant. three days distant.
"This was entirely unexpected. To the chairman of the local executive committee of his party he wrote at once that he was thankful for the nomination, an unsolicited honor, which had taken him wholly by surprise; that his presidit position was most congenial to him, but that he would not place his own interescence in opposition to the people's wish. He added, 'If elected I will greve as soon as I can quit the field without dishonor. Philadelphia would not expect me sconer. I will give no partisan pledges. I will try to do my duty in whatever sphere it may please God to place me.' He was elected by asmall majority. He then held a separate and important command, and did not feel at likerty to relinquish it in order to attend the special session of Congress, which began on July 4 and continued until the 6th of August, 1861. He remained in the field with the Army during the whole of that year's campaign. "On the 31st of August the President appointed him brigadier-general of volunteers. This appointment Colonel Biddle declined, as his continuance in fiftilitary service would be limited by his engagements to his constituents. He wrote, however, that he would continue to hold his colonelcy until the next meeting of Congress, and would not then quit the field if he found himself at the scene of active operations.

"He had been for some time before this offer of promotion in acting command of a brigade, of which he retained the command until it was decided, in the latter part of November, 1861, that the Army, including his regiment, should go into winter quarters. He then resigned his millitary commission, and in the month of December took his seat in Congress.

"On resigning the colonelcy he made an arrangement with his friend, General Andrew Porter, to go as a volunteer on his staff in case of an action. His friends knew that he gave up his commission with regret. The tendered commission of brigadier-general would have borne the same date with that of Meade, the companion of his boyhood."

In view of the valuable services of Colonel Biddle, as given above, your committee are of the opinio

During the reading of the report, Mr. PERKINS said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of he evidence embodied in this report be dispensed with, and that only the concluding recommendation of the committee be read.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no; let the entire report be read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. COBB. I desire to inquire whether this lady is now receiving a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. She is receiving a pension of $20 a month. Her husband was an acting brigadier-general during a portion of the war of the rebellion, having been an officer of the regular Army in the Mexican war. In view of the circumstances of the widow, the Senate passed a bill fixing the amount of this increased pension at $45 a month. The House committee reported a bill naming $50 as the amount; but because it was thought by some gentlemen that this widow should not receive more than $45 per month, I have asked that the Senate bill be passed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without detaining the committee more than a few moments, I wish to say a word in reference to this bill. Charles J. Biddle and I were companions from our youth until the time of his J. Biddle and I were companions from our youth until the time of his death. As a member of the Philadelphia bar he was an associate of mine. He was a most gallant man, who could not keep out of a war. He went into the Mexican war, and subsequently into the Union Army during the rebellion. After the war had begun, he was, to my very great disappointment, elected to Congress; for he was elected over me, he being a candidate on the Democratic ticket. At the time of his election he was at the head of his regiment in the Army. The consequence of his election was that, instead of my coming here to be with my present colleague, Judge Kelley, at the called session of 1861, my friend Charles J. Biddle was chosen.

Mr. COBB. Was this soldier, now deceased, elected to Congress as a Democrat?

a Democrat?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.
Mr. COBB. Then I have nothing more to say. [Laughter.]
Mr. KILGORE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is not a fact that the husband of this claimant resigned from the Army in 1861, was elected to Congress, and remained

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir. He did not resign to come to the extra session of Congress. The Army was moving, and he held his place. He did not resign until the Army had gone into winter quarters. He never came to the extra session.

Mr. KILGORE. Is it not a fact that he resigned in 1861, in time for the meeting of the regular session of Congress in that year—

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.
Mr. KILGORE. And that he never went into the Army afterward?
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. He did not go into the Army again.
Mr. KILGORE. Did he serve in Congress during all the remainder of the war of the war?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir. He came hereand served his term; but, fortunately for myself, I was elected over him to the Thirty-eighth Congress, very much to my satisfaction.

Mr. KILGORE. Ah! And he never went into the Army any more. Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir; but he had been through the Mexican war, in which he was distinguished beyond almost any other officer of his rank. He was named in the special orders of the great generals in that war. The seeds of disease, which finally resulted in his death, were implanted in his system at that time. He lingered on, a delicate man; but as I have said, he was so gallant that he could not keep out of a war for his country. not keep out of a war for his country. Mr. KILGORE. When did he die?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. He died about fifteen or sixteen years ago.

Mr. KILGORE. What was the matter with him? Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. He died in Philadelphia of diseas contracted during his service in the Mexican war originally. He died of lung disease, a lingering death; he died a hero.
Mr. COBB. Was he a Democrat when he died?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, a Democrat when he died. Mr. KILGORE. How much is this? Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It has been reduced from $50 to

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Twenty dollars.
Mr. KILGORE. How will it do to make it $30 and quit?
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.
Mr. KILGORE. Oh, yes. If he had served during the war instead of quitting the Army and going into politics—

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes, many times.

Mr. KILGORE. The report does not say that, according to my recollection, and I read the report the other day.

Mr. KILGORE. I think an amendment putting this at $30 would

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. KILGORE. Make it $40.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, put it at $40.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES G. SANDERS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11515) granting a pension to Charles G. Sanders.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the rules and regulations of the Pension Department, the name of Charles G. Sanders, late private in Company H, Twenty-second Illinois Infantry.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11515) granting a pension to Charles G. Sanders, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Charles G. Sanders, while serving as private in Company H., Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, lost the sight of the left eye by the explosion of a cap which soldier was snapping on a pistol used by some of the members of the company while on target practice in camp near Caseyville, Ill.

The fact of the injury is established by the records of the War Department. The claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the disability was not incurred in line of duty.

There were no orders issued in camp prohibiting the use of pistols or revolvers. The command was only partially furnished with muskets, the pistol in question being frequently used by different members of the company. It is not clearly shown by the evidence whether claimant had been furnished with a gun, but one thing is certain, and that is, he was engaged in target practice with others under the command of a commissioned officer when injured.

While the rejection of the claim may have been proper under the strict rules of the Department, yet your committee are of the opinion that, in the absence of any order against the use of pistols in target practice, the claimant should receive a pension for his disability contracted while perfecting himself in the duties required of a soldier, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY H. STACY.

Mr. OSBORNE called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3888) granting a pension to Mary H. Stacy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary H. Staey, widow of Bvt. Lieut. Col. M. H. Staey, late a captain in the Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 3888) granting a pension to Mary H. Stacy, submit the following report:

That the bill granting a pension to the beneficiary named herein was referred to the Committee on Pensions; that committee made a favorable report, which is hereto annexed and made part hereof. This committee, after carefully examining the papers, believe this to be a meritorious case, and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment striking out the word "fifty" in the seventh line, and inserting the word "thirty."

[House Report No. 3694, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.]
The record in the civil, naval, and military service of the United States of Byt. Lieut. Col. H. M. Stacy, late United States Army, the husband of Mary H.
Stacy, is specially meritorious.
At nineteen years of age he accompanied General Beale on his United States survey across the continent to California, returning by ship via Calcutta and Cape of Good Hope. He then joined the United States steam-ship Crusader as master's mate, and subsequently served in the Coast Survey. Upon the outbreak of the rebellion he was appointed first lieutenant Twelfth United States Infantry, May 14, 1861, and assisted in the organization of the first battalion at Fort Hamilton, accompanying it to the Peninsula. At Gaines's Mill he received a severe wound, carrying the bullet in his side until, and causing, his death. As adjutant of his battalion he served at second Bull Run, Antietam, and Fredericksburgh. Being temporarily disabled from field service by a severe fall from his horse he was on duty at Fort Hamilton in 1863, and assisted, with his company, in quelling the draft riots in New York in July of that year.

Returning to the field, he participated in the Wilderness campaign, and was present in all the battles of the Fifth Corps from the Rappahannock to the James. As aid-de-camp to General Ayres he served in front of Petersburgh and at the Weldon Road, winning two brevets for special gallantry in battle.

Promoted captain Twelfith Infantry August 19, 1864, he was appointed commissary of musters, Second Army Corps, and saw hard service as aid-de-camp under Generals Hancock and Humphreys at Boydton Plank Road, Hatcher's Run, etc., and throughout the closing campaign, and was again brevetted for distinguished services.

From 1864 to 1869 he served on the staffs of Generals Canby and Emory as aid-de-camp, and then was ordered with his regiment to the Pacific coast, where he served for fourteen vears in California, Nevada, and Arizona. After that he was stationed at Plattsburgh and Fort Ontario.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Stacy died at Fort Ontario, N. Y., February 12, 1886, from paralysis, caused by the wounds he received in the service of the Government while on duty, leaving his wife and three children in needy circumstances. They are at present dependent upon the small pension allowed under existing laws for support.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass. They append the official record of his millitary services.

JOHN EBERT.

Mr. OUTHWAITE called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10337) granting a pension to John Ebert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted. etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Ebert, late a private in Company A, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. Thompson, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10337) granting a pension to John Ebert, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant served as private in Company A, One hundred and fourteenth Ohio Volunteers, from August 15, 1862, to July 31, 1865. He alleges that he became disabled from varicose veins of left leg while marching in different parts of the States of Mississippi, Tennessee, Florida, Arkansas, Texas, and Louisiana. His claim has been rejected on the ground that the disability existed prior to enlistment.

His claim has been rejected on the ground that the disability existed prior to enlistment.

There is no adverse evidence in the case except the claimant's honest and voluntary admission that about three years prior to his enlistment he discovered a slight eruption of the large vein on the side of the left foot and extending to the ankle.

The disability for which pension is claimed is located, however, above the original trouble. The certificate of examination shows enlarged veins from the ankle to 6 inches above the knee-joint.

Claimant endured many hard marches before he became in any way disabled. The record shows that he suffered from malarial fever after nearly a year's service, and also later on. Enlarged veins are often caused from such fever, although such is not claimed in this case,

The service is charged with the varicosed condition of the leg above the ankle, and even admitting that there may be a connection between the acknowledged enlargement of the large vein on the side of the left foot below the ankle and the now existing varicose veins of leg from ankle to above the knee-joint, it is equally clear that the service is responsible for the aggravation of the original trouble and the resulting disability therefrom.

Taking this view of the case, your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. LLOYD.

Mr. OWEN called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7566) granting a pension to George W. Lloyd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of George W. Lloyd on the pension-roll, subject to the pension laws of the United States, he being a soldier in the late war, in Company D, Tenth Missouri Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

morized and areceded to pace his mane of decope w. Loyd on the pension oil, subject to the pension laws of the United States, he being a soldier in the late war, in Company D. Tenth Missouri Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7566) granting a pension to George W. Lloyd, have had the same under consideration, and now report:

The claimant enlisted September 25, 1861, as a private in Company D. Tenth Missouri Cavalry, and was discharged October II, 1864. In application for pension filed July 14, 1881, he alleges that at Batesville, Ark., April 1, 1862, he received a rupture in the lower part of the bowels while charging the enemy's lines at the battle of Pea Ridge, Ark., and also that he incurred left scrotal hernia (inguinal) by the fall of his horse at the battle of Pea Ridge, Ark., March 8, 1862. The case was rejected upon the ground that there is no record of the alleged hernia of left side, no testimony as to origin or treatment in service, and that claimant has declared his inability to furnish any evidence as to origin or treatment in service, and the obtained a furlough and went home. He afterwards returned to his company and regiment, and was able to perform camp and detached duty until he was mustered out in 1864. Prior soundness is fully proved.

Orin J. Thompson testifies that he saw him immediately on his return home from the Army, in October, 1861:

"He then had a very bad rupture of left side. It troubled him so at this time that he called my attention to it and showed me the rupture. It was as large as my fist, and I can well remember said circumstance. Further, he has had this same rupture continuously since he came onto for the Army; I have seen it many times; have worked with him, and he can not do any lifting that strains him in the lensi.

Whilmson T. Scutchfuld testifies as follows:

"His was worked with him, and he can not do any lifting that strains him in the lensi."

"He has how worked with h

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MINOR CHILDREN OF JOSEPH SAWYER, DECEASED.

Mr. PARKER called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 461) for the relief of the minor children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, ets., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary A. Sawyer, Frank D. Sawyer, Frederick C. Sawyer, William F. Sawyer, and Edmond I. Sawyer, infant children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased, late superintendent of the Life-Saving Service in the tenth district of the United States, and who was drowned while serving in the line of his official duty, October 20, 1880, a pension at the rate of $10 per month each, from and after the passage of this act, until they shall become of the age of twenty-one years, respectively.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10126) granting a pension to the minor children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The following letters from the honorable Secretary of the Interior and from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service indicate the length of the officer's service and the manner of his death, with other important information pertinent to the matter of the bill, namely:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, "Washington, D. C., February 24, 1888.

"Sir: I have the honor to inclose herewith a letter of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service in response to your communication of the 25th ultimo, transmitting a copy of bill H. R. 461, 'for the relief of the minor children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased,' and requesting that the Committee on Pensions be furnished with such information and suggestions as he might think it desirable for the committee to have before them in connection with the consideration of said bill.

"Very respectfully,

"C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

"Hon, A. M. BLISS,
"Chairman of the Committee on Pensions,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

"Treasury Department,
"Office of General Superintendent U. S. Life-Saving Service,
"Washington, D. C., February 23, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to state that I have received from the chairman of the Committee on Pensions of the House of Representatives bill H. R. 461, 'for the relief of the minor children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased,' with the request that the committee be furnished with such information and suggestions as I may think desirable for them to have in connection with the consideration of the relief of the minor children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased, with the request that the committee be furnished with such information and sugastions as I may think desirable for them to have in connection with the consideration of said bill.

"In response I herewith submit for transmission to the committee a copy of the annual report of the Life-Saving Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, on pages 59 to 64 of which is given a circumstantial account of the manner in which Mr. Sawyer lost his life and a brief statement of his connection with the service, which also shows the estimation in which he was held by the officers in charge.

"He assumed the duties of his office January 12, 1875, and died October 20, 1880, making the term of his service four years nine months and eight days. His salary during this time was at the rate of $1,000 per annum. The district which he supervised was a large and important one, and the compensation of his successor was increased about a year and a half after his death to $1,800 per annum by the act of May 4, 1882.

"There is no statute making provision for the widows and children of the district officers of the Life-Saving Service in the event of their death in the line of duty, section 8 of the act of May 4, 1882, being applicable only in the case of keepers of stations and their crews.

"Mr. Sawyer is the second district superintendent who has lost his life by drowning in the discharge of his official duty, the other being John J. Guthrie, late superintendent of the sixth district, who perished in an attempt to render assistance at the wreck of the United States ship of war Huron, on the coast of North Carolina, on November 24, 1877. In his case Congress authorized a pension to be paid his widow at the rate provided for a deceased captain of the Navy (see act of May 25, 1878, Statutes at Large, volume 20, chapter 130, page 533).

"Respectfully, yours. 533).

"Respectfully, yours,

"S. I. KIMBALL,
"General Superintendent,

"The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

Pages 59, 60, and 61 of the annual report of the Life-Saving Service for 1881 are devoted to a circumstantial account of the brave and courageous manner in which Captain Sawyer met his death by drowning, while in the performance of his official duty.

The widows and children of keepers and members of crews of the Life-Saving Service are provided for for the period of two years at the full pay of the husband or father. No such provision exists for the relief of the relatives of a superintendent. Congress has, in the case of Superintendent Guthrie, deceased, granted a pension to his surviving widow.

It is shown by evidence before the committee that the wife of Captain Sawyer died seven months prior to his lamentable death, and that by his death his five children were left destitute; the eldest is now cared for by a maternal uncle, but the four youngest, all under sixteen years of age, are supported by a maiden sister of Captain Sawyer, whose chief support is obtained by the use of her needle.

needle. His children are bright and intelligent, and your committee believe they are justly entitled to the aid of the Federal Government in providing for their support and education.

Captain Sawyer, it may be proper to state, had also an honorable service in the Navy, as an officer, from December 7, 1863, until November 22, 1865. He was a brave and devoted officer in both of his services.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. There is objection to that bill. I ask it be again

The bill was again read.

Mr. CHEADLE. The bill under consideration is in direct violation of the well-established principle upon which all pensions are granted. The general law only grants $2 a month until the children reach sixteen years of age, while this bill proposes to increase the rate to $10 a month and to give the pension until they arrive at twenty-one years of

Again, this is the beginning of legislation in which we shall have a large civil pension-list, and it does seem to me the bill ought not to pass in its present shape.

I am told that the Commissioner of Pensions has advocated in possibly more than one annual report the increase of rating from $2 to $5 a month of the infant children, and, so far as I am concerned, I think that if you will make the rating in this case $5 and reduce the period to sixteen years the bill might pass.

Mr. PARKER. Why do you not move that, then?

Mr. CHEADLE. Then I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "five," and strike out "twenty-one" and insert "sixteen."

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I will state to the gentleman that that is equally an extension of the pension law to the civil-service list. I object to the bill altogether, and I think the gentleman ought to do so, too, if he means to be consistent with his record.

Mr. CHEADLE. So far as I am concerned I have no doubt-for it seems to be the policy to increase pensions-I have no doubt that the pensions awarded to the minor children in a short time will be increased to $5 a month; and for that reason, individually, if the bill is to become a law at all, I think it should only do so with the rate fixed at that sum. In my judgment, however, the bill ought not to pass

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Then stick to that,

Mr. SAWYER. Why do you not stick to it if you want to? Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Well, his business is in that di-

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Well, his business is in that direction; I am merely reminding him of consistency. [Laughter.]
Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I agree in what the gentleman from Indiana has said with regard to this pension. I think it is a question involving more than dollars and cents, or more than hundreds of dollars to the children of a deceased official. It goes far beyond that. If it were simply a proposition that a few dollars more or less should be read to these shiften who are the contraction. be paid to these children, who are undoubtedly deserving, and they certainly have my sympathy for the condition I understand they are placed in, that would be a question that would appeal to our sympathy for the condition I was a proper to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that according to the condition I was a great that a a thies and meet a fitting response on that score. But there is a great principle of legislation involved here that we must bear in mind. We have drawn the line heretofore and should draw it now and hereafter upon military services.

I do not believe it is wise to enter upon the pension-list others than those engaged in the military service, because if you do you will never be able to draw a distinction between the classes of civil employés themselves; and I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will not press its consideration to-night.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose we have heard all that can be said against this bill. It is due now to the bill and to these children who are interested in its passage to give a statement of facts on which the bill is based, as well as to meet the question of precedent which has been raised here,

Gentlemen are mistaken in saying that this is a new movement or principle of legislation. They are mistaken in saying there is no civil pension-list; they are mistaken in saying that this is a new departure, a new proceeding in regard to the granting of pensions.

None of these things are true; it is not a new departure; it is not establishing a new principle; it is simply following precedents now in

This, Mr. Chairman, is the case of the children of Captain Sawyer. The mother died before Captain Sawyer did. There are now five children, the eldest being nineteen years of age, the second seventeen, the third fourteen, the next twelve, and the other nine. I will say here that Captain Sawyer did not leave any property, and these chil-dren are without parents, without means, and all four of the younger children are supported by the needle of a maiden sister. Sawyer served for four years and nine months at a salary of $1,000 a Within a year and a half after his death his successor filling the same position was paid $1,800 a year. This is one of the equities for remembering these children.

Again, the service in which he died was a service in the line of his duty, he being drowned while engaged in the Life-Saving Service off the coast in his district. Again, the cases to which I have referred and which are precedents, are these: In the cases of the keepers and crews which are precedents, are these: In the cases of the keepers and crews of the Life-Saving Service, the widows and children are paid pensions of $2 per month. In a case almost precisely like this, the case of John J. Guthrie, superintendent of the Life-Saving Service off the coast of North Carolina, who was drowned while aiding the survivors in the wreck of the United States ship of war Huron in 1877, Congress authorized a pension to the widow at the rate given to the widow of a carotini in the Navy and that pagein I present at the first at the case of the widow of a carotini in the Navy and that pagein I were at the saving at the case of the keepers and crews of captain in the Navy, and that pension I presume is still being paid, at least the law was never repealed, and hence gentlemen are mistaken in saying that this is a new departure in legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Let me ask the gentleman if that pension was given to a man in the service of the United States or given to a man who lost his life in volunteering in saving human life?

Mr. PARKER. He was the superintendent of the sixth district. Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. The man of whom you spoke just now ?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; the man of whom I spoke, John J. Guthrie. The case is a well-known one, and the pension was granted to his widow under the act of May 25, 1878, which will be found in the Statutes at Large, volume 20, chapter 130.

Therefore, in these cases of the keepers and crews of the Life-Saving Service and in the case of a superintendent of the Life-Saving Service pensions have been paid. But there is no general law for the payment of superintendents, and hence I ask to have this bill passed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me ask the gentleman, was not there a bill introduced, and Congress refused to make a law, pensioning these

Mr. PARKER. I am informed-I do not know of my own knowledge—that a bill has been introduced and presented to the Committee on Pensions for general pensions in these cases, which has been favorably reported.

Mr. McMILLIN. But does the gentleman know that a prior Congress refused such action?

Mr. PARKER. I am not aware of it.
Mr. McMILLIN. My memory is such, however; I speak only from Mr. PARKER. I am not aware of it.

In this case, however, Mr. Chairman, I rest upon the precedents. I am of course aware that if gentlemen insist upon the objection that there is no quorum, I am powerless, as no quorum is present; but it seems to me, in view of the former action in similar cases, this bill ought to be

Mr. KILGORE. · I move that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. PARKER rose

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PERKINS (to Mr. KILGORE). Let the committee adopt the amendment.

Mr. KILGORE.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out "ten" and inserting "five," and striking out "twenty-one" and inserting "sixteen.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PARKER. Now, I ask that the same disposition be made of this bill that was made in the case presented by Mr. NELSON—that it be reported to the House with the previous question ordered.

Mr. KILGORE. The objection to that is that these bills reported y these night sessions are always in the way of the regular business. by these night sessions are always in the way of the regular business. They are called up sometimes and interfere with the regular business. I think that we have plenty of those bills now upon the Calendar upon which a special order has been made that they be taken up by a full House; and I do not think this bill ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] requests that this bill be reported to the House, the previous question requests that this bill be reported to the House, the previous question ordered, and that it go over to a full House. Is there objection?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Texas that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. PARKER. Is it in order to move that its passage be recommended?

Mr. DOCKERY. A negative vote would indicate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the bill which has been read was not the bill which was reported by the committee. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the bill reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the minor children of Joseph Sawyer, deceased, late superintendent of the Life-Saving Service in the tenth district of the United States, and who was drowned while serving in the line of his official duty, and to pay them a pension from and after the passage of this act as now provided by law for the minors of a deceased captain of the Navy.

Mr. SAWYER. This bill puts it at $2 a month until the age of sixteen.

Mr. STRUBLE. Let this bill pass.
Mr. PARKER. I think it is proper to state that I thought the bill which I sent up was the bill of the committee.
The CHAIRMAN. The bill which was read first was the bill as originally introduced, but the committee have reported a substitute for that bill, which the Clerk has now read.

Mr. PARKER. That being so I think it is fair to request that it be accepted.

Mr. KILGORE. That is not the question involved. Now, the speeches of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADDE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] convince me that this ought not to pass; and I would be inclined to antagonize it all the way through, but I will concede to the gentleman from New York the right to withdraw it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. I will state that I will not only feel inclined to antagonize this bill, but that I will antagonize it here and everywhere else, and if it is pressed I will make the point of no quorum. It is establishing a bad precedent. It will be followed by a bill pensioning men in the railway mail service, and there is no knowing in how many other branches of the civil service in which this will be a precedent for asking for pension. I will call for a quorum unless the motion of the gentleman from Texas is put to the House, that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is perfectly manifest that the bill can not pass. I think it is only taking valuable time from gentlemen who want to pass bills that will not be objected to, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon action on the bill?

Mr. PARKER. It is myduty to these children to do that, and I ask that the House at a full session shall be allowed to pass upon it. If others direct differently, that is their business.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Is this question debatable? If it is, I desire to occupy the time of the House for a few moments. The question has been raised in regard to whether or not it was a proper precedent to establish. In my humble judgment the sooner we establish a precedent of that kind, and the sooner we pay pensions to the families of those men in the Life-Saving Service who lose their lives in their efforts to save others, the sooner we will establish a precedent in the line of increasing the efficiency of that service. It is considerable of a sacrifice for any man to make when he goes to rescue lives on a vessel

He can raise the issue there that it is too venturesome for him to go out, because he will be thinking of his wife and children. The matter of bravery is a very grand and a very noble one, but it would look a little nobler on the part of a great government to recognize that spirit of bravery, and to say to these men that if they lose their lives in the discharge of these dangerous duties it will care for their widows and their ornans. For my part I am willing to vote for this, even as a precedent. Mr. GUENTHER. So am I.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. KILGORE, and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PARKER. I call for a division.

Mr. PARKER. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 21.

Mr. WASHINGTON. No quorum.

Mr. COOPER (to Mr. WASHINGTON). Why do you object to having the House pass on this matter? Is that not fair?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I intend to kill it right here and now. It is either going to be killed, or it is going to be withdrawn.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, upon the remark just made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], which seems to me to be entirely uncalled for-acting entirely upon that remark, I beg to withdraw the bill

Mr. WASHINGTON. All right.

THEODORE RAUTHE.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (S. 2460) granting arrears of penson to Theodore Rauthe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Theodore Rauthe, late Company K, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, arrears of pension, at the rate of $31.25 per month, from the 12th day of September, 1878, to the 22d day of July, 1882.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate sets forth the facts in this case, and is hereby adopted, with the recommendation that the bill pass.

It appears that the claimant was deprived of his pension for the time stated in the bill reported herewith by the action of the Pension Bureau, which summarily dropped his name from the rolls upon information furnished by a letter, which was subsequently abundantly proven to have been a forgery.

Applying to this case the well-settled principle of law that a party against whose interest a forgery has been committed, by which he is deprived of any right or property, shall have restitution, not only from the wrong-loer, but even from a person who has innocently been misled by the transaction, your committee have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the claimant is entitled to the relief granted by the accompanying bill, the passage of which is recommended.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the committee that this is the case of a man who has lost both limbs. He was pensioned and drew a pension at the rate stated in this bill; but upon a false letter or communision at the rate stated in this bill; but upon a false letter or communication which was sent to the Pension Office his pension was suspended during the period covered by this bill. Upon the fact being brought to the attention of the office that this letter was a forgery, he was of course reinstated, and is now drawing a pension of $72 a month; but the rate of pension during the period of suspension in this case was but $32 a month, and the committee recommend that he be allowed at that

Mr. KILGORE.

That goes back to 1878. Yes; it covers from 1878 to 1882, the period during Mr. PERKINS. which his pension was suspended.

Mr. KILGORE. How was it that they did not discover the fraud during those four years?

Mr. PERKINS. As I have suggested, in 1878 a forged letter was sent to the Pension Office, and upon that this man's pension was suspended. In 1882 the Pension Office became satisfied that the communication was a forgery, and they of course reinstated him; but they did not pay him the pension to which he would have been entitled during the four years.

Mr. KLIGORE. How much are you asking for in this bill?
Mr. PERKINS. Simply what he was deprived of during those four rears. He had been pensioned theretofore, but during these four years his pension was suspended, and this bill simply proposes to give him what was unjustly withheld from him during that time.

Mr. KILGORE. What were the allegations in the forged letter? Mr. PERKINS. I can not answer that. The committee do not

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I would be inclined, without some further information upon the subject, to kick upon the passage of that bill. It is against the policy of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. No, this is not a case of arrears. It is true the bill is so entitled, but it is not a bill for arrears. It simply gives him the pension that he was entitled to during those four years.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Per-Kins] had better let this bill go over; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall be perfectly willing to let him call it up at another time after we shall have had some opportunity for investigation.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the gentleman that under the present practice of the Pension Office when a man has been unjustly deprived of his pension in this way and is reinstated, the pension to which he was entitled during the period of suspension is allowed; but that was not the rule eight years ago. This bill was passed by the Senate

Mr. CHEADLE. I will state to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] that recently I have had a similar experience in regard to a case in the district that I represent. The man was dropped from the roll and it took about fourteen months to get him reinstated, but when he was reinstated they paid him what was due him for the period during which he was suspended.

A MEMBER. That is the law.

Mr. CHEADLE. That is the law now.

Mr. PERKINS. At the time this man was dropped he was getting only $32 a month, and that is the rate at which this bill proposes to pay him.

Mr. KILGORE. But for four years.
Mr. PERKINS. Yes; for the period of the suspension.
The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN J. LOCKREY.

Mr. PETERS (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 220) granting a pension to John J. Lockrey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John J. Lockrey, late a private in Company C, Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and also a sailor on board the United States ship

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The applicant enlisted as a private in Company C, Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers, on April 11, 1865, and was discharged August 16, 1865, because of chronic iritis with conjunctivitis, as stated on the face of his discharge papers. The following is also found on face of discharge: "Disability total at present." The record also shows that soldier served in the United States Navy from September, 1863, to October, 1864, when he was discharged by reason of expiration of term of service.

He applied for a pension March 28, 1867, and August 23, 1881; claim was rejected because it was claimed that the loss of sight was the result of gonorrheal

He applied for a pension March 28, 1867, and August 23, 1881; claim was rejected because it was claimed that the loss of sight was the result of gonorrheal ophthalmia.

The only ground for this charge is the hospital record. The records of the Surgeon-General's Office show:

"Private John J. Lockrey, Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers, was admitted on transport Northern Light, at Mobile, Ala., May 21, 1865. No diagnosis given, and transferred May 23, 1865. Was admitted to Sedgwick general hospital, Greenville, La., May 23, 1865 (as John Lockrey), with gonorrheal ophthalmia and chronic diarrhea, and transferred May 28, 1865. Was admitted on transport Northern Light May 28, 1865, with ophthalmia, and transferred June 6, 1865, as convalescent, and transferred July 7, 1865. Was admitted to Ward general hospital, Newark, N. J., July 7, 1865, with chronic conjunctivities and discharged the service August 16, 1865 (as of Company C); cause, chronic iritis with conjunctivitie; disability, total."

There is no evidence outside of this record showing this disease, and conceding the record to be correct, there is no evidence of any kind showing that it was the result of his own vicious habits. Aside from this, the record is inconsistent.

was the result of his own vicious habits. Aside from this, the record is inconsistent.

The record shows that May 23, 1865, he was admitted to hospital with gonor-rheal ophthalmia and chronic diarrhea. May 28, five days later, he was transferred and admitted to another hospital with ophthalmia, and nine days later was admitted to another hospital as convalescent. Gonorrheal ophthalmia is a virulent disease, and it is hardly to be supposed that if a soldier was afflicted with this disease, a few days would so change its symptoms that it would escape attention or that he would have been reported convalescent so soon.

On the other hand, the evidence of two of his comrades shows that he caught a severe cold in his eye, and that this was the cause of the loss of the sight of the left eye, and Dr. A. D. Hall testifies that he treated him from April to June, 1866, for iridocyclitis. J. Blackelee, examining surgeon at Neodesha, Kans., June 30, 1881, reports:

"Entire loss of left eye from iritis. I find no traces of gonorrhea. There is no stricture; rate, one-half."

The medical reviewer in the Pension Department says:

"There are some facts in his case, chiefly the frequent mention of iritis in connection with his eye trouble, that leadme to think that perhaps the disease and loss of eyes did not result from gonorrhea."

This was approved by Medical Referee Dr. Campbell.

After a careful examination of all the evidence and circumstances in the case, your committee have come to the conclusion that the soldier is entitled to the relief sought, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FLORIDA G. CASEY.

Mr. GALLINGER (when the name of Mr. RANDALL was called). I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to call up a bill for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who made this request, saying that he was too ill to be here at evening sessions. I hope there will be no objection to extending this courtesy.

Many MEMBERS. That is right. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair he

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call up the bill (S. 1843) granting increase of pension to Florida G. Casey.

The bill was read.

Mr. GALLINGER. While personally I should be very glad to have this bill pass to-night, I understand that certain gentlemen here will object to it, because it proposes to increase the pension of an officer's widow. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the previous question be ordered upon it and that the bill be acted on next Friday morning after the reading of the Journal.

Will there be any debate allowed?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will there be amend.
The CHAIRMAN The CHAIRMAN. Under the arrangement proposed there would be thirty minutes for debate.

Mr. KILGORE. As it is proposed that this bill shall come up on a Friday morning, ought there not to be some order as to when business on the Private Calendar shall be taken up so that there may be no conflict with that business?

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill will not necessarily be called up at that time. It will not be allowed to interrupt the ordinary business of the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will take care of it at the proper time.

Mr. KILGORE. But the bill can be called up at any time; it will be privileged if the previous question is to be considered as ordered by the House

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take the same course as a great many other bills have taken, and we have had very little trouble with them. I think this will make no trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the order proposed will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

JAMES M'GOWAN.

Mr. REED. I call up the bill (S. 2764) granting an increase of pension to James McGowan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McGowan, late a private of Company H, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteers, and to pay him during life a pension of $72 per month, in lieu of the one now received by him.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2764) granting an increase of pension to James McGowan, having considered the same, report as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions gives the following facts in this contract.

same, report as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions gives the following facts in this case:

"James McGowan was a private in Company H, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteers. He came out of the service disabled and his disabilities have progressed continuously. He was first pensioned at the rate of $2 per month, increased to $3, $24, and $50, his present rate. His condition is described thus: Ho weighs 95 pounds, has paralysis of the lower extremities, with great wasting; anchylosis of hip and knee joints; the hand can be carried to the mouth, but it can not be raised to the top of his head; he can not stand, walk, or dress himself; he is permanently helpless, and requires the constant aid and attendance of another person. There is no contest between the claimant and the Pension Office as to the extent of his disabilities nor the manner in which they were incurred. The Commissioner's letter of transmission says:

"'He is receiving $50 a month, which is the highest rate that can be granted him under existing laws. The law providing the rate of $72 a month for persons so permanently disabled as to require the attendance of another person, is only applicable to those who are receiving $50 a month at the time of its passage.'

"The physicians regularly appointed as an examining board at Portland, Me, certify that he is perfectly helpless, and requires the constant attendance of another person. On the authority of this very positive statement, verified by the Pension Office medical authority, the committee are of the opinion that the existing law, fixing the rate of $72 per month, should apply to just such conditions as this man exhibitist, in view of which the bill was reported."

There seems to be no controversy as to the utterly helpless condition of this claimant, and your committee therefore report the bill back favorably and recommendation that if do needs.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY C. THOMPSON.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I desire to call up the bill (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary C. Thompson, widew of the late Dr. Fillmore Thompson, of Hot Springs, Ark., who was chief guide to the expedition of General Frederick Steele, during the spring of the year 1864, undertaken for the purpose of co-operating with General Banks, and who lost his life by reason of exposure in said service, and to pay her a pension corresponding with the grade of captain.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The facts in the case appear fully in the report of the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, which is as follows:

"The petitioner is the widow of the late Dr. Fillmore Thompson, of Hot Springs, Ark., where, at the breaking out of the rebellion, he resided. He was a thorough and intense Unionist, and rendered valuable assistance to many of the persecuted loyal people of that section, and by reason of which he endangered his own safety so that he was obliged to seek protection within the Union lines at Little Rock, then occupied by General Fred, Steele. He was employed by General Steele as chief guide and scout in his expedition to Camden in the spring of 1864, for the purpose of co-operating with General Banks in his Louisiana campaign, and continued to act as such until the final return of said expedition to Little Rock.

"Professor J. B. Wheeler, of the United States Military Academy at West Point, thus testifies by affidavit in regard to Dr. Thompson:

"That as the chief engineer officer he accompanied the march of the expedition under Maj. Gen. Fred. Steele, which moved south in March, 1864, to co-operate with and, if possible, to effect a junction with the United States forces under command of Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, then moving toward Shreveport, on the Red River, in Louisiana.

"That during this march and the return he was daily thrown in contact with the principal guide, one Dr. F. Thompson, a former resident of Hot Springs, Ark., who had sought protection within the United States lines against violence from the inhabitants of that part of the State with which he was threatened by reason of his well-known Union feelings.

"That from his personal knowledge he knows of the peculiar fitness of the said Thompson for the place of principal guide, and attributes largely the successful progress of the expedition, as far south as it proceeded, to said Thompson's thorough knowledge of the roads, the crossing of streams, and the sentiments and opinions of the inhabitants of that part of the country.

"That the return march of the expedition, followed as it was by a victorious enemy, who received a severe check at Jenkin's Ferry, was greatly aided by the said Thompson's intimate acquaintance with the roads and character of the country used and crossed by the Army in its retreat.

"That during this retreat all the members were more or less sufferers from fatigue and exposure.

"That shortly after the return of the expedition Dr. Thompson was taken sick and very soon thereafter died.

"That the deponent understood at the time of said Thompson's death that it, as well as the sickness, was largely, if not entirely, caused by the fatigues and exposures that said Thompson had undergone during the time he accompanied the expedition as its principal guide.

"J. B. WHEELER.'

"'J. B. WHEELER."

"Dr. Thompson, upon his return to Little Rock, was attended by several physicians, all of whom certify that the disease of which he died was, in their opinion, the result of fatigue, exposure, and injuries received in this service. He left a widow and several children without means of support. There is no general law under which services of this character can be recognized; but there are precedents for allowing pensions to guides or scouts for disabilities, and to their widows in case of death.

"The bill is reported with an amendment striking out all after the word 'pension,' in the twelfth line, and inserting 'corresponding with the grade of captain,' and a recommendation that it do pass."

Your committee believe the case to be a meritorious one, and to come within established precedents, but respectfully decline to concur in the rate of pension fixed in the bill, and therefore return the same with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "service," in line 9, and inserting therein instead the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows: Strike out all after the word "service," in line 9, and insert "at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. From what committee does this report come? The CHAIRMAN. From the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Mr. OUTHWAITE. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the Committe on Invalid Pension in other cases has positively refused to report in favor of granting pensions to persons who were not mus-tered into service. This Dr. Thompson seems never to have been mustered into the service, or to have been enrolled, or to have been in the service in any way whatever. I have no particular objection to the action proposed in this instance, if the case is meritorious, but I have had one or two measures rejected by the same committee on the ground simply that the parties had never been mustered in or enrolled; therefore I thought proper to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair understands the rule to have been that where a wound has been received or disability incurred in battle, it was considered equivalent to a muster.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the universal rule of our committee. If the soldier, even though he may not have been mustered in, has actually participated in battle and been wounded, we have reported in favor of granting him a pension.

Mr. WASHINGTON. From the reading of this report I do not understand that this man was ever wounded anywhere. It seems that he died, according to the statement of the report, as the result of fa-tigue after a long and arduous march. There is not a word in that report about any wound. I shall have to call a quorum on this bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. Let the report be read again.

The Clerk again read the report.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The report has been read all over again, and I can not find a word or line indicating that that man was ever in the service of the United States or was ever wounded. He was a sort of a guide through the woods in Arkansas. While I am not opposed to pay pensions to men deserving of them and who are entitled to them under the law, still I believe it to be my duty to object to the passage of this bill, and I am inclined to call a quorum upon it.

Mr. SAWYER. It is idle after the gentleman's statement for me to say anything in behalf of the bill.

say anything in behalf of the bill.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I merely want to save time.

Mr. SAWYER. Oh, I know you are very patriotic, and you only want to save time. In this case the civilian was employed by the officer in command of the army, because he was familiar with the country through which it was proposed to operate. He was employed as a guide and a scout. I believe no guide or scout ever became mustered into the Army.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Scouts were mustered into the Army.

Mr. SAWYER. Not all of them, as I understand.

Mr. SAWYER. Not all of them, as I understand.
Mr. WASHINGTON. All except bushwhackers.
Mr. SAWYER. Were you there?
Mr. WASHINGTON. No, I was not there.
Mr. SAWYEB. You spoke so positively, I thought you were.
Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over for the present, and let us rise so we may pass the bills which have been laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that they do pass.
Mr. YODER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. YODER. I move that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McMillin having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Dockery reported that the Committee of the Whole had had the special order under consideration, and had directed him to report back sundry bills to the House with various recommendations.

was reported from the Committee of the whole House with an amendment reducing the pension from $45 a month to $40.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Texas, on whose motion this pension was reduced from $45 to $40, now consents to let it remain at $45, and I therefore hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BILLS TO BE VOTED ON UNDER THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House, the previous question was ordered on bills of the following titles, thirty minutes allowed for debate, and the right to amend:

Mr. YODER moved to reconsider the several votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

STATEMENT OF THE HOUSE CONFEREES

The conferees on the part of the House beg leave to submit the following

The conferees on the part of the House beg leave to submit the following statement:

The Scnate conferees recede from their disagreement to the House amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out that part of the House amendment providing that stock, bonds, and other securities shall be issued at the principal office in the city of New York, and further, that the stocks and bonds or other securities shall be issued for eash only, and substituting therefor the words:

"May issue stock to the amount of the just value of such estate, property, and rights and for work and labor done or materials provided in the execution of the work of constructing said ship-canal; and the stock issued for these purposes shall be deemed paid-up stock and shall not be liable to any further calls or assessments."

The effect of this amendment as proposed is to authorize the issuance of stock to the just value of property necessary in the construction of the canal and for work and labor done in connection therewith as well as for the concessions acquired from Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

From their disagreement to amendment numbered 2, which provides that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to commit the United States to any liability whatever for or on account of said company, etc., the Senate conferees also recede, with the following amendments: Before the word "liability," in line 71 of the printed bill, insert the word "pecuniary;" and after the word "act," in line 71 of the printed bill, insert the word "pecuniary;" and after the word "act," in line 71 of the printed bill, insert the word "pecuniary;" and strike out the proviso in lines 79 to 81, inclusive.

The first two verbal amendments proposed by the Senate conferees, and agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House, do not change in any wise the meaning of the amendment as adopted, but express, perhaps, the intention of the House more clearly than it is expressed in the original. The striking out of the words in the latte

From their disagreement to the fourth amendment the Senate conferees recede, with an amendment striking out section 3 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC, 3. That no certificates for stock, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the par value thereof shall be fully paid for in money and such money deposited in the treasury of said company; and there shall be at least $1,000,000 in money paid on such subscriptions into the treasury of said company within one year from the passage of this act; and said company is hereby prohibited from returning or repaying any part of the money so paid. No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject this charter to forfeiture."

The effect of this is to require 10 per cent. of all certificates of stock issued for cash to be deposited in the treasury of said company, and to leave it in the power of the owners of the stock so issued to assign the same; and further to require at least the sum of $1,000,000 to be deposited within twelve months in the treasury of the company.

Amendment numbered 5 is merely a change in the numbering of the sections, to which the Senate agrees.

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, with an amendment striking out the words "the directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States."

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to amendment numbered 7, which requires the vice-president to be a citizen and resident of the United States.

The conferees on the part of the House recede from the House amendment numbered 8, which provides that no change of concessions hereofore or hereafter granted by the Nicaraguan and Costa Riean Government shall be first given thereto.

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to amendment numbered

The Senate conferees recede from their disagreement to amendment numbered 9, with two amendments, one inserting in line 3 of the printed bill, after the word "verified," the words "on oath," the effect of which is to require the verification of the annual report to be made to the Secretary of the Interior to be under eath; the second, inserting in line 5 of the bill, before the word "false," the word "willfully," which is descriptive of the offense created by the House reconders.

the word "willfully," which is descriptive of the offense created by the House amendment.

Amendment numbered 10 relates to a change in the numbering of the sections. From the eleventh amendment, which declares that the United States shall not be held pecuniarily liable for the acts or contracts of the company, the House conferees recede, the substance of such amendment being embodied in amendment numbered 2.

The House conferees recede from amendment numbered 12, which provides "that nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations, or that may be acquired through treaty stipulations, with respect to the rights of transpertation of the citizens of the United States, or their property, over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace or war."

The House conferees recede from amendment numbered 13, which provides "that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act and to regulate the tolls or tariff rates for the transportation of persons or property by this company or its assigns," leaving in the words "that Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act, when in its judgment the public good may so require."

From their disagreement to the fourteenth amendment, which provides that the construction of said ship-canal shall be commenced in good faith within three years, the Senate conferees recede, with an amendment providing that said canal shall be commenced in good faith within three years, and that in default thereof this act shall be null and yold.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considwith the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the motion dispense with the morning hour for the consideration of bills reported by committees?

The SPEAKER. The motion has not been made, and it can not be made under the rules; but under the rules it is in order before that hour to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation bills. If that motion is not agreed to, the hour for the consideration of bills will follow.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. McCreary in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows: The Clerk

A bill (H. R. 12329) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, in explaining the provisions of the pending bill I deem it proper to go back somewhat and speak of the appropriations that have been made for the last four years, of the purposes the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Congress have had in view, and of what has been accomplished, and I shall endeavor at the same and of what has been accomplished, and I shall endeavor at the same time to give the committee some information, which I am sure is desired at the present time, as to the condition of the Navy. The committee will remember that four years ago a change was made in the rules by which jurisdiction over these appropriations was for the first time given to the Committee on Naval Affairs. This is the fourth bill appropriating money for the naval service reported by your committee.

The estimates sent in by the Department for the present year for the purposes embraced in this bill aggregate, in round numbers, $27,767,-000. This bill, as it is reported, contains appropriations amounting to $19,903,000. The amount appropriated for the current year was $19,-942,000. The appropriations for the naval service all together, including public works and increase of the Navy, for the four years preceding this have averaged little less than $20,000,000, and this bill carries about the same amount. It will be remembered that up to the time when jurisdiction over this bill was conferred upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, all appropriations for public works for the use of the Navy Department were contained in the sundry civil bill, just as at the present time appropriations for public works for the use of other Departments are carried in that bill.

But in 1886 this committee took charge under the new rules of appropriations for all public works necessary for the use of the Navy; that is to say, for public buildings and other works in the navy-yards, docks, the Naval Observatory, and all such matters. The sums needed for these purposes from that time to this we have included in the bill making annual appropriations for the naval service. To make any comparison, therefore, of the annual appropriations for the naval service during the four years since the Naval Committee took jurisdiction with those made for the four preceding years we must omit public works. We must also exclude from both periods all sums voted for increase of the Navy, as these are admittedly much larger during the latter four years. Excluding all items of both these classes and estimating that this bill as reported is to become law, the appropriations for the ordinary current expenses of the naval service will be as follows:

latter of $12,906,971.80. After your committee had had time to thoroughly investigate the After your committee had had time to thoroughly investigate the question we found that our navy-yards were in a bad condition. They were much in need of repairs; many buildings were leaky, needed paint and repairs generally; so that we thought it necessary, in order to properly preserve and put in good condition the large amount of property owned by the Government in the several navy-yards, to considerably increase the appropriation coming under the head of "Repairs and preservation that are also as a serious property of the second bill reported by your some the appropriation coming under the head of "Repairs and preservation at navy-yards." Accordingly, in the second bill reported by your committee (containing the appropriations for the year expiring June 30, 1888), although only $125,000 had been appropriated for the preceding year, we recommended an apropriation of $450,000 for that purpose. For the next year we appropriated $300,000. The expenditure of these sums has very much improved the condition of the navy-yards generally, so that now, in the opinion of the committee, $225,000, the amount carried in the present bill for this purpose, will be amply sufficient when taken in connection with other special appropriations carried in the bill.

We have a large number of navy-yards, perhaps more on the Atlantic coast and adjacent to it than are really needed by the Government, certainly more than are necessary in ordinary times.

There are extensive yards at Portsmouth, Boston, Brooklyn, League Island, and Norfolk, not counting New London, Conn., yet nowhere had the Government, in 1886, a single dock that could accommodate had the Government, in 1886, a single dock that could accommodate a modern first-class vessel of war, except an uncompleted stone dock at Mare Island. The bill contains $80,000 to finish that dock, the amount estimated to be necessary. We have heretofore (in the laws for 1888 and 1889) provided for three other docks, appropriating in full the money required. Perhaps I can best give to the gentlemen who are interested at all in this question an idea of what has been accomplished by taking up these navy-yards one by one as we come to them.

In the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., not very much has been done besides general repairs, but we recommend in this bill $35,000 to complete sick-quarters there. Two years ago we made an appropriation of $50,000 for a naval hospital on Widows Island off the coast of Maine. That hospital has been completed within the amount of the appropriation. It was much needed, especially for quarantine purposes, and we are informed that it is now in very admirable condition and will be of great use.

Coming down to the Boston navy-yard, we include in this bill some $28,000 for officers' quarters there. Heretofore we have appropriated for minor improvements at that navy-yard, but, on the whole, not a great deal has been accomplished or attempted there. The yard has been put in charge of, and is occupied now solely by, the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting. All the business of this bureau, such as the manufacture and repair of cables, chains, galleys, ropes, sails, etc., is done in that navy-yard, and, except the Bureau of Yards and Docks, which exercises a sort of general superintendence over all the yards, no other bureau is doing anything to-day at Boston.

We next come to the Brooklyn navy-yard. That has always been considered in the past as, and always must be, one of our most important We have appropriated all the money necessary to put that yard in condition to build first-class modern vessels. In previous bills we gave the full amount estimated by the Bureau of Construction and Repair to be necessary for that purpose. But it appears that the amount was not sufficient; and we put in this bill an additional sum of $50,000 tfor that purpose. Then we have authorized the construction there of a dock, first class in every respect. All the money for it has been heretofore appropriated, and the dock is now well on the way towards completion.

We have also authorized and appropriated for a railroad throughout that yard; for the repair of barracks specially; for the improvement of Whitney basin, the cob-dock there, and for electric lights, and other purposes. The Maine, an armored vessel of 6,648 tons displacement, purposes. The Maine, an armored vessel of 6,648 tons displacement, is being built at this yard, and very considerable progress has been made in its construction.

Coming down to League Island navy-yard at Philadelphia, we have appropriated for a dock there the full amount necessary to complete it. There has heretofore been considerable question whether anything at all ought to be done with that League Island navy-yard. The committee has considered this question very carefully; and we are unanimous in recommending the appropriation of the very considerable sum carried in this bill for further improvement in that yard. One great desideratum for a modern vessel is fresh water. At the Philadelphia navy-yard we have fresh water; and in that iron or steel vessels will last nobody can tell how long. The Michigan, the first iron ship, I believe, ever built, was constructed in 1846, forty-three years ago. That vessel is upon the Lakes to-day; and I am told by an officer, a reliable gentleman, who examined this vessel a few years ago, that it is as good to-day as when first built

Coming down next to Norfolk we have also put that navy-yard in condition to build first-class modern ships; I mean the hulls of ships. We have appropriated for a railroad throughout that yard and for electric lights, as we have at the Brooklyn yard. We have also appropriations there for building new marine barracks. Fifteen thousand dollars is included in this bill, which, together with the amount heretofore appropriated, will complete those barracks. The building of the Texas, an armored vessel of 6,300 tons, has been commenced at this yard. The construction of the shops and other ship-building plant is progressing favorably, and to complete this plant the pending bill carries an additional $50,000 estimated to be necessary.

I do not stop to go into minor details, but am simply seeking to give to those who do me the honor to listen an idea of the present condition of our navy-yards. We need-and the committee is unanimous on this subject-a first-class yard somewhere on the Gulf. At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made for a commission to investigate that question—whether the navy-yard at Pensacola ought to be improved, whether it ought to be moved farther up the bay, or whether a yard for the Gulf region ought to be somewhere else. Full power to examine this whole question is given to the commission, but they are to give simply their opinion as to what is the most eligible site, under all the circumstances, for a navy-yard.

Then, upon the Pacific coast, we have put in condition to complete the hull of modern vessels, the navy-yard at Mare Island; that is to say we have appropriated all the money necessary, and satisfactory progress is being made in erecting the plant.

Mr. ADAMS. Before the gentleman passes from the proposed new navy-yard on the Gulf, I wish to ask him whether the report of that commission is to be made to Congress?

Mr. HERBERT. It is to be made to the Secretary of the Navy, according to my recollection.

Mr. ADAMS. And will the Secretary thereupon have authority to establish that yard?

Mr. HERBERT. No sir.
Mr. ADAMS. Only Congress can do that?
Mr. HERBERT. Only Congress.
Mr. ADAMS. And therefore you do not now make an appropria-

Mr. HERBERT. That is the reason.

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to have the gentleman state when it it is probable that the commission will report-whether during the next fiscal year? Mr. HERBERT.

I think they will report during the current fiscal year. The commission has been appointed, but has not yet proceeded to the Gulf. In consequence of the prevalence of yellow fever in that locality last fall, the commission was not appointed earlier.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course the propriety of appropriating or not appropriating in this bill for that navy-yard might depend upon whether the commission has authority to determine the location.

Mr. HERBERT. The commission has no authority to determine that question finally; that will rest with Congress.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Can the gentleman state when that commission will probably go to the Gulf?

Mr. HERBERT. They will go very soon. The members of the commission have been appointed and will go to their field of investigation during the present month, according to my information.

Now, I was speaking of the navy-yard at Mare Island. That is one of the best yards we have—one of the best situated—in a safe position, or at least relatively safe, being situated several miles back from the bay of San Francisco, and it can be easily defended. We have heretofore appropriated all the money necessary for the plant to enable the hulls of first-class ships of war to be constructed there. We have also in this bill quite a sum for extending the sea-wall, and there are a great many other minor appropriations to which I will not stop to allude. The stone dock there, as I stated in the outset, is a first-class dock, and all the money necessary to complete it is carried in this

Now, it will be observed from what I have stated that the committee has not heretofore recommended, and does not now recommend, any appropriation for the purpose of erecting the plant necessary to build modern steam-engines and machinery, outright and complete, in the navy-yards of the Government.

When the committee began to examine this question in 1886, I believe we reached the conclusion unanimously that we ought not to construct our engines in Government workshops. There is in this country quite a number of engine-builders. The Americans have shown great ingenuity and skill in this direction; their railroad engines especially are noted throughout the world; and, as the committee anticipated, there has been quite a great deal of competition among bidders for the construction of engines for our new vessels. So far results have amply vindicated, as I will attempt to show further on in my remarks, the wisdom of the conclusion arrived at by the committee that the engines ought generally to be built by contract and not by the Government, because it can be done better and cheaper.

At the same time it is necessary always to keep a sufficient plant at our navy-yards to do our own repairing. It has been found absolutely impracticable to have repairing done by contract outside. It is always difficult—in fact, it is frequently impossible—to estimate the amount and value of work of this kind that may be found necessary to be done when a vessel is overhauled and the machinery is to be repaired. Government therefore, for this and many other reasons, must have sufficient plant to do its own repairs in its own yards.

I have given to the committee a brief statement of the general condition of our navy-yards. I have said it appears we have more yards on the Atlantic coast than was absolutely necessary to put and keep the Navy in a first-class condition all the time. That is especially the case because of the peculiar system under which our Navy Department is organized. We have eight bureaus, with authority distributed amongst all these bureaus, and each one of them is independent of the others, with no superior authority except the Secretary of the Navy.

Out of this condition of affairs have arisen evils which have attracted the attention of nearly everybody who has considered this question. Admiral Porter, in his naval history of the late war, began by saying that one of the difficulties under which the Government was laboring when that war commenced was this complex system existing in the Navy Department itself; and in the report he made to the Secretary of the Navy in 1885 he strongly recommends the abolition of some of these bureaus. He also stated, in effect, what I believe to be true, that practically all the line officers of the Navy favored the reorganization of the Navy De-partment and the consolidation under one head of all power over the construction of ships, their engines and machinery, and their equip-

Secretary Chandler, who preceded Secretary Whitney, saw this same difficulty, and in order to decide what ought to be done in that matter appointed a board consisting of two officers and one civilian, which was called the Luce board. This board made a thorough examination of all the navy-yards of the United States and of the systems under which they were operating, and reported very strongly in favor of some re-organization. I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read some extracts from that report, made by that board, at the head of which was that distinguished and accomplished officer, Admiral Luce.

The Clerk read as follows:

To a proper understanding of the subject, it should be stated that the present wasteful extravagance in employing so great an excess of non-producers, and the inefficient system of doing business which has for years past been steadily increasing in our navy-yards, are but the natural outgrowth of the constitution of the Navy Department itself. There can be no manner of doubt of this. Each navy-yard is made up of a number of separate and comparatively independent establishments, little principalities, as it were, each owing allegiance to its own sovereign, the chief of the bureau to which it belongs. The heads of departments of a navy-yard have extensive and responsible duties and a large patchiefs.

Thus each department has been gradually building itself.

chiefs.

Thus each department has been gradually building itself up so as to be independent of all other departments, and is constantly striving to do all its own work. Each of the principal departments has its own body of artisans, its own machinery, its own steam-generators, and its own peculiar method of doing business. As an illustration, we take from official "schedule of wages" (Form 9) of civil engineer's office the following ratings: Boiler-makers, boiler-makers' helpers, calkers, coopers, cabinet-makers, core-makers, ship-joiners, ship-carpenters, machinists, machinists' helpers, molders, oakum-pickers, and pattern-makers—a little ship-yard in itself.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, after that report Secretary Chandler himself recommended such a reorganization of the Navy Department as would place the construction of the hull of a vessel, its engines, machinery, and its equipments, under one supervision. The present Secretary of the Navy (Mr. Whitney) recommended strongly to the Forty-ninth Congress a bill effectuating this purpose. That was one of the principal objects of the bill he sent in to the House Committee on Naval Affairs. It met with violent opposition in the committee, as every bill is apt to do, however necessary as a public measure, if it proposes to remove any official personage of importance. Some modifications of the bill which did not defeat its main purposes were suggested by the debate and the evidence before the committee. They were intended to remove some of the objections that were urged. The Secretary assented to the changes, and in its modified form the bill was reported by a large majority of the committee.

We were not upon party lines when it was reported. All the Democrats but one, and two Republicans, of the committee favored the bill. But, unfortunately, as I think, at least, when that bill came before the House we did divide almost on party lines, and so fierce was the opposition to the passage of the bill that no further attempt was made to effect that legislation in either the Forty-ninth or in this the Fiftieth Congress. Secretary Whitney, however, set to work to accomplish without legislation what he could in that direction, and so he consoliall of the locale, the work of two of the Department bureaus. In nearly all of the navy-yards of the country in which any work of any consequence had been done each of the eight bureaus, as shown by this report of Admiral Luce, had its own separate establishment, its own employés and workshops.

In order to remedy that as far as possible the Secretary concentrated all the work of the Equipment Bureau in one navy-yard, which, as I have said, was established at Boston. He then concentrated all the work of the Ordnance Department. Instead of having it scattered throughout the several different yards he put it all in one yard, and located it at Washington. It was not necessary to appropriate any very large amount to give a plant to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, but the construction of modern guns is a very expensive process, and so it became necessary to make very considerable appropriations to enable the Secretary of the Navy to establish at Washington, and in the navy-yard here, a plant for the construction of first-class modern guns. At first we appropriated $1,000,000 for this plant, the amount estimated for. That has proven insufficient, and now this bill carries $625,000 more. The intention is to have a plant here equal, if not superior, to the works of Snyder at Creusot, in France, or Krupp at Essen, in Germany. The first bids for some of the tools were all deemed by the Department as extravagant, and so the Secretary rejected them.

the Department as extravagant, and so the Secretary rejected them. Other offerings are being made. The work of preparing for the new plant at the yard is progressing satisfactorily.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, by those who read the report at that time, that the Secretary of the Navy stated in his report, transmitted by the President to us at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, that there was one of two plans which might be adopted in the attempt then being made to rehabilitate the Navy. One was to buy abroad such things as were not manufactured here, and the adoption of that course would enable us much more rapidly to build up the Navy. The other plan was to domesticate in this country the industries nec-The other plan was to domesticate in this country the industries necessary to make us independent of the world in that regard. If the latter course should be the one adopted, he said it would delay greatly the construction of the Navy, but his estimate was that at the end of five years we would find ourselves absolutely independent of the whole years we would find ourselves absolutely independent of the whole world. Congress after a very full and thorough discussion of the whole subject chose to adopt the latter course, and so the reconstruction of our Navy has been thereby somewhat delayed, especially in this matter of heavy ordnance. In the spring of 1885 and up to 1886 we had no plant in this country anywhere, whether private or governmental, that could furnish the forgings for heavy guns; but the Midvale Works near Philadelphia were furnishing forgings for 6-inch guns, and finally produced material for 8-inch guns, but have gone no further.

Armor then could not be manufactured in this country. To produce first-class armor and forgings for heavy guns, equal to the best that can be made in those great establishments that have grown up abroad year by year in answer to the heavy demands made upon them, is an expens-by year in answer to the heavy demands made upon them, is an expensby year in answer to the heavy demands made upon them, is an expensive undertaking. It requires a costly plant, so that after the passage of the first bill, appropriating three and a half million of dollars toward the construction of the new Navy, and only that amount, the Secretary was unable to establish in this country—to "domesticate" here, to use his own language—the industries necessary to furnish the armor plates and manufacture the forgings, and it was only after we passed the second bill for the increase of the Navy, the law of March 3, 1887, containing very large appropriations, that he was enabled to make a contract, as he did on June 1, 1887, with the Bethlehem Works, of Pennsylvania, for manufacturing first-class gun-steel and armor.

The Secretary proceeded with great care and commendable caption.

The Secretary proceeded with great care and commendable caution. He had, it is true, the investigations theretofore made as a guide. There had been the reports of two committees, one of the House, the Randall report, and one of the Senate, the Hawley report, on the subject; there had also been made a report upon fortifications by a joint board composed of army and naval officers. In addition he had the information furnished by the accomplished naval officers who are attachés at Paris and London, of those who conduct our intelligence office here, and of others who had made a special study of the subject; and the Secretary utilized every source of information he had. When we made the large appropriation in 1887 this enabled him to make the contracts under which the Bethlehem Company agreed to furnish forge ings for seventy-nine large guns. The contract specifies that these are to go all the way from 6 inches up to 12 inches, and the plant is to be sufficient hereafter to furnish even 16-inch guns, about as large as are made anywhere in the world. Deliveries under this contract are to begin February 1, 1891, and are to be completed November 1, 1891.

There was also a contract for all the armor of the Puritan, Amphitrite, Monadnock, Terror, Maine, and Texas, deliveries beginning on the 1st of February, 1891, and running along at the rate of 300 tons per month, till December 1, 1891, when the last delivery is to be made. In its preparations to fulfill this contract the Bethlehem Company is making good progress; in fact, it will probably anticipate both, certainly one, of the contracts as to the time of delivery. In the next month, March, it will commence delivering the forgings.

Mr. ADAMS. Forgings for what?

Mr. HERBERT. Forgings for the guns. The armor and armor plates they will not be enabled to deliver so soon.

Mr. ADAMS. At what rate are these forgings to be delivered for the guns? How rapidly, and how much of an appropriation is embodied in the bill for that purpose?

Mr. HERBERT. It is expected that they will be able to deliver the forgings in accordance with the terms of the contract, and it is stated in the report which the gentleman now holds in his hands

Mr. ADAMS. But how rapidly after they begin to deliver these gun forgings will they be delivered; how much per month, or during the next fiscal year?
Mr. HERBERT. I do not remember.

Mr. ADAMS. How much during the next fiscal year?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not remember the exact number during the fiscal year, but deliveries are to be scattered along through that period of time, running from the 1st of February next down to the 1st of November, 1891, and they will all be anticipated by several months.

Mr. ADAMS. And the appropriations were put in the last bill?

Mr. ADAMS. And the appropriations were put in the last bill?
Mr. HERBERT. The appropriations were made heretofore.
Mr. ADAMS. And none in this bill?
Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir. There is a further appropriation here for ordnance, but for the forgings for these seventy-nine guns already for ordnance, but for the longings of contracted for no more money is needed.

There is now, I will state to the gentleman, unexpended of the approximation of the second state of the sec addition to that we appropriate in the present bill $1,600,000 for armor and armament, and the $625,000 more for the completion of the ordnance shop at the Washington navy-yard. This is all the Department desires.

Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.
Mr. HERBERT. At the time I was interrupted I was about to say we are making rather slow progress in the manufacture of guns. We have already manufactured several guns at the Washington navy-yard which are first class in every respect—6-inch, 8-inch, and 10-inch guns.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the gentleman object to a question?

Mr. HERBERT. No.
Mr. ADAMS. I see that the Department estimates $4,000,000 for the next fiscal year for this very purpose. How do they come to ask so much during the next fiscal year if they have so large an amount unexpended?

Mr. HERBERT. I will state to the gentleman that if he is, as I believe he is, somewhat familiar with appropriation bills, he must know that all the officers of this Government, civil as well as military, generally make the estimates very much larger than is really necessary. We have not appropriated heretofore in any year as much as was called for; and now I have this letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated January 12, summing up the situation of previous votes for armor and armament, in which he says:

I find there is now unexpended of appropriations heretofore made $6,726,440. If this Congress should appropriate an additional million and a half for armor and armament and the $625,000 increase for the completion of the ordance shop at the Washington navy-yard it would be all the Department desire.

We have put in the bill for armor and armament a million six hundred thousand, and in addition to that $625,000 for ordnance plant.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.
Mr. HERBERT. I was saying when interrupted by this question, about which I do not complain, for I desire to answer questions if gentlemen will confine them to the subject-matter about which I am speaking at the time—at that time I was saying, or about to say, we are making rather slow progress in the manufacture of guns.

There have been assembled and finished at the Washington navyyard three 10-inch, eight 8-inch, nineteen 6-inch, and two 5-inch guns. Now, Mr. Chairman, these guns on trial have demonstrated by their initial velocity that they are equal at least to any guns anywhere in

As to vessels we are making better progress. In fact, it seems generally to be the case throughout the world that it is more difficult, or rather that it takes more time to manufacture modern ordnance than to build modern vessels, at least that contractors oftener fail to come to time. Complaint is frequently made in England of these delays, as I observe in the discussion of this question in the British Parliament. In the manufacture of ordnance they have several private firms there engaged in helping the government, yet they are often behind with ordinance and ships are frequently kept waiting for their guns. We now not only have this plant established in the Washington navy-yard, but we are manufacturing 6-inch guns at the South Boston works and also at the West Point foundry. It has been found heretofore, accord-ing to the calculations furnished us by the Ordnance Department, that the guns made by the Government are rather cheaper than those we get by contract, which, gentlemen will admit, is an anomaly, but so the case is as I get it. But we ought to have guns manufactured not only by the Government but also by private individuals or private firms—first, that there may be competition between Government and private work, and secondly, that we may have more sources of supply to look to in case war should threaten.

Now, when we come to the construction of ships, we have in our new Navy of unarmored vessels twenty-one. This count includes the Roach cruisers, the cruisers laid down by Secretary Whitney, and those authorized in the act of September 7, 1888, which latter have not yet been planned, making twenty-one in all, but it does not include the two ships proposed in this bill. Our armored vessels, comprising part of the new Navy, consist of the five monitors, the Puritan, Amphitrite, Terror, Monadnock, and Miantonomoh, the Maine, the Texas, the 7,500-ton battle-ship carried in the act of September, 1888, and the coast-defense vessel devised under the direction of Secretary Whitney. Adding these nine to the twenty-one unarmored vessels, the new Navy as provided for now will comprise, when these ships are completed, thirty vessels. If the bill passes as the committee have reported it we shall have provided for thirty-two vessels. Besides these we have one torpedo-boat, the Stiletto, purchased complete, another under construction, and a third is authorized, and the Secretary has for this invited plans and bids.

The Baltimore, the Newark, the Vesuvius, the Charleston, and the Petrel have all been launched. These vessels, so far as they have been tried, have given the most satisfactory results.

I have here a table furnished me by Lieutenant Rodgers, at the head of the intelligence office at the Navy Department, comparing the vessels we have authorized with vessels of the same class built and building by foreign pations. I shall append the statement to my speech. ing by foreign nations. I shall append the statement to my speech, and in the mean time will be glad to hand the table to any gentleman who desires to examine it now. On the first page the Baltimore, the Philadelphia, and the San Francisco are compared with the Mersey the Philadelphia, and the San Francisco are compared with the Mersey type of vessels in England, the Jean Bart in France, the Sfax in France, the Irene of Germany, and the Reina Regente, built for the Spanish Government by the Thompsons on the Clyde, in Scotland.

Every particular in regard to these vessels is shown here, their batteries, their protection, their coal capacity, weight of machinery, horsepower, and speed. The Committee on Naval Affairs in studying this question, which I may say we have done rather carefully-whether successfully or not is another matter-came to the same conclusion the Secretary had arrived at, that speed is a very essential thing in a modern vessel; so five of these cruisers which we have already laid down are to be very fast vessels indeed. All the others subsequently authorized we intend shall be very fast. Of those already begun the Philadelphia and the San Francisco, are guarantied to make 19 knots an hour.

Baltimore is estimated to make that speed also.

Comparing these vessels with other ships of the same class, we find that there is but one vessel, the Reina Regente, of Spain, that is faster than these three are expected to be. That Spanish vessel, however, is very much larger than ours. It has 4,900 tons displacement, while the largest of ours I have named has only 4,413 tons displacement. We have every reason to believe that each of the three vessels will considerably exceed 19 knots. The committee will understand, of course, that in order to get very great speed it is necessary to have size to ac-commodate machinery enough to drive the vessel rapidly. Speed can be obtained by either a sacrifice of endurance, a sacrifice of coal capacity, or a sacrifice of armament and of weight generally, but a proper adjustment of all the requisites for speed, the requisites for protection, and the requisites for endurance requires a very exact calculation, and it is believed that when these vessels are examined they will be found to be at least equal, if not superior, to any other in the world, taking into consideration all the elements which I have mentioned.

We have had so far an official return as to speed of only one of these new vessels, the Vesuvius. She is compared here with other vessels of her type, with the Tripoli, Italian; with the Sharpshooter, English; with the Rattlesnake, English; with the Destructor, Spanish; with the Bombe, French, and with the Iljin; and it appears that the Vesuvius is faster than any of these vessels with the exception of the little Spanish. ish vessel called the Destructor, which has made 22.68 knots an hour, whereas the Vesuvius has made but 21.64. The Vesuvius, however, s a much better sea-going vessel; has a better armament, and, taken all together, we think she compares favorably with any vessel of her class, and is, in fact, superior to any.

The Yorktown has also been launched, but there has been no official trial. She is estimated to make 16 knots an hour. At the unofficial trial in shallow water she made 16.80 knots. When tried in the same trial in shallow water she made 16.80 knots. When tried in the same water the Vesuvius was two knots and a half short of the speed which she made in deep water, where the official trial of the Yorktown is shortly to take place. If the Yorktown shall exceed in deep water her speed in shallow water as much as the Vesuvius exceeded hers, she will certainly be superior to any other vessel of her class in the world. She has only 1,704 tons displacement. At any rate, she will very greatly exceed the estimate of 16 knots an hour.

Gentlemen who will examine carefully these tables and see what the estimates are, and take into consideration the fact that the Vesuvius, which was guarantied to make only 20 knots, has exceeded that speed by 1.64 knots, and that the Yorktown has already, in shallow water, exceeded it by .80 of a knot and will probably go up to 18 knots, will I think, justify me in coming to the conclusion that all the vessels we have recently laid down will be at least equal to, if not better than, any other vessels of a similar type in the world.

The Chicago, the Boston, the Atlanta, and the Dolphin, all were well under way when this administration came in. They all have been practically completed during the last four years, and are in commission. The Chicago is waiting for one of her 8-inch guns and will then go to That gun has been completed and it is now at the proving ground near Annapolis, and that vessel, if necessary, can be got to sea very soon, perhaps within two weeks, certainly within three weeks from the present time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to these vessels we recommend in the present bill appropriations for the construction of two other ves-Nothing has been done with the vessels provided for in the last bill. The Secretary of the Navy came to the conclusion that inasmuch as he would be unable to get them under contract and have them properly under way by the time the new administration came in, it would be the part of wisdom, in order to prevent any conflict of opinion, that the administration which was to have practically the construction and finishing of these ships should also have the responsibility and the privilege of laying them down. So he has done nothing with them. The plans, however, are being considered in the Department, some of which will be recommended to the incoming administration.

Believing we could safely venture so far by appropriating for a new navy the same amount carried in previous bills, namely, a little less than $6,000,000 per annum, and intending to treat alike the outgoing and incoming administrations, we have recommended the construction of and incoming administrations, we have recommended the construction of two additional vessels. One of these is to be of the type of the Vesuvius; but that appropriation is only conditional. The power to construct this vessel is given to the Secretary of the Navy only upon the condition that he shall find upon actual trial of the armament of the Vesuvius that the guns are efficient when fired from the vessel. These guns have been tried, and they are undoubtedly very efficient on land.

I think the latest experiments show that this dynamite gun is not as complete and perfect as it can be made. The inventors and owners themselves admit this. Still, enough has been done to demonstrate that this is to be a very efficient weapon, especially upon land. Whether it is to be efficient when fired from a vessel is another question. These guns, it will be remembered, have no carriage upon which they can be trained to the right or the left, or elevated or depressed; they are fixtures in the vessel. In these three dynamite guns which the Vesuvius will carry the charge can be regulated, the amount of pressure measured with very considerable accuracy; and the purpose of the inventor is to regulate the distance the projectile is to traverse by the amount of pressure applied.

Generally heretofore the elevation has been 18 degrees, but whatever may be the degree of elevation fixed in the vessel, the gun will remain a fixture, and the distance the bomb is to be thrown will depend upon the air-charge, the pressure that is brought to bear upon the missile. This gun can throw 500 pounds of dynamite, and from that quantity down to a hundred, by the use of a subcaliber projectile. The proper direction of the gun is to be attained by means of the rudder of the The committee are anxious to see the gun tried on shipboard. There is no doubt that it excels anything yet invented in propelling to a great distance large masses of high explosives. It will be a terribly destructive naval weapon if from a ship it can hit the mark aimed at.

The other vessel we have recommended is to be an armored cruising monitor constructed after designs which were furnished by our colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Thomas]. The plans were transmitted by a subcommittee to the Navy Department for examination and report, and such recommendations as the Department might see fit to make in the premises

By order of the Secretary of the Navy a board was appointed, consisting of Commodore M. Sicard, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance; Commodore W. S. Schley, Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting; Commodore Theodore D. Wilson, Chief of the Bureau of Construction, and Commodore George W. Melville, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering. This board examined them carefully and exhaustively, and they all united in a favorable report, recommending the building of a vessel according thereto. The finding of the board was approved by the Department, and the recommendations concurred in, as the following letter of the Secretary will show:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 9, 1889.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in accordance with the request of the committee, a copy of the report of the officers appointed by me to examine the plans and drawings of the 3,000-ton vessel of wardesigned by the Hon. John R. Thomas, which report has received the approval of the Department.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. H. A. HERBEET, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

The board submitted with their report the following description of the vessel as shown by the plans and specifications:

The aim in the design of this vessel has been to combine, on a limited displacement, large powers of affense and defense; recognizing that the efficiency of an armored vessel intended for ocean or coast purposes is to be measured by the disposition and character of her armament, the ability to use it in all reasonable weather, the protection afforded by the armor, the rate of speed both going ahead and turning, her cruising capacity without recoaling, and her habitaahead and turning, her cruising capacity without recoaling, and her habitability.

First. The battery has been disposed with a special reference to fighting ahead, and of being able to do this in all kinds of fighting weather.

The character of the armament is as follows: Two 10-inch B. L. R. for long range, and capacity for throwing shell charged with high explosive compounds. These guns are mounted in a turret armored with 10-inch solid steel plates, the axis of the guns when level being 11 feet above the fighting load line, with a range of fire from direct ahead to 65 degrees abaft the beam on either side, and by removing the deek-house increasing the range to a practically all-around fire. For close quarters she has a 15-inch Zalinski dynamite gun capable of throwing 800 pounds of high explosive compound, and two under-water bow torpedo-tubes, also a 6-inch rapid-firing B. L. R. located aft. The secondary battery consists of three 3-pounder rapid-firing and one 37-millimeter revolving gun.

bow torpedo-tubes, also a 6-inch rapid-firing B. L. R. located aft. The secondary battery consists of three 3-pounder rapid-firing and one 37-millimeter revolving gun.

Second. To give as great an armor protection as possible on a very limited displacement the armor has been disposed in the form of an arc of a circle turning downwards at the sides to 4 feet below the fighting line; the armor on the crown is 3 inches in thickness, increasing to 5 inches at the sides. In order that the target presented to an enemy may be as small as possible, ballast tanks have been provided capable of holding enough water to lessen the cruising freeboard 3 feet, so that the hull target exposed, in still water, will be represented by a segment of a circle, rising from zero at the water line to 4 feet above at the center of the vessel. A novel feature connected with this armor is the method of supporting it, which is done by a system of longitudinal and transverse girders Is inches deep. On the inner side of these girders is worked a water-tight skin, serving the double purpose of, in the event of any portion of the deck armor being dislodged, arresting any rush of water and forming with the longitudinal support the upper flange of the ship's girder. The transverse girders will be solid every 12 feet, thus localizing any inflow of water. Great care has been taken to further subdivide the ship in numerous water-tight compartments, all of which connect both with the circulating pumps of the engines and powerful wrecking pumps, so that any compartment may be readily freed from water.

On the top of this armor-deck have been worked light false-works, increasing the cruising freeboard to 7 feet 8 inches amidships and giving a comfortable working-deck. In order that these false works may not endanger the stability of the vessel in the case of their being riddled by a machine-gun fire in action, the sides are double with a space of 6 feet between them; this space is filled in with cellulose for the entire length of vessel.

In order that

These plans are not fully completed in all respects, but throughout they are to be approved by the Navy Department, and the vessel is not to be built except upon such approval.

This, I believe, disposes in a general way of the appropriations embraced in this bill, except I had forgotten to mention the fact that in this bill, following previous appropriations, we appropriate all the money necessary to complete the Naval Observatory upon the ground purchased some years ago by the Navy Department and situated in the northwestern portion of this city. We have also put in all the money necessary for the purchase or construction by contract of four new iron

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. HERBERT. Certainly, sir.
Mr. ADAMS. Has the gentleman a recent letter from the Navy Department in regard to this item of construction of steam machinery, saying the estimates in the Book of Estimates are excessive? I will remind the gentleman this estimate authorized the committee to put two new cruisers into this bill, and the sum appropriated here is much less than the Department say they need to carry on this work.

Mr. HERBERT. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry I will read an extract from the letter of January 12, and I will insert the whole letter in my remarks:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 12, 1889.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 12, 1889.

SIR: I have examined the condition of the appropriations heretofore made for the "new Navy," as requested by you.

The appropriations from the act of March 3, 1885, to the act of September 7, 1888, amount altogether, for "construction and steam machinery," to $12,815,000.

There has been expended of that amount up to the present time $4,221,718.69, leaving a balance of about eight and a half millions to the credit of construction and steam machinery" for new ships. Contracts for new ships now outstanding will require the payment of about four and a half millions, leaving about four millions to the credit of the appropriation for the prosecution of the work on the Maine, Texas, and double-turreted monitors and ships not yet contracted.

work on the Maine, Texas, and double-turreted monitors and snips not yet contracted.

If this Congress should appropriate an additional sum of three millions for "construction and steam machinery, new Navy," it will be more money than the Department will require for those purposes up to July, 1890; in fact it would result in a large balance at that date without doubt.

In ordnance I find there is now unexpended of appropriations heretofore made for armor and armament $6,726,440, four millions of which was appropriated by the act of March 3, 1887, for armor and gun-steel.

If this Congress should appropriate an additional sum of a million and a half for armor and armament, and the $625,000 requested for the completion of the ordnance shops at the Washington navy-yard, it would be all that the Department would need up to July, 1890, and in fact large balances will then remain, in my judgment, to the credit of the appropriation.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,

Secretary of the Navy,

Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. H. A. Herbert, Chairman House Naval Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

We appropriated for construction three and a half instead of three millions of dollars in this bill in view of the fact that we did authorize other ships to be constructed. I wish to call the attention of the gentheman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] and the Committee of the Whole to another fact. In scarcely any of these ships, in none of them, I believe, have the contractors been able to work up to the conditions of their contracts. In nearly all they have required or will have to ask indulgence.

Mr. HAYDEN. Time.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, to ask for time. As I said before, in the construction of the new Navy there were many difficulties to be encountered. There was no plant in this country which had ever constructed castings for such engines as are required for these very fast vessels. Other parts of the machinery had heretofore been imported from abroad. All these difficulties our ship-builders had to contend with. They have been finally successful; but there has been delay, unavoidable delay, in all these ship-building contracts. The Secretary considered this whole question, and came to the conclusion this appropriation was ample. Gentlemen must take also into consideration that under a Gentlemen must take also into consideration that under a change of administration there is likely to be still further cause of delay.

The new Secretary, whoever he may be, will have to lay down—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I will take the floor and yield part of my time to the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. As much as he wants.

Mr. HERBERT. I thank my colleague for his courtesy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that when the new Secretary comes in he must familiarize himself with the duties imposed upon him in his new office, with ship-building, with the officials under him. How much time will be required will depend altogether on who he may be, and how familiar he may be with such questions. It will necessarily take a long time to put out these new vessels to contract, and it will be found, I am certain, that three and a half millions in addition to the vast sums now on hand will be ample to meet all expenditures for the next fiscal year. It certainly will be unless some raordinary emergency not now foreseen shall arise during the year.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, there is one other subject on which I desire to say a few words. It seems to me there ought to be a change in our general policy as to the revenue-marine service, the Coast Survey service, and the Fish Commission. We have 40 vessels in the revenue marine with 7,468 tonnage with 212 officers and 791 men. Now, this revenue marine is under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. I would not take this control away from him, but what I would do would be to construct all these vessels hereafter on plans approved by the Secretary of the Navy. The revenue-marine vessels are not now efficient fighting ships. They have no protection at all, even for their machinery. Their engines are all vertical, exposed to an enemy's fire. They are not fit for service in case of war.

I hope this question will be taken up and Congress will enact hereafter that every vessel provided for the revenue marine shall be adapted, when built, for service in case of war. The officers hereafter mustered into this service ought to be all taken from the surplus graduates of the Naval Academy at Annapolis. We educate men there every year—educate them thoroughly—for the naval service, and then send them to their homes when they would make efficient officers for the revenue marine. If these revenue-marine vessels were all commanded by naval officers it would enable them to acquire knowledge that would be simply invaluable. They would thus familiarize themselves with every bay and inlet and every possible landing on our shores. I throw this out as a suggestion for consideration in the future. The sailors, too, on board those vessels ought every one of them to be mustered into the naval service—sworn in for military duty.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. PETERS. Have we not enough naval officers now in the service, who are doing nothing, to officer the marine service?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; I think not. Until I looked into the matter I was myself under the impression, and it is quite a common one, that we have many naval officers who are idle and ought to be put to work. These officers labor under a great deal of opprobrium because the public does not know what they are doing; but the fact is that great numbers of them are detailed on duty in or about the construction of the new vessels and the building of new guns, and many in the performance of other duties which can not be and will not be done as faithfully and well by any other class of officials.

Every piece of steel that goes into the make-up of a ship, every plate, every shape, every angle; and every jacket, every tube, every breech-block, every pin that goes into a gun is carefully inspected by some naval officer. This is an immense work and requires many officers, and where is the official that can in this work be trusted as implicitly as those thoroughly educated men who must sail these ships and fight these guns?

But passing from that, Mr. Chairman, the Coast Survey is already under the Navy to this extent, that the Navy furnishes the officers, but the men are not regularly mustered into the service of the Navy, as I think they should be. The tonnage of the 22 vessels employed in the Coast Survey is 2,659, and all of them could be adapted to naval service. The size of these vessels is sufficient to make them useful as dispatch or torpedo boats. There is no economy, no wisdom, no foresight, in having vessels continually on the seas, belonging to the Government, commanded by naval officers, and yet wholly unfitted for naval service if the country were at war. Coast-Survey vessels, revenue-marine vessels, light-house tenders—none of these would be less fitted for the duties they now perform if better adapted for service in fitted for the duties they now perform if better adapted for service in defending the country. But passing from that suggestion, which I propose to take some opportunity in the future to elaborate, there is one other amendment which we propose to offer to the bill, and that is this, to insert between lines 21 and 22, on page 13 of the bill, these words:

For the purchase in fee and the occupation, survey, and erection of the necessary buildings thereon, of the lands upon and near the bay and harbor of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, Samoa, for a coaling station, $100,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman passes from the Coast Survey I would like to ask him whether I understand him as stating that the committee will offer an amendment relating to the revenue marine and Coast Survey in the direction he has named?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; I do not so state. I was simply offering, for consideration hereafter, suggestions which have occurred to myself. I do not think that such an amendment would be in order upon this bill. I merely throw out suggestions now, and hope that they will be acted upon in the future.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the Senate has sent back a House bill containing an appropriation of a somewhat similar character to this, but is not the same in terms. This proposed amendment provides for the purchase in fee and the occupation, survey, and erection of the necessary buildings for a coaling station at the point named in Samoa. No such words appeared in the Senate amendment to the diplomatic bill. I do not think it is necessary in this connec-tion to enter into any elaborate discussion of the Samoan troubles. Suffice it to say that an examination of the correspondence between the diplomatic representatives of the Government of the United States and of Germany shows that there is and has been all along an understanding and agreement, which was as plain as words could make it, between these parties that the autonomy of the native government of the Samoan Islands was to be respected by the three powers, Germany, England, and the United States.

It has seemed from recent occurrences that there was an intention on the part of Germany to do what it appears this morning the German Government has expressly disavowed, to interfere with the autonomy of the Samoan Government and to make a conquest of those islands. Certainly many things which have transpired, especially the action taken by the representatives of the German Government there, would give color to that idea; and yet we find this morning the newspapers of the day containing an express disavowal on the part of Germany of any intention to make a conquest of those islands or to interfere with the rights there of the United States or Great Britain.

Mr. PETERS. That is only a diplomatic disavowal, is it not?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know in what other way it could come except in a diplomatic manner. All I have to say now is this: The deed and the treaty under which we have heretofore occupied lands for a coaling station possibly may be taken to imply that we have only a case; we propose here to make a sufficient appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase in fee—these are the words used, and I call the attention of gentlemen to them because they are significant of the purpose of Congress if it passes the amendment—to purchase and hold perpetually the lands there upon which we now have a coaling We wish to remove all doubt about our intention to permanently occupy.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that it is necessary to discuss that question any further. I shall offer that amendment by instruction of the committee during the day when we reach that portion of the bill to which it is applicable.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him in that connection, to ask if he does not understand from the papers submitted on yesterday that Mr. Goward, who acted as the agent of the Government of the United States in reference to the securing of the lands in this harbor of Pago Pago, did obtain them in fee-simple on the shores of that island? Does he not mention the fact that, in connection with and involving the right of the Government to lands in that harbor, there was the signature of the four persons who owned the real estate on the shores of the harbor, and the transaction was understood as conferring a title in fee?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not so understand it, although I confess that I have not had an opportunity of examining the papers very fully or carefully. But here is what Mr. Goward stated himself:

In my opinion this instrument might be regarded as transferring to the United States title to the land. At the time I was not authorized or prepared to accept an absolute title in fee-simple, not knowing how far the United States Government desired to proceed in the matter. For that reason the phraseology employed was that used in the treaty, leaving thereby the interpretation of the same to the Department.

Mr. ADAMS. Before we leave that part of the bill, I would suggest to the gentleman whether it would not be better for the committee to consider whether the adoption of the phrase as suggested by him might not be construed as a concession away of rights which we possibly have already, and that a more general phrase making an appropriation to acquire whatever lands are necessary in this harbor for the use of the Government as a coaling station would accomplish the same purpose as well as secure for us whatever privileges we may now pos-

To adopt this amendment would be a statement by this House that we have not a fee-simple; but to take another form you need not give away any right, and yet at the same time secure all the advantages which the committee desire to secure.

Mr. MORROW. I would like the gentleman from Alabama to read the other portion of that letter.

Mr. HERBERT (reading):

Goat Island was the place selected as the place for raising the flag commemorating this event in consideration of the fact that it commanded a view of the whole harbor, with the intention of not confining the United States Government in the selection of any particular part of the shore for use as a coaling station during the period covered by the language of the treaty, namely, ten years

Mr. ADAMS. All Mr. Goward meant was that he did not mean to

Mr. ADAMS. All Mr. Goward meant was that he did not mean to put a legal construction on the treaty.

Mr. HERBERT. I will state in view of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] that the wording of that amendment has not been considered by the committee, though the substance was. It was drawn up by myself, and the form has not been considered by the other members of the committee, but it will be considered in the Committee of the Whole, and any suggestion can be made as to the language to be used. Speaking for myself, I certainly desire in this language to be used. Speaking for myself, I certainly desire in this amendment not to surrender but rather to insist on whatever rights we may have in this island. In my opinion, it is not capable of misconstruction, but I am quite ready for suggestions.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought that was what the gentleman intended.

Before we arrive at the consideration of that part of the bill, I wanted it to be in the mind of the chairman of the committe, and I have no doubt as to what his desire is.

Mr. HERBERT. There is one other bit of information I think I ought to give to the committee in view of the present attitude of affairs. It relates to the condition of our fleet in the waters accessible to Samoa. In case anything as deplorable as a war between the two countries should occur this committee ought to fully understand the situation. The distance between San Francisco and Samoa is 4,230 miles, and to traverse it at 10 knots an hour would require eighteen days. The distance from the German ports by way of the Suez Canal is 13,880 miles, and it would require to traverse that distance at 10 knots an hour fifty eight days, giving us an advantage of forty days. In case of necessity we could assemble at San Francisco in ten days twelve merchant steamers for transportation with a capacity of 5,300 infantry and 592 artillery. In thirty days we could assemble there eleven other steamers with a capacity of 3,778 infantry and 448 artillery with their guns.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Are they over there?
Mr. HERBERT. We have not got the troops there. I am simply giving what we could do if we had the troops there. But there would be no trouble about getting readily all the troops we could transport. These vessels that I have spoken of are not naval vessels, but could, in case of necessity, be engaged for the transportation of infantry and artillery. Our squadron in the Pacific Ocean consists of the Adams, six guns; the Alert, four guns; the Nipsic, six guns; the Trenton, ten guns; the Vandalia, eightguns; and the Mohican, eightguns; in all forty-two guns, with a total of 11,678 tonnage displacement. Besides this there is our Asiatic squadron. Of these vessels the Nipsic is already there, the Trenton and Vandalia are on their way there, and others can rapidly be sent there.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. The Dolphin is on her way there.
Mr. HERBERT. The Asiatic squadron consists of the Marion, the Omaha, the Dolphin (now on her way), the Pinto, and Palos, altogether of 6,570 tons displacement and thirty-two guns.

Germany has in the Pacific Ocean three vessels, the Olga, ten guns, of 2,169 tonnage; the Adler, four guns, of 884 tons; and the Eber, three guns, with 570 tons displacement. In China she has the Wolf, four guns, and the Iltis, four guns, each of 489 tons displacement, altogether making twenty-five guns, with a total tonnage of 4,651. Besides these, Germany has in the Indian Ocean the Leipsig, the Sophia, the Carola, the Mowe, the Schwalbe, and the Pfeil, with a total tonnage of 11,613, with forty-four guns.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, of anything else that I desire to say, unless some gentleman desires to ask a question.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to what is found in the communication made to the Senate yesterday by the Secretary of State in a letter which he transmitted. I call attention to this part of a letter from Mr. Goward to Assistant Secretary Rives, dated January 31, 1889, which is evidently a mistake.

The four persons signing this instrument were appointed as commissioners on behalf of the Samoan authorities in view of the fact that they were individual owners of property along the shore of the harbor of Pago Pago,

Continuing, the letter says:

In my opinion, this instrument might be regarded as transferring to the United States title to the land,

I will also give the deed here:

To whom it may concern: Be it known that we, the undersigned, being duly authorized and empowered by the Taimua and Faipule of the Samoan Government, do hereby, on this 5th day of August, 1878, transfer to the Government of the United States the privilege of using the port of Pago Pago, and the shores thereof, in accordance with the provisions of a treaty of friendship and commerce concluded at Washington, in the United States of America, between the United States and Samoa, on the 17th day of January, 1878.

Mr. HERBERT. I concede there seems to be some doubt as to whether we have a fee-simple title to the land. The purpose of the amendment is to remove this doubt. If gentlemen desire it we can revise the amendment in Committee of the Whole. We want to make an appropriation in language that will make our meaning exceedingly That appropriation should be under the control of the Secretary clear. of the Navy

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman state to the House the reason why he doubts our ownership?

Mr. HERBERT. The words that I have just read used by Mr. Goward who negotiated this matter. He said he did not feel that he had any authority from the Government to accept the concession. He certainly leaves the matter in doubt. I have just read his words. If they do not convey any doubt to the mind of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kerr] they certainly do to mine, and I think the doubt ought to be removed so that it can not exist in the mind of anybody.

Mr. MORROW. I merely wished to call attention to this by way of supplement to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] said as to the propriety of so modifying the language as not to admit that there is any doubt about our rights there.

Mr. HERBERT. I am very much obliged to the committee for its

Washington, D. C., January 25, 1889.

Dear Sir: I send you herewith tables comparing the cruisers now under construction with those of similar type and class in foreign navies; also showing the present ship-building programmes of foreign navies.

I have delayed sending these to you in order to get some data concerning the Yorktown's trials; but I am now informed by the contractors that the trials thus far held were merely preliminary and for their own instruction, so that I am only able to state that the Yorktown has not yet been officially tried.

The weight of machinery of the Vesuvius appears greater, than that of other vessels of a similar class; but it is believed that her boilers are of a much more durable and consequently heavier type.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the committee, unless some gentleman on the other side wishes to be heard first. understand that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], intends to speak upon this bill, and if he does I shall be glad to wait until after he has addressed the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE intimated that he did not wish to speak at that

Mr. McADOO. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to go into details on the various items of the bill, because I take it that there is substanon the various items of the bill, because I take it that there is substantially no objection to its passage. However, we are engaged in a very grave, responsible, and patriotic task. We are upbuilding the American Navy, and the thanks of the people of the United States are due largely to the present excellent official head of the Navy Department and to the two or three Congresses which have preceded this one for the very substantial appropriations they have made for this very good and laudable work. The American people are proud of their Navy; they are proud of its history, and in a republican form of government like ours it does not meet with any of the jealousy which surrounds the regular Army. The fathers of the Republic, the men who laid down the foundations on which our liberties rest, always favored the naval establishment as against a standing army. The power of the navi is directed against the enemies of the nation on the outside, and hence defends rather than threatens the liberty of the citizen, and it is to the fends rather than threatens the liberty of the citizen, and it is to the credit of the naval establishments of the world that in all history there has never been an instance where a navy has turned its guns against the liberties of its country.

If time permitted and the committee was not weary of a long discussion, I would be very glad to do what I did in a former Congress, cite a few instances from the state papers showing the high regard and respect and veneration in which the naval establishment was held by the fathers of the Republic. The history of the United States Navy, as I have already stated, is a very glorious one and is the proud inheritance of Americans for all time. The story of its victories and achievements reads like a romance when one reflects on the power of the foes it overcame and the difficulties that it encountered. The history of naval architecture in the United States is also interesting. From 1840 to architecture in the United States is also interesting. From 1840 to 1860 we were one of the greatest naval powers on the globe. Our ships were the admiration of the peoples in every port into which they sailed. The American clipper ship was queen of the ocean and basked in the sunshine of universal praise. The old frigate Congress led the van of naval progress and power. The infant Republic, feeling its way through unknown forests into the heart of a continent on the one hand, boldly on the other hand distanced its maturer rivals for supremacy on to the armored iron and steel vessels.

Our ships, as I have said, were the models upon which other nations built their navies, and up to 1860 we were probably the leading naval power of the world. The transitions of American naval architecture may be briefly summed up as follows: First came the great sailing frigates, cruisers, and sloops—wooden vessels. From that the first step, when steam became the factor in civilization, was the side-wheeler, and from that came the propeller. The first war vessel with a propeller was the Princeton, and it is to the honor of that celebrated, patriotic, and progressive family in my own State, the Stevenses, that through their efforts that vessel was built. From the wooden propeller we advanced during the war, and were the first nation to make the advance to the Monitor type of war vessel. We led the world in that. We advanced to the armored iron and steel vessels.

It is very interesting, and it will take but a moment for me to remind gentlemen of the fact, that to the citizens of the Southern States, to those who managed the naval affairs of the Confederacy, is due to a large extent the credit of that tremendous advance in naval architecture, and if time permitted it would be entertaining to recount the manner in which, with the few facilities they had at command, and with their lack of ship-building resources, they developed the naval skill by which they took the old hulk of the Merrimack and transformed it into the Confederate ram Virginia. We built to meet this powerful adversary the Monitor. We built also what was called the New Ironsides, the first armored vessel of our Navy. The war pro-New Ironsides, the first armored vessel of our Navy. The war progressed, and we met every emergency as to the Navy with wondrous skill and energy. At the close of the war, however, our commerce had, unfortunately, disappeared. American ship-building was on the decline. We ceased to progress as a naval power. By the genius of our people, both North and South, we had given the stimulus, the impetus which has since produced the powerful navies of Europe, the iron and steel and armored vessels, and the whole advance in naval architecture; but we stopped ourselves. We were the schoolmaster; they were the ready pupils; but we did not profit by our own lesson.

After the war a very unwise policy was pursued. We brought out

After the war a very unwise policy was pursued. We brought out of that war a large number of the old wooden vessels. We brought out of it our smooth-bore Dahlgren gun. We were proud of those vessels and proud of the memories which clustered around them, and we kept our naval establishment wholly made up of wooden cruisers. We expended very large sums of money, aggregating $400,000,000 of taxes of the people of the United States, upon this obsolete type of vessel, and we made no advance. We made no advance in our vessels; we made no advance in our engines; we made no advance in the armament of our vessels; and, so far as the Navy is concerned, this money ment of our vessels; and, so far as the Navy is concerned, this money was absolutely lost to the people from whom it was taken in the shape of taxation. It gave us scandals, but no ships. As I have already said, one of the reasons of this failure was, in all probability, at least let us so charitably suppose, the decline of American ship-building. Why American ship-building declined is too broad and general a question for me to discuss on this bill.

The first advance which the new navy took was in June, 1881, when the advisory board proposed for the building of the steel cruisers—the Chicago, the Atlanta, the Dolphin, and the Boston—now all in commission, except the Chicago. These vessels were authorized to be built by the act of March 30, 1883. We then began to build the modeln unarmored steel cruisers. Europe had long preceded us in the building of these vessels, which are swift-moving, powerful gun-carrying commerce destroyers. When the present Administration came into power we continued this policy on a broader and more general scale.

And I think I may say, without attempting any eulogy of my colleagues of the Naval Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, that we have endeavored very wisely, as we think, to second the efforts of the present very able, patriotic, and efficient head of the Navy Department—than whom there has never been from the foundation of the Government until this moment a better administrator of naval affairs-to build up the American Navy on a modern and proge

That committee has labored with this object in view: The American people having to support the excellent personnel of the Navy, having an efficient corps of officers upon the lists whose salaries they must pay whose education they have given to them, we thought it our duty not to ask the time of this House upon questions of personnel, important in themselves, upon questions relating even to the administration of the Department itself, but that it was our duty to meet the demand of the American people by giving a substantial matériel in the shape of a modern navy to the people of the United States, who pay for it. Hence the committee has subordinated all minor questions to the main questions. tion—the only question—which was to get good ships with the least possible expense, honestly built, guns of modern type to protect our commerce and to free us from the dangerous cupidity and selfishness of the powerful nations of the real dangerous cupidity and selfishness of the poorer but powerful nations of the world who view with envious eyes the prosperity of this great Republic. And the members on this side of the House are proud of the record which has been made by the present Administration in dealing with naval affairs.

As the distinguished chairman of our committee [Mr. Herbert] has so well said, giving the minute details in support of his statement, we have laid the foundation for an adequate not a resplendent navy; we are not endeavoring to compete with the great nations of Europe in fitting up these powerful ships; we have no desire to enter the lists for resplendent military establishments either on the land or on the sea, to burden our people with unnecessary taxation and threaten their lib-erties with the machinery of their own creation. But we believe that the great mass of the American people, whether on the exposed sea-board of 12,000 miles in extent or in the interior of this vast Republic, are overwhelmingly in favor of the upbuilding of an efficient navy to protect the domestic security, the rights, the commerce, the dignity, the self-respect of sixty-five million of the most powerful and the most prosperous people on the earth. The great difficulty which the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Chandler, which the advisory board, and which the present Administration have met, was this: No country can be a naval power unless it can build its own ships in all their details

That country which depends upon bought ships made in other lands by other people-that country which has not resources to build up even by other people—that country which has not resources to build up even the waste in its navy, is not a naval power. Chili might possess a hundred of the best cruisers the world has seen; Brazil, China, Japan, and all of these nations that are dependent upon Great Britain, France, and Italy for the building of their ships—no matter how powerful their existing navies may be—as a matter of fact are not and can not be rated as naval powers. That nation alone is a naval power which not only has a navy, has guns and ships, but has the capability within its own domain of building modern ships and guns with its own plant or that of its citizens by skilled mechanics and has the inventive gening to conits citizens, by skilled mechanics, and has the inventive genius to construct ships to replace those which may be lost in battle or may become unserviceable from other causes. Lord Brassey, in the English Commons, and M. Ménard Dorian, in the French Deputies, have well spoken on this subject.

The true standard by which we may gauge our own strength and that of possible enemies was laid down in the statesmanlike speech made by M. Ménard Dorian, in the discussion on the French navy estimates, in the Chamber of Deputies, on the 20th of January, 1887:

estimates, in the Chamber of Deputies, on the 20th of January, 1887:

Picture to yourself the results of the first encounter between hostile fleets!

Most terrible assuredly they must be, with the means of destruction which science has placed at the command of the navy. It is probable that both sides will be but ill-prepared to renew the engagement. The survivors from the first struggle will be too few to resume the combat. With whom, then, will the supremacy over the seas remain? With the nation possessing the largest industrial resources; with that power which shall be the first to replace the fleet destroyed by the rapid construction of a new fleet. Therefore it is that the real strength of England lies, not in her dock-yards, not in her public establishments, but in the combined creative resources of her private ship-building yards.

Hore was the great disfinalty, then for yours as a country. The world

Here was the great difficulty, then, for us as a country. The world had advanced from the age of wood to the age of iron, and from the age had advanced from the age of wood to the age of iron, and from the age of iron to the age of steel, and from steel to compound armor, from the cast gun to the made-up gun, not the old gun which was cast in a mold, but the new gun which is made up from its foundation, the parts being assembled together in rings or bands, which are made of steel subjected to hydraulic pressure or pounded under a steam hammer to a hardness which is almost incredible. We had no private establishment which had made even the ordinary steel plates for framing ships, and was capable of handing over to the Government these tremendous ingots of steel, for either armor or guns. Even the steel plates had to be imsteel, for either armor or guns. Even the steel plates had to be imported. It takes nearly $1,000,000 to set up a private plant for hydraulic pressure that will give you a mass of steel fit to make a piece of armor or suitable for constructing one of these made-up guns.

The present Secretary of the Navy, in the light of official and Congressional investigation, as soon as Congress had made sufficient appropriations to present proper inducements to private enterprise, advertised for bids throughout the country to stimulate the steel manufacturers of the United States, and as a result what four years ago I heard a commodore of the United States Navy say was a "dream of the future" is a reality of the present. The Bethlehem Iron Works of the State of Pennsylvania responded, and to-day there is being erected in that State and within eighteen months there will be as a matter of fact in actual operation machinery for subjecting masses of steel to hydraulic pressure; so that we shall not be dependent upon any nation of the world, but we shall arm our own ships with steel guns made in our own country of unlimited resources. The armor on their sides to repel the hostile projectile will be made of the steel from our native hills, made by American hands in American manufactories by American machinery.

Now, this was not alone the great difficulty. It was not to be supposed that American mechanics had kept pace with the tremendous strides in naval architecture. Our ship-building, as I have already said, had declined. Our ship-yards were closed. We had built no steel vessels. We had built no modern ironclads. But, sir, in the short space of four years, to the eternal credit of the genius of the American mechanic, to his wonderful adaptability to the demands of the hour, to his quick intelligence and marvelous energy, we are turning out guns, as I could show you from the book of Sir Edward J. Reed, the best auas I could show you from the book of Sir Edward 3. Rece, the best authority on the English navy, guns not surpassed anywhere in Europe, turning them out at the gun-foundry at the navy-yard here in Washington, and at the South Boston and West Point private establishments. The steel forgings for these guns are all the work of private enterprise, and have shown avecllent results. Levella read to you from authority and have shown excellent results. I could read to you from authority showing the steel vessels built by us to-day in tensile strength of the metal of which they are composed and in their speed are not surpassed anywhere. All this in a few years.

We have already far distanced the Esmeralda type of ship built in England and sold to Chili. For all this credit is to be given to the Secretary of the Navy and his official advisers, to the Congress of the United States, to the Administration, and to the former Secretary of the Navy; but most of the credit after all belongs to the private enterprise, the genius and push of Americans.

When once the field was open, when once inducements were held out for the investment of private capital, we have advanced, until to-day, as I have said, we are on the high road to be independent of every mercantile, every ship-building, and every naval power on earth so far as naval resources are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, but a few weeks ago our people become aware of what was the first of a series of frictions on the Southern Pacific and Atlantic. We were in these cases made painfully aware of the needs of a naval service, reminded sorrowfully of the $400,000,000 wasted upon wooden ships and smooth-bore guns, made humiliatingly aware of our inferiority in ships and guns to the least of the great naval powers of

The rights of American citizens, we were told by the cable, had been disregarded by a foreign nation, our treaty-secured privileges infringed, and our flag, which was the symbol of our nationality, and which appeals to the noblest sentiment and the most sacred memories, had en ruthlessly insulted by an invading European force on a far-off island, and that, offensively or defensively, our guns, which were obsolete, and which had been kept up at this immense expense of money taken from the people, were confronted by steel sides of armor and rifle-cannon of modern type, and our men, as brave as men can be, as able, daring, efficient, and patriotic as those of any navy in the world, had scarcely anything but their naked valor to present to the cold defiance of modern ships and guns of a very moderate naval power. Prince Bismarck has paid more attention to his great army than to the navy, and Germany is much behind the other great nations as a naval power.

Now, what I wish to impress on this House is this: First, the necessity of an adequate naval establishment; and, secondly, that it takes time to get one. You must not suppose because we are a wealthy nation with an immense surplus in the Treasury we can get a navy as a man gets a pair of shoes or a suit of ready-made clothing.

ann gets a pair of shoes or a suit of ready-made clothing.

It takes time to build one of these powerful vessels. It takes time to assemble one of these great rifle-guns. We have sought the advice of the present chief of the bureau, an efficient officer, to tell us how we can facilitate the making of these guns; whether there was any way in which it could be done faster, and he told us no; that he is using all his endeavors, and notwithstanding all the power of private enterprise in the United States; notwithstanding we have advanced so far in this direction, yet we can not get guns for the vessels as far as they have been built. We are building a few partially armored vessels. One is called Maine, which is being built in New York, and the other Texas, which is being built in the Norfolk navy-yard. They are large vessels, but not so large as some of the same general type in Europe—such as the Inflexible, of the British navy, or the Duilio, of the Italian navy, both large and powerful armored vessels. But with all the resources of the British navy, with all its dock-yards, with a number of private ship-building establishments on the Clyde and other rivers, it would take four or five years to plan and construct one of those vessels. We can build them, we feel sure, as fast as the British Government can, but it will take a few years before these vessels are ready for commission. One of these tremendous modern war vessels is the result of all practical science to date.

Why, sir, the modern war vessel of the type of the Maine or the Texas is the net result and the product of the whole science of mechanics, and is the acme and high-water mark of the science of the age as displayed in mechanical arts. It embodies, taking its armor and guns, the science of their construction, the adaptation of modern skill and ingenuity in the utilization of the electric light, and in the use of powerful explosives and combinations in these, the whole sum of human knowlexplosives and combinations in these, the whole sum of human knowledge in the practical sciences. To construct, therefore, one of these huge monsters of naval war, one of these splendidly equipped vessels, powerful enough to withstand the projectile launched by a gun capable of sending a shot 7 miles with power sufficient to penetrate 15 inches of compound solid armor which has been subjected to hydraulic pressure, and capable of carrying 10-inch guns, which will be equally destructive against an enemy's ship, as well as to protect, by ingenious regard to space without loss of power, its vitals, the powerful engines capable of propelling the huge monster at a speed of from 17 to 19 or even 22 knots an hour, calls forth all of the intellect, thought, research, investigation, and cunning and available resources now known to sci-even 22 knots an hour, calls forth all of the intellect, thought, research, investigation, and cunning and available resources now known to science and the mechanical arts of the day.

And in regard to the construction of these vessels, Mr. Chairman, we will build them as fast as any country; but at best it takes no little time. You can not build a great war vessel as speedily as a merchantman. We are turning out cruisers faster and faster; we are building them better and better as we go on, and every time a private ship-yard in Philadelphia, in Baltimore, or in San Francisco builds a war vessel of the type of these new ships now being constructed, each one will be an improvement upon the last, because in building them we are educating the mechanical ability of America up to the point where it will go far beyond that of the nations of Europe.

It has been said, sir, as a criticism upon the present Administration, not on the floor of the House, but I have seen it in the press of the country, that we have been obliged to go abroad for some of the plans of our modern vessels. Admit it to be true, Mr. Chairman; but was not that a wise thing to do? Our officers, brilliant and able as they are, had gotten into a rut or groove from lack of practical experience that handicapped them in either building or planning new engines and ships, and our ship-building interest had sadly declined. Your engines in the Trenton were at that time the highest type known in the United States, and they were capable of making but nine or maybe ten knots an hour. The Atlantic lines are crossing in less than seven days. Noah built a good ark, but could he build the ship City of New York? We were obliged, having fallen so far behind the rest of the world, to advise ourselves as to what progress was being made in this direction; but now that we have put our hand to the plow and gained that experience the time is near when we will invent and build such vessels that Europe will in turn seek to copy from us. A notable illustration of that may be found in the pending bill.

Here is a proposition from a gentleman, a member of this House and of the Naval Committee, for the construction of a vessel which I believe is a most excellent type of war ship. I believe the gentleman does not claim that there is anything novel or striking or sensational in the plans he has submitted, but that it is merely a combination of the best features of naval architecture as now understood. It is a gunthe best features of naval architecture as now understood. It is a gunboat type with a great deal of speed, and I venture to say that if this ship is a success, as the gentleman and his friends claim it will be and as the officials of the Navy Department certify, we will find the European nations copying the models presented by a civilian member of this House instead of by a naval expert.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as this bill is concerned, the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. Herbert] has gone over the details of it fully and carefully. He has done so with such accuracy and pleasures as to rander it unprecessary to proceed in that line and and clearness as to render it unnecessary to proceed in that line, and has shown clearly as to why we are expending every dollar that the bill carries; so that I need not repeat what has been so well said. But there is one feature in respect to the naval establishment of which I want to speak here on the outgoing of the present Administration, and as the party of which I have the honor to be a member goes out of power in the House. The chairman of the committee has well said that the present Secretary of the Navy, who is without a superior in the whole history of the Government as a naval director and administrator, tried to inaugurate reforms in the Department. We are spending $20,000,000 a year on our naval establishment. That money, as I have already said, is drawn by taxation from the people of the coun-They have the right to know that every dollar of that money is try. They have wisely expended.

I have spoken before in this House of the defects of the present bureau system and the duplication of official heads and the unnecessary clerical and other forces engaged in the administration of the naval department. The present Secretary of the Navy has endeavored to secure a reform of that feature, and he is on record now in the reports in this House upon it, and I trust sincerely as one member of this body, without regard to partisan considerations, anxious only for the upbuilding of the Navy by wise administration, that the administration which is to come in, whoever may be called to that Department—and the reporters tell us that everybody is to be called—that whoever may be called by the President-elect to administer naval affairs in this country will follow in the footsteps of his predecessor, and endeavor to reform the administrative features of our naval institution. It is sadly in need of reform. We have had bureau after bureau duplicating their purchases, and fighting for the subject of caste until, as I said in the last Congress, the only illustration which I can give of the system now prevailing in the Department is that of the Brahmins of India, where they have so many castes that if one man lays down a pot, it is against the religion of another to take it up, and some other Brahmin of a different caste must be employed to remove it; and then it may be against the religion of another to put it upon the stove, and a man must be employed for that purpose, and so on ad infinitum. [Laughter.] Here let me read briefly from the testimony of Secretary Whitney given before the Committee on Naval Affairs in 1886. Among other things he said:

for that purpose, and so on ad infinitum. [Laughter.] Here let me read briefly from the testimony of Secretary Whitney given before the Committee on Naval Affairs in 1886. Among other things he said:

* * Each bureau carries its independent organization right down through the yards, and all the yards have duplicate shops that are doing the same general class of work. For instance, the Bureau of Construction and the Bureau of Steam Engineering, but the Bureau of Construction has a good deal of machine work. Of course this work is the specia province of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, but the Bureau of Construction has a good deal of it also. As I say, each of them has its machine-shop in the yard, with its separate foreman, its separate writers, and so on, the bureau superintending its own work.

Now, the effort to simplify this arrangement and to get rid of superfluous shops is a very difficult matter under the present organization, because when we take work from one independent bureau and transfer it to another and say, "When you want a certain class of work done you must go there for it," objection is raised to the transfer. The same state of things exists with regard to stores and store-houses. Each bureau has its separate stores and store-houses and its separate organization to look out for them. It struck me that this was the reason that the general expenses of the navy-yards were so heavy. So it occurred to me—and I found that the same defect had been pointed out before and more or less similar plans suggested to remedy it; it is nothing new with me—it occurred to me, it say, that the organization might be simplified a good deal by the natural division of the work of the Department into three parts as we have it here in this bill. This is the inevitable division. There are three separate things that the Navy Department deals with—the military part of the work, the constructing part, and the supplies and account part.

It seemed to me that it would be well to make this the first step in reorganization—to be a very large saving in the organization expenses.

By Mr. SAYERS:

By Mr. Savers:

Q. Do I understand that you would leave the inspection of the articles to the different Departments they were purchased for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say that while you propose to have a Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, which is to make all purchases, etc., yet, after these supplies were bought—if they were bought for the Bureau of Material, Construction and Repair, it would be inspected by that bureau?

A. Yes, sir; the inspection as to character and quality shall be done by the bureau requiring it, which has the technical knowledge with regard to the particular article. Then we should have a business organization. And, so far as this question is a question at all, it comes down to this—and I think Mr. BOUTELLE will really agree with me about it, because it is so in private yards, I am sure—it is simply a question whether there ought not to be some one who is responsible for the whole ship. I am sure no private yard would allow four different sets of people to work at a ship with their different branches, without some man somewhere in the yard who was responsible for the reconciling of their different plans and responsible for the whole ship. Now, I think there is no partisanship about this, and there ought to be no politics. My only desire is to do the very best that can be done, and if this is a good thing, let us have it. I have no desire except to improve the service. What I say is, let the Secretary have somebody over these bureaus of various branches of construction who shall be responsible for the whole ship.

As it is now, the only man above these people is the Secretary of the Navy, who has not the technical knowledge or time to sit down and confer with the different bureaus to determine what the characteristics of a ship shall be, or to decide when they bring up a technical question of repairs. A question may arise, for instance, as to whether new boilers shall be built for a ship that is in China. The ship is there, a hull; some one man, in short, above the bureaus other than the Secretary of the Navy, to tie them up together, and to be responsible for the whole ship.

I say, in the first place, give me a man at the head of all the work of construction, then give me this board, the heads of these bureaus being represented in the council, and put the board where it is not all the time occupied with the details of executive work, so that its members can inform themselves as to what other countries are doing in the way of building ships, and to make them, as it were, a reservation of information where the Secretary can go when he requires it. We have very smart men in the naval service; there are no smarter men anywhere than our young men of the Navy, who have made a study of ordnance and are thoroughly acquainted with the subject; and I would make it the business of these smart men to keep themselves informed with regard to the subject of the construction of ships and the characteristics of the best modern vessels.

It is so with the United States Navy. We have the bureaus duplicated until there is too much division of responsibility. Reform the Navy by making a direct responsibility and by centralizing all these bureaus on the lines suggested by Secretary Whitney. I hope the opposition will take that up; and if they do, let them have the glory of it. Let military men attend to military affairs. You educate a man Let military men attend to military affairs. You educate a man now to fight a ship and then set him to buying groceries or superintending sewer-building, or engage him to watch another man doing these

The chairman of the committee has adverted to the fact that we have in this bill an appropriation to take advantage of an offer made to us by the Samoan authorities at Pago Pago. Now, the chiefs of these islands made to the United States a right to a harbor for coaling and other purposes in the island.

The islands are located, as gentlemen know, in the Pacific Ocean, on the ocean route between San Francisco and Australia. They are in the course of commercial travel. They are of infinite advantage for a coaling station on the very long voyage from New Zealand, from Auckland, and from Melbourne and Sydney to San Francisco. They have besides, of course, much commercial importance, much greater than many gentlemen are aware of. Their exports are quite large. The United States has secured in an honorable way the right of making the harbor of Pago Pago a coaling depot, which would be of great use to us in case of war, because the modern war vessel is propelled by steam, the steam is made by coal, and when the coal gives out the vessel is like a dead whale. It drifts along, a helpless thing, on the ocean; it is a thing of death, and not a thing of life; and therefore all the greatest nations of the world are trying to secure for themselves places where they can get supplies of coal in emergencies so as to steam from point to point with facility, and in case of emergency where they can get, in remote regions especially, their supplies. This harbor is of very great advantage to us. We have gotten it in an honorable way. We have made no trade or dicker with any foreign nation about it, and we have got it to ourselves, and it is for this Congress by this bill to take advantage of the fact.

tage of that fact.

Mr. Chairman, so far as the Samoan question is concerned—and it is germane to the naval question—I simply desire to say that the first thing in my opinion which Congress should do is to ascertain all the facts in the case. We have been taunted in Europe as a people that vaunt ourselves in boasting of our prowess. It is unnecessary for us to do that. Every living being on this globe knows we are the most wealthy and the most powerful of nations in resources, with a population of the control of the lation of 65,000,000 of as brave a people as ever lived. Our free institutions have purged the many streams of racial blood that make the cosmopolite American until we largely represent the valor and virtues of the best type of man. And if Prince Bismarck and Mr. Bull really want to know the greatness of our physical geography let them read the recent speeches of the Territorial Delegates, and then step aside and weep for their littleness

It is unnecessary for any American to talk in any flamboyant way, with any rattle of jingoism, about our interference in foreign affairs; but as to what we should do and what we should not do, the world knows what we can do. The world knows that we will do whatever sary, and the world ought to know that we will not do that which is not necessary; that we have strong sense as well as strong

Right here a brief statement of our relations to Samoa:

Right here a brief statement of our relations to Samoa:

The concern of the United States in Samoa arises in part from the duty of protecting the interests of its citizens engaged in commerce there, in part from the duty of enforcing obligations toward us which other nations have laid themselves under in joint treaties and in part from the necessity of providing and maintaining an American coaling station in the South Pacific. The history of our connection with the affairs of the islands begins in 1840, when an unofficial code was agreed to between a Government exploring expedition to the South Seas, under the command of Captain Charles Wilkes and the native chieftains, for the purpose of regulating commercial intercourse between Samoa, Fiji, and other nations. At that time and for many subsequent years the harbor of Apia was a favorite resort for American whalers, and the relations between the Samoans and their American visitors have always been of the most friendly character.

In 1872 negotiations between Commander Meade, of the United States Navy, and the reigning chief of Tutuila preceded the formal treaty of 1878, by which the harbor of Pango Pango or Pago Pago, on that island, was ceded to our Government for a coaling station. Germany has a small coaling station a few miles east of Apia, in no way comparable in importance to that of Pange Pango. This latter is a large, commodious anchorage, easily entered and easily defensible. By the treaty of 1873 the American Government bound itself to "use its good offices for the purpose of adjusting differences" which might arise "between the Samoan Government and any other government in amity with the United States." This treaty was signed for the United States by William M. Evarts, and for the Samoan Government by M. K. Le Mernea.

The three great nations, the United States, Germany, and England, agreed to preserve the neutrality of these islands. With us it was not question of the Monroe doctrine, because the islands are not in the a question of the Monroe doctrine, because the islands are not in the latitude or contiguous to the Americas, but our commerce and naval power demanded their neutrality. Wading through the great mass of official correspondence, it may be concluded that, wisely or unwisely, we have pledged our honor as a nation to the Samoans that we would use our good offices to preserve their autonomy. This is well expressed by the President of the United States in his message of the 15th of January last to Congress. The President says:

Acting within the restraints which our Constitution and laws have placed upon executive power, I have insisted that the autonomy and independence of Samoa should be serupulously preserved according to the treaties made with Samoa by the powers named and their agreement and understanding with each other. I have protested against every act apparently tending in an opposite direction, and during the existence of internal disturbance one or more vessels of war have been kept in Samoan waters to protect American citizens and property.

Further on the President says:

The views of the Executive in respect of the just policy to be pursued with regard to this group of islands, which lie in the direct highway of a growing and important commerce between Australia and the United States, have found expression in the correspondence and documents which have thus been fully communicated to the Congress, and the subject in its present stage is submitted to the wider discretion conferred by the Constitution upon the legislative branch of the Government.

If this were a question as to what policy we should enter upon de novo with the Samoans, and we had not already pledged our solemn faith by treaty, I should hesitate, speaking for myself, to advocate an extension of our foreign relations so far as to becoming surety for the autonomy of any country—especially outside of the Americas. Our people, thank God, are neither colonizers nor emigrants; our own great land is sufficient for our giant energies, and unnecessary foreign entanglements are contrary to our traditions and policy. But here in Samoa we have secured rights and assumed duties. It is idle now to discuss the wisdom of this course. The situation as to the neutrality of these islands is strongly stated by Secretary Bayard, as follows:

these islands is strongly stated by Secretary Bayard, as follows:

Prince Bismarck has referred in his note, as the German minister did in the conference, to "guaranties" to be demanded and obtained from the Samoan Government. Whenever these guaranties have been explained they have been found virtually to involve the foreign control of that government, as was proposed in the German-Samoan convention of the 10th of November, 1884, and also in the plan presented by the German minister in the conference.

The ground upon which such control has been deemed essential is the weakness of the native government. And it can not be doubted that if the Government of Samoa were now administered by any one of the treaty powers, the islands would be governed more nearly in accordance with the forms and usages of civilized states and order be better assured.

But, for the very reason that the native government of Samoa is weak, it has seemed all the more clear to the United States that the control of the islands by any strong foreign power, or its representatives, would defeat the great object of securing native independence and autonomy, and the practical neutralization of the group. Under such control a native government would necessarily cease to have more than a nominal existence; the native element in the islands, deprived of voice and influence in the management of their affairs, would quickly succumb to the aggressive and exclusive tendencies of the foreign residents; and, under these circumstances, the islands would inevitably become a colony of the foreign power by which, or by whose representatives, the government was actually administered.

Also in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney, to Ad-

Also in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney, to Admiral Kimberly, of January 11, among other things, this is stated:

The United States Government is willing to co-operate in restoring order in Samoa on the basis of the full preservation of American treaty rights and Samoan autonomy, as recognized and agreed to by Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, and has so informed the German Government.

Further on Secretary Whitney says to Admiral Kimberly, the officer to whom this communication is addressed:

Protest against the subjugation and displacement of native government of Samoa by Germany as in violation of positive agreement and understanding between treaty powers, but inform the representatives of the German and British Governments of your readiness to co-operate in causing all treaty rights to be respected and in restoring peace and order on the basis of a recognition of Samoan rights to independence.

Aside from all this, have we not assumed duties of a like nature in the Hawaiian Islands? As the Isthmus canal comes into being the neutrality of these Pacific groups will become of world-wide importance.

There is now no retreat for us; our honor, our rights, and our material interests make our policy clear. We demand the neutrality and autonomy of these islands and the security of our treaty privileges.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us approach this in the conservative spirit of understanding of what our rights are and what the facts of the case are. If any American citizen has been outraged; if any treaty right of ours has been intringed, if any data assumed by a demand of ours. of ours has been infringed; if any duty assumed by us demands our immediate action as a matter of high honor; if any American's property has been ruthlessly destroyed; if any American's right has been disregarded, then it is the duty of this Government, in the name of our people, their dignity, and their strength, resolutely and calmly, but stubbornly, to assert that right, perform that duty, and to resurrect that privilege which has been taken away from us, even if we have to

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the whole trouble in these islands began from a slight fracas, which is the acute cause of the present trouble on the Samoan Islands.

I must say that I very deeply regret that Prince Bismarck, who has been distinguished for blunt honesty, should have seen fit to adopt the colonizing policy of other nations of Europe. He said in his last speech in the Reichstag that he was not in favor of the colonizing policy, that he did not believe in making Germany a colonizing nation, the same, I suppose, as Great Britain, but he said that he had been driven to it, and that the great mass of the German people are now in favor of Germany becoming a colonizer.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the great and powerful German nation, under the leadership of Prince Bismarck, will not adopt that policy of colonization under systems which prevail with the other nations of Europe. The colonization system adopted by the other nations of Europe is very simple; to seek out a weak nation, to divide the people of that nation in civil or religious strife, to set up one chieftain against another, and then, when a bloody feud has broken out among the population, under cover of protecting her interests, to step in and steal the land which God has given to the natives of that country. The whole history of seven hundred years of one of the leading nations of Europe exhibits this colonizing policy in full operation. The cruel, envious eye watching for territory, the land-greedy adventurer going to places where he is not invited, fomenting civil discord among the natives, and then stepping in, in the interest of so-called "civilization" and "religion" and the "advancement of mankind," and taking from those people with barbarous cruelty, without law and without justice, that which the Almighty has given to them as a vested inheritance

If it were given me to do I could scarce recount in the years of man the stories of the weak nations and peoples robbed by the more powerful; the chief of yesterday made vassal of to-day; the native population driven from their land and homes to fling themselves in despair on the sword of the invaders or rush to perish in the sea, or, still worse, to linger for centuries in soul and body destroying serfdom; the leveled homestead, the desecrated grave, the ruined shrine, the feeble groans of age, the smothered curses of revenge, and the wail of the sick child perishing by the wayside—all these mark the path of the land-grabbing colonizer in every land and clime where his foot has trod, and all this in the name of "civilization" and "religion." Sleek hypocrisy masking savage greed, stop mouthing your word-spinning diplomacy and for once be honest! Man of blood and iron, blunt and frank, refuse such colonizing policy and mankind will bless you!

Whatever the finesse of diplomatic correspondence may say, Prince Bismarck seems to me to have made up his mind that it would be to the advantage of Germany to take these islands and make them Gerthe advantage of Germany to take these islands and make them derman territory. If that were all, and we had neither rights nor duties in the premises, we would have nothing to say, because the United States, although it is a Republic loving liberty, is not a knight-errant going about all over the world to find cases of injustice and righting them. We could not do that, and we do not want to do that. But we had a treaty with these people. There was a tripartite agreement between Germany, France, and the United States, if the correspondence does not mislead me, by which the neutrality of these islands was to be preserved. The German Government, of course, did not make its advances by saying, "We want the islands, and we will take them," but they followed the old colonizing plan.

What a simple thing begat this difficulty! There was a celebration of the German Emperor's birthday; there was some drinking; some Germans gave beer, or wine, or other stimulating drink to the natives; a row ensued, and a German was said to have had his nose broken by a native. Some natives, under the influence of drink, were said to have broken a German's nose, and within twenty-four hours the German war ship demanded $1,000 for the broken nose and $12,000 for depredations alleged to have been committed on German plantations during a period of four years. "Civilization" and "religion" could not stand broken noses and fruit pilfering. The king said he did not have the money, and that he wanted to try to find out the facts, to find out whether some German did really have his nose broken; and he insisted that the native should have a trial before he was adjudged by the great German Empire to have ruined the symmetry of this par-ticular nose! But the Germans did not have time to wait. "Civili-zation" and "religion" are always buried on these occasions. The heathen get speedy trials and swift execution. Although the depredations on the plantations had been going on for years, according to their own story, they had not time to wait. Touch "civilization" and this kind of "religion" on the nose, and speedy trial without any red tape ensues. Somebody ought to write a book on the sanctity of the civilized nose. In the row which occurred it was probably a very difficult matter—it would have been a very difficult matter even in our own country under the procedure of a court of justice—to ascertain the exact man who did break the nose, or, maybe, to conclude that the nose was broken at all. But the Germans would not brook delay. Within twenty-four hours they had deposed and deported one king and set up another king, and had taken the field!

That is what is called, under the colonizing policy of the European ations, "advancing the cause of civilization and of the Christian renations, "advancing the cause of civilization and of the children ligion." I do not wonder when I read of occurrences like this at the wasted pannies of the Sunday-school children that are carted out to convert the heathen of the far-away places. Under some circumstances I think I would prefer being a heathen in preference to a sham Christian. When I see the Christian flags of Christian nations over the leveled homes of these simple-minded people I am not astonished that the adherents of the Christian religion have not been augmented in those barbarous countries, for I am afraid they see little of genuine

Christianity and rarely witness the practice of its sublime precepts. In the name of Heaven hasten the day of genuine Christian civilization! Of course I do not claim and I do not advocate that we are to interfere in every wrong that takes place, and that Uncle Sam has to go all around the world as a sort of missionary to find out where somebody is wronged in order that he may bring the power of our people to bear upon right-ing it. We can not do that. The age of chivalry and knight-errantry has passed, among nations as among individuals.

But we had duties there and rights there, we had citizens there, we had commerce there; and when the German consul, usurping even the powers of his own Government, declared himself the dictator of the island, when the German war ship opened fire on the island, then, I say, it was the duty of our Government, wherever there had been an infringement of our rights, or duty called us by our treaties, or an insult had been offered to the dignity of the American nation, to protect them by the power of our people. I see by the dispatches which my friend, the chairman of the committee, has read here that Prince Bismarck is very wisely retreating from his first position. I am not a hired adviser of Prince Bismarck, but if he might take advice from so humble an individual as myself, I would suggest to his august and imperial highness that if he will study the game of diplomacy—and he knows a great deal more about it than I can tell him—that if he will study that game closely he may find that he is being misled in a shrewd game by other nations in Europe.

It may be that my view of foreign political affairs is sometimes jaundiced by jealous distrust of our rivals, but I can easily see, Mr. Chairman, why certain other powers in Europe might be glad to say to Bismarck, "Go in and take the islands if you want them, and if the Yankees threaten to fight you for it, do not mind, they will not fight. Tankees threaten to light you for it, do not mind, they will not light. They are always boasting. They will make spread-eagle speeches and Fourth-of-July orations, but when it comes to resenting an insult they will be namby-pamby about it; they will orate in Congress and on the stump, they will write flaming editorials, but the whole thing will end there." If I represented a powerful colonizing nation in Europe, I would ask no better means of checking the advance of Prince Bismarck as a colonizer than to get him involved in a war with the United States.

Prince Bismarck is evidently seeing that he can not afford to get into a quarrel with our people, and that he can not afford to be used for or by other nations in Europe who desire to foment war between Germany and the United States in order that we may check the commerce and influence and power at home and abroad of the German Empire. Prince Bismarck is an astute man, and as such I beg leave to call his atten-tion to this significant paragraph in the instructions issued by Secretary Bayard to Minister Pendleton. I think it bears out the suggestion I have made. From Earl Granville to Salisbury there has evidently been a change of front. Secretary Bayard says:

have made. From Earl Granville to Salisbury there has evidently been a change of front. Secretary Bayard says:

My objection to the plan was based upon the opinion, which was confirmed as the scheme was unfolded and discussed in the conference, that it was inherently defective and objectionable in that it involved the union of complete political control with commercial preponderance in the same hands, and, by supplanting instead of aiding the native government, tended to diminish rather than to develop the capacity of the native inhabitants of the island for the management of their affairs.

This objection was not supported by the British representative, but in view of the desire so often previously expressed by Great Britain to uphold an actual native government in Samoa, I am utterly unable to account for her instructing her representative in the conference to advocate a plan which gave to the representative of a single foreign power much greater control over the native government than was contemplated by the German-Samoan treaty of the 10th of November, 1884, to which Great Britain so strenuously objected. In a note of the 16th of February, 1885, to the ambassador of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Germany at London, Earl Granville, thea Her Britannio Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, referring to that convention, said: "If, M. Pambassadeur, this agreement had been confined to the establishment of a court, and of the procedure to be observed in civil and criminal cases, and the punishment of offenses in which German subjects are concerned, for which alone Article VII of the German treaty in 1879 provides, its provisions would not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, have been open to criticism; but the creation of a state council, the appointment of a German nofficer of the Samoan Government, and the enrollment of a German police to protect the plantations of German subjects, appear to place Her Majesty's subjects at a disadvantage, and will prevent the Samoan Government under discussion."

It is not necessary further to discuss the plans of settlement proposed in the conference, as I am informed that the German Government, while declining the plan proposed by me, does not insist upon its own, and I am therefore not without hope that a satisfactory solution may yet be found.

There will be no war. The German chancellor, this man of blood and iron, who has cemented that powerful confederation, who is an astute man, a bold man, and a blunt, positive man, will not quarrel with us. Unless we lie down and let him walk upon us he will not injure a hair on the head of a single American citizen, however humble he may be. At any rate we will not permit him to infringe our rights in the slightest. We will meet him, I trust, with unyielding firmness, not seeking a quarrel, but not running away from any responsibility or duty. We love peace, but are not afraid of war. or duty.

But the lesson of it all is this—and I end where I began—give us sufficient naval power to protect us from these insults. If the United States were a naval power-if the United States had powerful ships-Bismarck would never have allowed the landing of a single German soldier on the Samoan Islands. Now where are we drifting in that soldier on the Samoan Islands. Now where are we drifting in that country? We must become adequately protected by a navy on the high seas. In the coming years we are going to have friction. We may have trouble if we do not have the power; if we have the naval power, we shall have peace. But we are going to have friction on the Isthmus, at Hayti, and in these islands of the Pacific Ocean, as well as up here on the northeast Atlantic coast.

I repeat what I said when the Nicaragua Canal bill was up in this -the nations of Europe are land hungry. They have taxed their people for armaments and armies and for the support of titled personages and civil pension lists, and all the gaudy, grinding incidentals of monarchical rule in Europe. And these people must find an outlet. Money must be gotten, honestly or dishonestly. These nations must get their taxes somewhere else than at home. They must find an outlet for this discontented surplus population. They must obtain an outlet of this discontented surplus population. for this commerce which they are building up by bounties and subsidies, each competing with the other in the destructive race of vesselones, each competing with the other in the destructive race of vessel-building. France is giving tonnage bounties and carriage bounties; England is giving a postal bounty and Germany a bounty. Here they are, all building vessels for commerce. Here they are, all shut up in their small countries, land-bound. They are looking at this continent; they are looking at South America; they are looking to the north of us and to the south of us; and they will break your Monroe doctrine as you might break a rotten straw, unless they know that the Western Republic has the power on the sea and the power in its harbors to renel as you might break a rotten straw, unless they know have a Republic has the power on the sea and the power in its harbors to repel any infringement of our right or of our domestic security.

We want no interference in foreign affairs. I deprecate jingoism. I believe the true policy of our Government is to make our people happy, well educated, and prosperous here in the United States. That happy, well educated, and prosperous here in the United States. That is our policy. We want no entanglements with those people abroad, but they must stend off from us. They must not interfere with us. We will not interfere with them. We can not permit the growth of we will not interfere with them. We can not permit the growth of monarchical institutions to the south of us. Our safety and our greatness depend on the perpetuity and stability of the small republics of South America. We can not permit a canal to be constructed there under the control of a foreign government. We can not permit wholesale, unjustifiable, and unjustified acquisitions of territory by force from weaker nations, Venezuela and others; and we can not permit the wholesale absorption of advantageous naval depots by foreign governments against the wishes of those people and against our treaty rights

All this will be secured simply by holding fast to our traditional policy and at the same time providing for ourselves an adequate and sufficient navy and coast protection. In regard to coast protection, I have very little faith in forts. Your coast must be protected by a nahave very little faith in forts. Your coast must be protected by a naval power. Such is the history of the world. Forts never stopped a fleet of vessels yet, and they will not. Torpedoes have never been tried successfully. When they were tried in the Turkish war they were afterwards picked up by dozens on the beach; none of them struck the hostile fleet. In that direction everything is a problem; it is all guess-work; it is a jump in the dark. But we do know that the swift-going vessel, that the strong gun and the gunboat are the real protection to the exposed harbors of the United States. And here a word for gunboats from Sir George Elliot of the British nave: for gunboats from Sir George Elliot of the British navy:

So far as I can judge I am unable to perceive that the modern gunboat has been supplanted by any of these novel features, or has lost any of its effective power of warding off attacks by bombardment at long ranges, whether by single ships or small squadrons, and, in fact, that whatever advantages have been obtained on the one side are equally applicable to the other with respect to those innovations. Indeed, so far as I can foresee what will be the result of future encounters between gunboats and ships, it would appear that, owing to the reduced number of guns which modern ships now carry, and the long ranges at which the stoutest ships are now penetrable by guns which can be mounted in gunboats, and with the introduction of the latest invention in shell projectiles, the gunboat of the future has rather gained than lost in its offensive and defensive properties.

The ironclad is doubtless less vulnerable than the old liner, but so also will be the shield-protected gunboat fighting end-on, and the superiority of riflegens will apply equally to both cases, and the smaller object will still retain its distinct advantage.

As regards the services which can be rendered by shore batteries and submarine mines, and by torpedo-boats, I desire to be clearly understood as in no way disparaging the essential value of these elements of defense, which fulfill their respective requirements quite apart from the gunboat question which I have raised; but I do venture to say that the combined action of the three former provisions will prove inoperative in the absence of any assistance from gunboats to prevent hostile vessels from bombarding many of our seaport towns with impunity from a distance of, say, 4 or 5 miles. On this point I fully expect to be challenged by torpedoists, but I venture to assert that whilst an attack by torpedo-boats could be repulsed by gun-fire from ships under weigh in the offing, gunboats would successfully harass an enemy into keeping at a respectful distance from the shore, and if I am correct in this opinion, it follows that defense by torpedo-boats alone can not be relied upon except under certain favorable local configurations of sea and land to prevent the bombardment of open places.

As the Indian disappears your Army ought to decrease. Your Army as a police to keep down the Indian; that is all it is. The Indian is dying off; he is going. What will you do with this Army? Take it and quarter it in your large cities, Europeanize your streets, accustom and quarter it in your large cities, Europeanize your streets, accustom your people to armed men in uniform every day? The American will not have that; the masses of your people will object. Your Army will go, to a certain extent. Your naval establishment is your main establishment, to which you should direct your money and your energy. This nation of ours could not be invaded, so far as regards landing armed men on its soil, by the whole world combined. You will never be invaded on land; that is simply preposterous. If Germany, France, and England should combine their whole armies, they could not invade the United States of America. Those armies would be swallowed up in the heart of this continent; they would never be permitted to land. This was the opinion of that illustrious soldier, General Sheridan: This was the opinion of that illustrious soldier, General Sheridan:

Excepting for our ocean commerce and for our seaboard cities I do not think we should be much alarmed about the probability of wars with foreign powers, since it would require more than a million and a half of men to make a campaign upon land against us. To transport from beyond the ocean that number of soldiers, with all their munitions of war, their cavalry, artillery, and infantry, even if not molested by us while in transit, would demand a large part of the shipping of all Europe.

It is true Napoleon landed 25,000 troops in Ireland and 40,000 in Egypt, but those were the days of slow, wind-driven vessels and no telegraphs. Both armies, if landed here, would never get beyond the shore-line.

But your danger is in having your coast shelled, in having your cities destroyed and tribute levied upon them. Against this you must provide a naval power. And, as I have said, the naval power is popular because it is the power of your Government exercised toward foreigners and foreign nations and not against the people themselves.

Therefore let us continue this good work of advancing about $6,000,-000 or more a year for a new navy, for the increase of armament, for the building up of a system which makes us independent of the world so far as our own ships are concerned, and gives security to your com-merce and gives respect for your flag. And then you will have de-served and will receive the thanks of the whole American people for a wise, just, and firm policy with regard to your Navy. [Applause.]

The Secretary in his report also says:

"COAST AND HARBOR DEFENSE VESSELS.

"By act approved March 3, 1887, the following appropriation was made:
"For floating batteries or rams or other naval structures to be used for coast and harbor defenses, $1,000,000. The final cost of said floating batteries, rams, or other naval structures, exclusive of armament, shall not exceed $2,000,000."
"In the last annual report of the Department the considerations were stated leading to the conclusion that it would be unwise for the Department to follow the course of the European powers in building unprotected torpedo-boats; and in the present uncertainty regarding the practicability of submarine boats, and while waiting the practical trial of the dynamite gunboat, it has been deemed wise for the Department to build one light-draught, heavy-armored, harbordefense floating battery or ram, for which designs have been prepared by the Bureaus of Construction and Steam Engineering, in consultation with the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. The advertisements for this vess-1 call for the submission of bilds in the month of February next. The characteristics will be found stated in the table of armored vessels before mentioned."

The progress made in building new vessels is shown by the following statement:

"T. D. WILSON,
"Chief Constructor, United States Navy, Chief of Bureau.

"Hon. H. A. HERBERT,
"Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
"Chairman Committee of Representatives, Washington."
"House of Representatives, Washington."

The contract made by the Navy Department in June, 1987, with the Bethlehem Iron Company was for forgings for fifty 6-inch, six 8-inch, twenty-one 10-inch, and two 12-inch guns. These will complete the great gun batteries for the Miantonomoh, Charleston, Baltimore, Bennington, Philadelphia, Newark, San Francisco, Maine, Monadnock, Terror, Amphitrite, Puritan, Texas.

The delivery of these forgings is by contract to begin February 1, 1890, and to be completed November 1, 1891, but the company has made such satisfactory progress that it is expected deliveries will be commenced in March of the present

There are also on hand, finished at the Washington part the Washington at the Name are also on hand, finished at the Washington to their size, first class in every particular. The Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, and Dolphin carry altogether nineteen 6-inch modern breech-loading rifled guns and eight of 8 inches. Of these, six of the former and four of the latter class were made at the Washington navy-yard.

these, six of the former and four of the latter class were made at the Washington navy-yard.

There are also on hand, finished at the Washington yard, six 6-inch guns and three 10-inch guns, besides eight 6-inch guns about seven-eighths complete. When the works at that yard shall be completed the average time of assembling there a 6-inch gun will be, say, one hundred days, and for 12-inch gun two hundred days, etc. The annual capacity of the yard, it is estimated will be at the rate of twenty-five 6-inch and twelve 12-inch guns. The plant is to be fitted to manufacture as high as 16-inch guns. We are also constructing guns by contract at South Boston Iron Works and West Point Foundry—at present six at each place, to be completed in July and August of the present year. The guns made at the navy-yard have so far been some what cheaper than those furnished by contract. The tests to which our new guns have been submitted show them to be equal to any made at the long-established workshops in Europe.

We have at the proving-ground one 10-inch gun-carriage, manufactured at the Washington navy-yard, and three others will be completed within two months; also two 6-inch carriages completed and thirty-one others more than half finished—all manufactured at the Washington navy-yard.

The contract with the Hotchkiss Arms Company is for ninety-four rapid fireguns, consisting of thirty 6-pounders, twenty-two 3-pounders, ten 1-pounders, and thirty-two 37-millimeter guns.

The Bethlehem Company also has the contract for the armor, complete, of the Puritan, Amphitrite, Monadnock, Terror, Maine, and Texas, to be delivered at the rate of 300 tons per month, from Febraary 1, 1890, to December 1, 1891, inclusive.

The vessels provided for in the act of September 7, 1888, have none of them clusive.

The vessels provided for in the act of September 7, 1888, have none of them been let out to contract. The present Secretary has deemed it advisable to leave their construction entirely to his successor.

Notwithstanding this fact, the committee have thought proper to recommend the construction of two additional vessels. This work may be begun with the money carried in the bill, which is somewhat less than was borne in the last act, and no other work need be neglected.

One of the ships we recommend is to be of the type of the Vesuvius; but it will be seen we provide for its construction only conditionally.

The Vesuvius, as a vessel, is a remarkable success. The dynamite guns with which she is armed have iproven successful in trials on land. But it is yet a question whether when fired from the vessel accuracy can be obtained. The guns are affixed to the ship with no carriage upon which they can be trained to the right or left, or elevated, or depressed.

The dynamite company and the inventors claim that by regulation of the charge and training with the rudder of the ship sufficient accuracy can be attained to make efficient the heavy charge of terrible explosives the guns can carry, ranging from 100 to 500 pounds of nitro-gelatine or dynamite. The bill provides for the building of a new vessel of the type of the Vesuvius upon the condition that the Secretary of the Navy shall be satisfied, after experiment with that vessel and her guns, of the efficiency of her armament.

The other vessel recommended is a sea-going monitor of high speed combining features which, all together, make a novel and, in the opinion of the experts of the Navy Department, will render it a very useful vessel.

The general designs were furnished by Hon, John R. Thomas, of Illinois, who has had an experience of ten consecutive years in the consideration of naval anteres as a member of your Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, addressing the House briefly in

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, addressing the House briefly in respect to the pending appropriation for our naval establishment, I will not wander off into that other sphere which our committee seems to have undertaken to occupy in the regulation of the foreign affairs of the country. I will leave that to the able chairman of the committee [Mr. Herbert] and to my eloquent colleague from New Jersey [Mr. McADoo].

It ought to be a cause of congratulation to the people of the country and to the House that during the past four years one of the great political parties of the country has made the very useful discovery that one of the prime features in the creation of a United States navy is the appropriation of money by Congress for that purpose. And so far as we have made progress toward the rehabilitation of our naval establishment in the past few years it is due to the fact that the Congress of the United States, and I might be more specific and say the House of Representatives, has within that period pursued a different policy in regard to the appropriation of money for the increase of the Navy from that which had been pursued by the representatives of a different political party in previous years.

The fact we have built ships and are now engaged in constructing The fact we have built snips and are now engaged in constructing additional vessels is due primarily to the fact that the Republicans in the House of Representatives have pursued an entirely different course toward the Navy from that of the Democrats of the House when the Republican party was in control of the national executive. And while I join with my friend the chairman, and my colleague from New Jersey, in congratulating the country upon the progress which has been made, perhaps it would be unjust to omit to call attention to the fact that so far as numerical contribution by votes toward this result is conthat so far as numerical contribution by votes toward this result is conthat so far as numerical contribution by votes toward this result is concerned the gratitude of the country may be largely claimed by the minority in the House of Representatives during the past four years.

I believe that the record of appropriation bills for the Navy will show that the political party of which I have the honor to be a member has on every occasion favored the most liberal provision for these purposes, and on important occasions has sought to go beyond the lead of the Democratic majority. I find in the report of the Secretary of the Navy for the current year a gratulation of the country upon what he regards and what I conceive to be the most important achievement he regards and what I conceive to be the most important achievement thus far toward the restoration of our naval supremacy, and that is the establishment in this country of the great machinery plant necessary to furnish all the material required for the construction of our war ships. In his report the Secretary says, after referring to the measures by which American manufacturers were induced to enter this field:

As a second step, the wants of the Department for armor and gun steel were sllowed to accumulate until contracts of some magnitude could be offered to the competition of domestic manufacturers, one condition of the bidding to be the erection of a plant in this country adequate to the manufacture of both armor and gun steel up to the highest standard of European requirements.

This was deemed an experiment by the Department at the time, and was accompanied with great individual effort towards enlisting the steel manufacturers in the undertaking, but resulted successfully, and upon the 1st day of June, 1887, contracts were entered into with the Bethlehem Iron Company of Bethlehem, Pa., one of the largest and most enterprising of American steel manufactories, under which the United States was guarantied that within two and one-half years from the date of the contract this country would have within its borders a plant equal to and probably the superior of any in the world for the production of armor and the forgings for high-powered guns. This, in the judgment of the Department, must be deemed to have been the first important step towards the creation of a navy modern in character.

Light with the Secretary in his congratulation of the country upon

I join with the Secretary in his congratulation of the country upon securing this result. And it is with considerable satisfaction that I am enabled to refer to the debates which occurred in this House nearly three years ago in which I made a somewhat persistent struggle for the accomplishment of this precise end. It will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 24, 1886, when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration, that when the clause was reached providing for the purchase of the material for the armor of our vessels the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. BOUTELLE, I move to amend by striking out in the section just read all after the word "manufacture," in line 3, down to and including the words "import it," in line 8. The clause which I propose to strike out is in these words: "Provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time at a reasonable price and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same orany portion thereof and import it."

Mr. Findlay. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in the same line which I see he is pursuing?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. Findlay. The object of the gentleman is evidently to require that the armor which is to be used for the purpose contemplated shall be manufactured in this country and powhere else.

this country and nowhere else.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My amendment will secure that object. The first portion of the section will then read:

"That the armor used in constructing said armored vessel, and for completing said monitors, shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manifesters."

Ing said monitors, seems of the unfacture."

Mr. Findlay. I understood the gentleman's object that the armor shall be made in this country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My amendment provides for that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My object in offering this amendment has been to encourage if possible what I regard as one of the primarily important features of the re-establishment and maintenance of a navy, and that is the establishment in this country of the machinery, the plant, and the hammers that are necessary to furnish the materials out of which the navy can be constructed. The establishment of a navy for a nation like ours is not accomplished when we have simply obtained ships. We want to have the ability here to construct ships. That is of infinitely more importance than the question whether we shall have a few ships at this time.

I am told by manufacturers that the only difficulty in the way of manufacturing this armor is as to the size of the hammer and the weight of certain machinery, which is too expensive to be put up in this country unless there is some encouragement that there would be use for it. These immense masses of iron and steel are not used in business operations in civil life. They are only used in the military operations of the Government. I want the Government of the United States to offer an inducement and encouragement for setting up this plant.

A little further on in the discussion, in which the majority of the Naval Committee were inclined to adhere to the text of their bill, the chairman [Mr. HERBERT] said:

Mr. HERBERT. And this contemplates that he shall make those contracts with persons who will enter into an agreement to furnish the armor, but in order not to put himself at the mercy of combinations who might charge him whatever they chose, this provision is inserted, that the contracts shall be made on condition that the contractors shall agree to furnish the armor in a reasonable time and at a reasonable price. These provisos are put in here simply for the purpose of protecting the Government against combinations.

A little further on the gentleman from New York, who has since gone to the other branch of Congress, Mr. HISCOCK, said:

gone to the other branch of Congress, Mr. HISCOCK, said:

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand, we are not prepared and can not be for some little time to build the armor for these turrets. I am willing, nevertheless, to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Maine and force the preparation. We may as well get ready now to do the work as at any other time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the best information which I have been able to obtain—and it is information which I believe to be entirely reliable—is to the effect that the manufacturing establishments of this country can within six months put themselves in condition to produce this armor which is required—Mr. HISCOCK. No.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I am making this statement on what I believe to be enflicient authority. The gentleman can contradict it afterwards if he wishes to do so. I say the best information I have—and I have had reassurance on this subject very recently—is that if we will offer simply the inducement provided in this amendment that American manufacturers shall have the opportunity to produce the armor for these vessels, they will within six months be ready to respond. Certainly this is a very small inducement.

I am also informed and know that to-day there is at one of the hotels in this city the agent of a French manufactory of armor who is here ready to make these contracts. Furthermore, I am informed that two or three officers of the United States Government in the city of Washington to-day are the representatives of an English manufactory of armor.

Mr. McAddoo. Is it not the fact that the last administration contracted with the English firm of Cammell & Brown for compound armor for the Miantonomoh? Mr. BOUTELLE. I think it likely it did.

Mr. McAddoo. And the plates are now on the dock at Brooklyn, being put on the turrets.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I tell you, no other administration, with my consent or

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I tell you, no other administration, with my consent or by my vote, will be permitted to make these contracts abroad, refusing to our people the inducement which I believe is all that is necessary to make us inde-pendent in this matter.

On the vote taken on the amendment in the Committee of the Whole there was a majority of 101 to 61; so that the amendment was there adopted. But when we got back into the House, under the lead of the majority of the Naval Committee, a sufficient number of votes were rallied to change the result, and that amendment, which had been adopted, with various others, in the Committee of the Whole, was defeated by a vote of 111 nays to 108 yeas. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, the result of that debate, of the persistent attempt, and of the strong expression made in the House of Representatives in behalf of an effort to domesticate the manufacture of materials necessary for our war ships has since borne fruit, and the Secretary himself, in his latest report, in giving credit to various distinguished officers and officials and to members of the committee of the two branches of Congress, also goes on to

But for the thorough elucidation of the subject which had thus previously been made, and through which the conditions of the problem had been thoroughly made known, it is not likely that the efforts of the Navy Department would have been attended with success.

I have adverted to this simply as a matter of historic justice and to enable me to congratulate with all frankness and candor the Secretary of the Navy, who has been alert, as I believe, in seizing upon the best ideas that have been presented, and to whose efforts in bringing about the administrative measures that have been requisite to produce this result the country is indebted. I reiterate here what I said before on the floor of Congress, that I regard it as of vastly more consequence than that we should have at a given time a given number of fully equipped ships of war, one-half of the materials for which, or one-quarter of the materials for which, must necessarily be procured from other nations; that we should have beneath our own flag, upon our own continent, establishments under our own jurisdiction capable of furnishing at the command of the Government every material required for the construction and armament of the most formidable ships of war.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, I regard it of vastly more importance that the United States of America should be independent of every other people and of every other nation on the globe for the construction of the enginery and the ships of war, than that we should simply obtain partly at home and partly from abroad a certain number of ships or a certain number of guns. Therefore the country is to be congratulated that we have established one great plant, to be succeeded by others, as I believe, in different parts of the country, including the State from which my honored colleague, the chairman of the committee comes as which my honored colleague, the chairman of the committee, comes as a Representative, and which will be able to furnish at the call of the Government everything that is required to assert the rights and uphold the honor of the American people upon the high seas. This will mark, Mr. Chairman, an emancipation as well as an advance that may be placed side by side with that other great industrial triumph, when by the operation of wise and patriotic American legislation we domesticated the steel-rail industry in the United States, thereby rendering the transportation of this country free from dependence upon the labor or the caprice of other manufacturing nations of the earth.

The chairman of the committee in his opening speech has stated to the House the details of what has been accomplished in the way of construction of new ships. I do not know that I have anything of particular interest to add to his statement. I may suggest, however, in view of his remark that in a few years from now no other nation on earth will have vessels of the high rate of speed which our vessels under construction are expected to attain, that it is drawing upon the future somewhat, and that we had better, perhaps, devote ourselves to perfecting the business we have in hand, getting our ships afloat and demonstrating their capacity by actual performance, rather than to indulge in speculations and in boasting as to what they will accomplish when they are completed.

But I have no doubt, sir, that improvements will be demonstrated in the construction of our ships of war. There ought to be, for this is the age of progress and advancement; and if the vessels that are now under contract, if the ships that have been designed and placed in construction during the last three years shall prove as great an advance as was made by their immediate predecessors, the first steel war ships constructed in this country—the vessels from the yard of John Roach—over the old wooden ships of the preceding era, the country will have reason to congratulate itself and the Administration now going out of power. I believe that these ships will show a gratifying degree of progress. But, Mr. Chairman, I am bound in candor to say that the indications are not altogether conclusive that the powers that be at present are inclined to apply quite as rigid tests to the vessels conceived under their own designs as they applied to those other ships which were designed by their predecessors.

The new vessel recently built at Philadelphia, for whose success certainly no one is more anxious than myself, and in whose achievements in regard to speed and prowess no one can be more gratified than I, has certainly, so far as I can judge, been treated in a very different manner from that accorded to the first experiments of the American people in constructing war ships from steel. I think if an unprejudiced man will constructing war ships from steel. I think if an unprejudiced man will but make a comparison between the methods employed in the testing and trial of the Dolphin and of the Vesuvius, which has recently been accepted by the Department, he will not fail to be impressed by the remarkable contrast, not only in the tests applied, but in the treatment accorded. I find in the case of the Dolphin, for instance, that after she had been subjected to a number of tests and trials, and an additional that the state of the Sthot May 1885 this for tional one had been required, that on the 28th of May, 1885, this favorable report was sent by telegraph to the Secretary of the Navy:

NEW YORK, May 28, 1885.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington, D. C.:

Dolphin ran six consecutive hours to-day without mishap of any sort, averaging from 72 to 76 turns per minute; all conditions favorable; steam pressure, 84 to 89 pounds; average speed, 154 knots; speed for two hours, 15.9 knots per hour; approximate mean collective horse-power, 2,240. As ship was aground on reef on Wednesday she ought to be docked before sea trials.

G.E. BELKNAP,

President of Board, Astor House.

Here was the report of a naval officer upon the trial of a vessel, the contract for which only called for 15 knots speed, and he states that she made an average, upon a trial of six consecutive hours, of more than the contract called for; and yet we do not find the Secretary of the Navy sending a jubilatory dispatch to Commander Belknap upon the achievement of the Dolphin; but, on the contrary, an additional trial and severer tests were required. She was subjected to a most extraordinary trial at sea, the record of which shows that after subjecting that vessel to every ordeal which the ingenuity of man could devise, she was finally driven at 11 knots an hourinto a head sea off the Atlantic coast, and yet she failed to develop the structural weakness that seemed to be so diligently sought.

We all know about that. How differ-But that is ancient history. We all know about that. How different—what a contrast we find in the method of conducting the trial of this new vessel, designed under the auspices of the present Administration, and upon whose success the administration of the Navy De-

Now, I have no purpose, Mr. Chairman, in the few remarks I shall submit, to depreciate the value of this new addition to our naval service. I was one of the original advocates of the experiment. I favored the appropriation. I am glad the ship has been built, and I am inclined to believe that she will prove, in many respects, a success; but when we contrast with the harsh treatment of the Dolphin, the haste, the alacrity with which the Secretary of the Navy sent by telegraph his greeting to the constructor of the Vesuvius, congratulating him that he had set the world an example in speed, and made the greatest success in that regard that had ever been accomplished in naval architecture, it is, perhaps, proper to look a little at the different conditions under which these trials were made.

I have not accurate data in regard to these trials, but I learn by I have not accurate data in regard to these trials, but I learn by such inquiries as I have been able to make, in the paucity of official intelligence, that the Vesuvius, originally designed to be of 700 tons, with a draught of 8 feet (I obtain this from the "General Information, Series 6," of the Naval Intelligence Office), subsequently grew by changes to 805 tons, with a draught of 9 feet 3 inches, as shown by "Series 7," page 300.

On the trial her draught was 9 feet 6 inches, and this, I am told, was with about 100 tons of coal short. With a full coal equipment and with the requisite stores, etc., I am informed that at least 150 tons will be added to her displacement, bringing her down to nearly 11 feet be added to her displacement, bringing her down to nearly 11 feet draught. As her guns have been increased from 10\(\frac{1}{2}\) to 15-inch caliber, this will add still more to her draught. So that we find the Department, which so severely criticised the changes and modifications and altera-tions of the Roach ships, made a departure in this vessel from 700 tons with 8 feet draught, as originally intended, to nearly one-sixth larger with probably 11 feet draught when finally completed and ready for service

It is also to be recollected, Mr. Chairman, that when the Dolphin was tried it was one of the conditions of trial that she should be weighted down to a load-line which would equal her draught when she should have her crew, stores, and armament on board. She was to be compelled to make her trial as if equipped for sea and for battle. On the contrary, this new ship upon her trial, as I am informed, was not only a hundred tons of coal short, but she had no weights on board to represent what she will be required to carry in stores, etc., when she is fitted for actual service. It will be remembered also that one of the serious criticisms against the design of the Dolphin was that a portion of her vertical engine was above her water-line, and therefore unprotected.

It is a fact, as I am informed, that at least half of the machinery of the Vesuvius is equally unprotected and above the water-line; yet we have heard no criticism of that fact, and I do not offer it as a criticism at this time, but simply to mark the contrast in the treatment of the two vessels. I have heard it suggested, I do not know with what justice, that the designs of the engine and the hull of this vessel may have been made more with a view to the trial trip than to endurance. I trust that may not prove to be the fact; but my information is that the specifications of the contract made between the Department and the builders of this ship contrast in a most marked and conspicuous manner with the specifications of the contracts required of the builders It has been stated to me by persons upon whose judgof other vessels. ment I place great reliance that the machinery for this vessel is entirely too light. I hope that may not be found to be so. I am told that on her first preliminary trial she broke the valves of her air-pump. We had no report of that made for the public. I am told that on her second preliminary trial she broke her main valve-gear. I have heard no public statement as to that. I am told that on her first official trial she broke one of her fire-room blowers so completely after the first run over the course that the second run was made with that fire under natural draught. I am told that on her second official trial she broke her air-pump beam. Now, these may not be radical defects; I hope they are not; but when we call to mind the serious manner in which gentlemen criticised the Dolphin because, when forced to her utmost speed, a glass of water filled even to the rim would vibrate enough to spill a drop or two, this circumstance being cited as an evidence of "structural weakness," we certainly may deem it strange that no comment is made upon defects such as those I have cited.

The reason for it is an obvious one; the explanation is clear. It is found in the fact that the Republican press of the country, Republican members of Congress, and Republicans generally have not been disposed to use the carping and hypercritical method which was employed by the other political party to find fault with and break down the reputation of the vessels built under a Republican administration in the ship-yard of that great naval constructor and sturdy American, John

I am told that on the first trial of the Vesuvius she was tested over a 4-mile course and failed. I have never heard any official report of that kind; I do not know that it is the fact; but that is my information. I am told that on the second official trial the course was cut down to 2 miles, and that the vessel again failed. I have had no official report of that; but it is my information; and if correct I trust that the facts may be given.

I am told that the contractors then claimed that the water of the course was not deep enough for this 800 or 900 ton vessel; and so by their request the last trial was made in deep water; and as a trial of speed made in deep water is generally a trial of speed made farther away from shore, it may possibly be that a trial of speed farther away from the shore furnishes more latitude for variation in estimates of the progress of the vessel than would be furnished if she were run close to the landmarks along shore. I do not know how that may be. But as compared with these repeated and extraordinary trials to which the Dolphin was subjected, I am informed that the speed test applied to this new ship, upon which the claim to her extraordinary speed is based, did not exceed from six to twelve minutes-just as you might take the speed of a horse as he went past the judge's stand without regard to the speed he could hold for a quarter or a half or the entire mile.

The test of the Roach ship was a six-hours trial. The test of the Vesuvius was, as I am informed, from six to twelve minutes when the vessel was at the very acme of her speed. And while in the trial of the Dolphin it was made a special subject of comment and criticism, which was repeated upon this floor, that they actually had to put water upon some of the journals because they became heated—a very common occurrence—I am informed by a witness of good authority that when the Vesuvius emerged from her trial her fire-room was, as he expressed it, like a Turkish bath.

Now, as I have said, Mr. Chairman, I have not made these remarks for the purpose of manifesting hostility either to this vessel or to her contractors or builders, because there is no doubt whatever that the ship has developed a high degree of speed; she was built to do it, to do nothing else. But when gentlemen on this floor or in the newspapers or elsewhere undertake to institute a comparison of the speed of this vessel as a "cruiser" with the speed of other "cruisers" heretofore built, they ignore utterly the fact that this is a vessel designed to do but just two things—to carry those dynamite guns, which are not of great weight, while all the rest of the ship is devoted to machinery enough to force her at the highest rate of speed. So that you have eliminated at the outset some of most difficult factors of the problem which enter into the construction of a fully-equipped cruiser—the providing of quarters for the men, stores for the crew, ponderous armament, and a coal capacity for a voyage across the ocean.

It is provided in this bill that the President shall build another vessel of this type. If succeeding trial shall demonstrate that the vessel is a success, I hope that she will be repeated in an improved form. do not believe, however, that the Department should be compelled to build a vessel precisely like another vessel which has been built; al-though the observations I have made do not apply to the offensive powers of this ship or to the efficiency of the dynamite guns, from which I hope great things, and in whose success I have a very great degree of confidence. But I think that a wise consideration of the future should lead us to leave to the President and the Secretary of the Navy some discretion as to the form and size and character of the ships upon which in future these dynamite guns are to be mounted.

A gentleman who has given much attention to such matters insists that before a vessel is accepted she should be tested with her full weights on board, under conditions that she will be required to meet and fulfill in actual service, and he expresses the opinion that there is not another government on the face of the earth that would accept a ship after such a trial as has been had in the case of the Vesuvius.

Mr. Chairman, I have adverted to this striking contrast in the treatment accorded to vessels of different political paternity. I do not believe that the incoming administration will mete out to the builders and designers of the ships now under construction the kind of treatment which has been meted out to vessels designed under Republican auspices in the past. I believe that the new administration will be glad to recognize every improvement that has been made, every advance that has been achieved; and that within the next four years, if our Democratic friends will give to the Republican majority in the House of Representatives but one-half the zeal of support that the Republican minority has given to them during the four years of Democratic control of the Executive Departments, we shall make a still greater and grander stride toward the rehabilitation of the American Navy. I hope the suggestion may be realized. If I have any doubt as to the result, it is born of a sad and discouraging experience of the past.

I do not know that I have any further observations to make at this time except perhaps to allude in a casual way to the difference be-tween the criticism that was applied to the Atlanta, for instance, when on the trial of her great guns the brass tracks that were fastened to the deck were found insecure, a mere matter of detail, with no possible connection with the structure of the ship itself; and yet the Democratic press in full cry broke out in chorus against the weakness and useless ness of that ship; and the manner in which other people have treated the accident that befell the new cruiser Baltimore so shortly after she was launched. I do not think it furnishes occasion for criticism on her builders that a canal-boat or a ferry-boat in running into the stern of the ship knocked off a lug upon the stern-post so as to make a hole through the steel casting. I know that it was an accidental thing, but I am afraid that if such an accident as that had happened to one of the ships that were launched from the yard of John Roach we should have heard some wild Democratic alarms going up about a sea-going vessel put hors de combat by the first canal-boat that came along. [Laughter.] We should have had a repetition of the eloquent speeches [Laughter.] We should have had a repetition of the eloquent speeches that we heard in the House only a few years ago when the Republican party was held responsible for being unable to build a wooden side-wheel gunboat strong enough to stand up against a fifteen-hundred-ton wooden schooner running at the rate of 12 to 15 knots an hour.

Mr. DINGLEY. And loaded with coal.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And loaded with coal, as my colleague suggests. The country recognizes the treatment which has been accorded to the New by the two political parties of the country and gentlemen the Navy by the two political parties of the country, and, gentlemen, the country is going to hold political parties on both sides of this Chamber responsible for carrying on the good work not only of putting ships affoat to carry the American flag and American guns to protect the honor and interests of the nation, but for so carrying on that good work as to enable the people of America to supply on our own soil from our own mines, from our own forests, from our own workshops, upon designs fresh from the brains of our own naval architects, every portion of the ships of the American Navy from the keel beneath the wave to the truck where the emblem of the great Republic shall proudly float. Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring this debate to a close, and would suggest, if it meet the approval of the committee, that all general debate be closed in ten minutes, which time I would like to use answering some of the suggestions of my colleague on the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. If my colleague is going to occupy that time I may need to respond to him, and I shall therefore ask to reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I will ask that after fifteen minutes, ten minutes of which I will consume, the other five to be reserved for the gentleman from Maine, all general debate on this bill may be closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine says he opposed a provision in the bill of 1886 authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts for certain articles abroad in case they could not be furnished within a reasonable time at home and at a reasonable price, and in that connection quotes remarks which I made upon the passage of the bill, as follows:

These provisions are put here simply to protect the Government from combinations.

The majority of the committee certainly did desire and expect at that time that everything pertaining to the building of a navy should be produced in America. These provisions to which the gentleman alludes were simply put in to protect the Government, as I stated at the time, from possible combinations among bidders. The provision was stricken out in the Senate.

The protection to the Government desired by the majority of the committee was omitted. Now, what happens? Sir, if that provision had been left in the bill the result would have been that the plant at the navy-yard in Washington to-day would have been much further advanced than it is. There was a combination between bidders for certain portions, the most important parts, too, of the plant required to construct first-class guns in the Washington navy-yard; at least the Secretary of the Navy so thought. He deemed that there was no reasonable bid, and so he rejected all of the bids and has made other offers. Even to this day there has been no contract for some of the machinery, and this delay is the direct result, as I think, of putting the Government so patriotically in the hands of manufacturers.

If this provision had been inserted there is no sort of doubt that the Secretary would have been able to secure in the first instance reasonable bids for the construction of that plant required at this navy-yady. and we would have been much further advanced than we are to-day. There was no thought on the part of the Secretary or of the majority of the committee that anything should have been bought abroad. The provision was put there, as I stated, in the words quoted by the gentleman from Maine, simply as a precaution to protect the Government against combinations among bidders, and subsequent events have justified the wisdom of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand that it was not intended that any of this material should be bought abroad?

Mr. HERBERT. It was intended that it should all be procured in America; and, well knowing as the gentleman does the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, I think he is bound to conclude that the Secretary, would, although that provision had remained in the bill, have succeeded in obtaining in America everything necessary for the construc-tion of that plant in the Washington navy-yard.

The gentleman complains the same tests were not made of the Vesu-vius as of the Dolphin. The difference between the results shown in the trials of the two vessels was a very wide one and the distinction very great. When the Dolphin was tried there were very serious defects reported by the board which tested that ship in the first instance, going, not to the question of speed, but to defects in many other regards Among other defects structural weakness in the Dolphin was reported by the board, which was composed of as good and efficient officers as this Government had. There was no way, as they reported, of ascertaining whether this criticism was correct except by testing the ship at sea—that is, by a six hours' trial at sea. The board in the case of the Vesuvius found no difficulty of that kind whatever. My under-

Mr. BOUTELLE. What tests did they apply?

Mr. HERBERT. They applied the test, in the first place, of a run of 4 miles—I think it was 4 miles—above the Delaware Breakwater. There were one or two trials above Delaware Breakwater, in which the Vesuvius failed to come up to the speed required. The Dolphin had westvitts failed to come up to the speed required. The Dolphin may three tests also; and there were defects in some of the machinery.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In the Vesuvius?

Mr. HERBERT. There were some breakages.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Were they not of a more serious character than

mr. BOUTELLE. Were they not of a more serious character than any that were reported on the Dolphin?

Mr. HERBERT. No, they were not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I beg to differ with you.

Mr. HERBERT. That is exactly where we do differ. In the Dolphin the defect reported was structural weakness that was supposed to render her unseaworthy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it never was developed, in point of fact.
Mr. HERBERT. She had another trial. She went to sea, and after that trial she was accepted, although there were still serious defects on account of which the assignees of Mr. Roach allowed a deduction of

Mr. BOUTELLE. But did not this vessel develop structural weakness in several important parts? Mr. HERBERT. Which vessel? Mr. BOUTELLE. The Vesuvius. Mr. HERBERT. Not at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh.

Mr. HERBERT. On the contrary, the record shows that she had great strength, great steadiness, and she did not succeed in making the full 20 knots speed at first simply because some bolt broke, or some little piece of machinery was defective. She was afterwards tried outside of Delaware Breakwater at sea, and the gentleman, in order to found a criticism there upon her, says—and he gets it, as I think, entirely from his imagination—that she was tried at sea, in deep water, because that furnished more latitude to the board of naval officers in charge to deceive the Government than they would have had if that vessel had been tried upon a canal. I do not know that that is the language of the gentleman, but I think that I am stating his proposi-

mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think you state it as well as I do.
Mr. HERBERT. I think I am stating it fairly. It is an imputation, I think, without any foundation of fact so far as I know, that the board of officers trying this vessel had and exercised a better opportunity to cheat the Government in a trial out at sea and in deep water than they would have had if she had been tried upon a canal. [Mr. BOUTELLE shook his head.] The gentleman did not say so?

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; I did not.

Mr. HERBERT. That is the imputation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not say so.

Mr. HERBERT. I know you did not say so; but I can not understand the force of the criticism unless it carries with it an imputation upon the board of officers who reported on the trial.

upon the board of officers who reported on the trial.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman give the House the benefit

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to hear it.
Mr. HERBERT. Simply because any vessel can make more speed

Mr. HERBERT. Simply because any vessel can make more speed in deep than in shallow water. All experts know that to be a fact.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Know what to be a fact?

Mr. HERBERT. That a vessel can make better speed in deep water than it can in shallow water, where the bottom is nearer to the propeller of the steamer. Then I pass on to the other-Mr. BOUTELLE. Where was the first trial?

Mr. HERBERT. Above the breakwater in Delaware Bay.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Where was the Dolphin tried?
Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman knows that I have but ten minutes.
Mr. BOUTELLE. I know it is hard for you to be quite fair for ten minutes

Mr. HERBERT. In relation to the other criticism on the Vesuvius. She was built at a contract price of $350,000. She was increased in length from 220 to 242 feet. She was increased in beam from 24 to 26½ feet, and there was an increase in her depth, and an increased displacement; and altogether she was built better and larger than the contract called for—all this by the contractors without any increase of compensation. The contract called for guns that would throw a hundred pounds of dynamite; she was built with guns that would throw 500 pounds. And then as to her machinery being light, I have here a table prepared by Lieutenant Rodgers, chief of the Intelligence Bureau, comparing the Vesuvius with other vessels of her class. This table shows that her machinery, instead of being lighter than that of other such vessels, is heavier, and the remark is made that the explanation of this fact is that her engines are more durable and better.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee be allowed to continue his remarks for five or ten min-

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. I shall not take five minutes. I simply want to ay that the Vesuvius is heavier, is larger, is stronger, is in every way a better ship, both as to the vessel and the guns, than was contracted for. Yet the gentleman from Maine, who voted to make the contract, criticises the vessel that is better than the contract called for. Here is the comparison spoken of between the Vesuvius, the Tripoli; the Sharp-shooter, English; the Rattlesnake, another English vessel; the Destructor, a Spanish vessel; the Bombe, a French vessel; here are the figures in each case, showing the horse-power, the speed, the weight of the machinery; and these figures show that the machinery of the Vesuvius is heavier, justifying the remark of the chief of the Intelligence Office that it will be more durable and better than that of the other vessels of her class. Now, I think I have answered everything that the gentleman of Maine has said in relation to this ship, and I will not trespass further upon the indulgence of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know that I have anything that I desire to say in reply to what the chairman of the committee has said except to disciaim entirely the remarks which he has endeavored to make for me. When I see fit to make any reflection upon anybody, in or out of official life, I have ample opportunity to make it in my own time, in my own way, and in my own language, and I have not generally been credited with a lack of frankness in that regard. It occurs to me that instead of charging that I had imputed to some persons, whom I never named and whom I had not in mind, a purpose to de ceive somebody, it might have been just as easy for the chairman, and quite as charitable towards others, if he had supposed that I had in mind the possibility that taking a vessel out to sea would furnish more liability that somebody might be deceived. I made no imputation of the kind suggested by the chairman. I simply stated a fact which will be recognized by everybody who knows anything at all about the trial of the speed of vessels, who knows anything about geography, who knows anything about the admeasurement of distances, namely, that it is very much more difficult to make an accurate test of the speed of a vessel upon a movable element like water far away from the land than when you are close alongside of the fixed landmarks. If a man is trying the speed of a vessel on a canal, he is not likely to make a mistake of a quarter of a mile if his vessel stops directly alongside of the mile-post which tells the story, but if he is out upon the sea, he is subject to variations of current, he is subject to the error of his instruments; he has rendered accuracy of alignm nt more difficult by the very distance that intervenes between the vessel and the objects by which the measurement is made. I made no imputation; I desired to make none. I only emphasized my criticism by calling attention to the fact that the Vesuvius, after two failures, as the chairman states, was given a third trial in deep water, while, as I understand it, the first two trials were made under substantially similar conditions to the first two trials of the Dolphin, a vessel of equal or greater draught. Mr. Chairman, I had no intention to assail the Vesuvius. I have not done so.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs-and he is a high authority in naval matters and his judgment ought to be respected— the chairman tells us that the successive breakages of machinery upon every trial which this vessel made were of no importance whatever and would bear no comparison in importance with the mere suggestion, the mere imputation, the mere suspicion of a structural weakness on the part of the Dolphin that never has been developed! In closing I want to say that year before last I had the fortune to go on board that much-abused and depreciated ship, the Dolphin, at Bar Harbor. I came in from the bay and saw her lying at anchor. I thought she was a yacht, so trim and beautiful did she appear, and when I went upon her deck and had walked through the ship and made such examination as I could, I said to the captain, "I don't know much about your steel ships, but I have looked all through your vessel in the places where I would look in an old-time vessel for signs of weakness or strain, and I do not discern any." "Why," said he, "she is strong enough for two do not discern any."

Then I asked him about her speed, and he told me she had made  $15\frac{1}{2}$ knots easily, and that before they got through with her they proposed to add another knot to that. Since then she has been sent around to the Pacific coast, and while some of the famous English-built cruisers, like the Naniwa-Kan, have fallen off from their jockeyed trial-trip speed of 17 knots to about 14 in actual service, the little dispatch boat Dolphin, which has survived all the heroic tests applied to her, is able to show better speed after two years of active service than was claimed by her builders on her trial trips.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCreary). The time allowed for general debate has expired. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule. The Clerk read the following:

Pay, miscellaneous

Pay, miscellaneous:

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of apothecaries, yeomen, and civilian employés, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of naval cadets while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as cadets; for rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners, and prisons and courts of inquiry, boards of investigation, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses of purchasing-paymasters' offices of the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and advertising; foreign postage; telegraphing, foreign and domestic; telephones; copying; care of library; ferriage, toils, and express fees; costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; canal tolls and pilotage; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports, professional investigation, cost of special instruction, at home or abroad, in maintenance of students and attaches, and information from abroad, and the collection and classification thereof, and other necessary incidental expenses; in all, $225,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to amend by inserting after, the word

Mr. HERBERT. I move to amend by inserting after, the word "library," in line 1 of page 3, the words "including purchase of books, prints, manuscripts, and periodicals." Those words have uniformly been in this bill, and they were intended by the committee to be included in this instance; but by a misprint they were struck out.

The amendment of Mr. Herbert was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Torpedo Station and War College: For labor, material, freight, and express charges; general care of and repairs to grounds, buildings, wharves; boats; instruction; instruments, tools, furniture, experiments, general torpedo outits, and maintenance of the Navai Torpedo Station and War College on Goat Island

Mr. WHEELER withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appen-

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, pro forma amendments are withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Electric lighting of navy-yards: For the establishment of plant and the inauguration of electric lighting in the navy-yards at New York, Norfolk, Va., Washington, D. C., and Mare Island, Cal., $60,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move, on page 13, line 17, after the word "California," to add "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the following amendment, of which I have given notice, and I will say that it has been so amended as to be generally acceptable.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of permanently establishing a station for coal and other supplies for the naval and commercial marine of the United States on the shores of the bay of the harbor of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, Samoa, for the erection of the necessary building and structures thereon, and for such other purposes as may, in the judgment of the President, be necessary to confirm the rights of the United States under Article II of the trenty of 1878 between the United States and the King of the Samoan Islands and the deed of transfer made in accordance therewith, $100,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Should not the appropriation be made immediately

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, I will modify my amendment by adding the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy:

To enable the President to further increase the naval establishment of the United States, he is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract one armored steel cruising monitor, of not less than 3,000 tons displacement, at a cost not exceeding $1,500,000, exclusive of armament, and of any premium which may be paid for increased speed, of the type and to be constructed according to plans and specifications to be furnished to the Navy Department by Hon. Jonx R. Thomas, of Illinois, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

The contract for the construction of said cruising monitor, her boliers, engines, and machinery, shall contain provisions to the effect that, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, the contractor shall guaranty that the collective horse-power developed by the engines of said vessel shall equal 7,500 indicated horse-power, and that said vessel when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, shall exhibit a maximum speed of not less than 17 knots per hour; and the contract for said vessel shall contain a further provision that for every quarter of knot of speed so exhibited above said guaranty of 17 knots the contractor shall receive a premium, over and above the contract price, of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guarantied speed there shall be deducted from the contract price the sum of $50,000. The material, boilers, engines, and machinery shall be of domestic manufacture and of the latest and most approved quality and type.

The act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," so far as applicable, shall govern the construction of said vessel.

And the President is also hereby further authorized to contract with the Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company for the construction of one additional cruiser of the Vesuvius type, of not less dimensions than that vessel, and mite guns of 15-inch caliber, and to be fitted for such other armament as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided, That the contractors shall guaranty a speed of 20 knots an hour, and that there shall be deducted from the contract price the sum of $10,000 for every quarter knot that said vessel falls of reaching the further speed of 21 knots per hour: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall be satisfied, after official tests made with the Vesuvius and her guns, as to the efficiency of the armament of that vessel; and the cost of said vessel shall not exceed the sum of $450,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, my attention was momentarily diverted from the reading of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that we go back to the preceding clause, under the head of "Increase of the Navy;" I refer to the first clause. I had proposed offering an amendment, but my attention was for the moment withdrawn.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no objection.
Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask, then, that we go back to the first clause for an increase of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will have leave to return to this clause for the purpose of offering an amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to offer an amendment to this section, and I do it with a great deal of hesitation and delicacy, as well as with regret that I may seem to in any way antagonize a measure in which a committee colleague may feel a particular interest. But it seems to me that a proper performance of my duty here, and a just regard to the rights of the incoming administration, which will have to deal with the construction and designing of these ships, will not permit me to sanction the proposition that the House shall lay down a specific plan upon which a ship must be constructed by the Navy Department. think that has never been done before, and in this age of constant change and rapid modifications and improvements it does not seem to me to be either safe or judicious.

We authorized a contract to be made with the Dynamite Gun Company for the construction of a vessel to carry dynamite guns upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, but Congress did not at-tempt by legislative instructions to require the Navy Department to build a ship of an absolutely specific type or design, or that it should build it upon plans, specifications, or drawings of a particular character.

Now, I have understood, sir, that this particular vessel, which is provided for in this paragraph of the bill, has been recommended by some officers of distinction in the service, and I would like to ask if I am correct in that statement.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.
Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no personal knowledge of the matter.
My information extends only to the amendment as it appears in this bill. But if that is the case, if it be true that these plans have been approved by officers of distinction, and if this is a vessel such as ought to be and can be advantageously constructed as an addition to our Navy, there can be but little doubt, I take it, that the administration of the Navy Department which is to act on this matter will see the advantages of this vessel and adopt the plans. But it seems to me that we ought to permit the Secretary of the Navy at least to have the option of building this particular vessel according to these specifications and plans, if he shall deem it advisable, or of having them modified, or of substituting others, as he may deem for the best interests of the country, when the time comes for the construction of the ship.

Therefore I shall propose an amendment, Mr. Chairman, by making this appropriation a general one, which will provide for the construc-tion of a steel cruiser of the cost and size mentioned "of the most approved type;" and if it shall prove that the design of my colleague and friend shall be regarded by the Administration as providing a vesand friend shall be regarded by the Administration as providing a vessel of such type and character as shall be desirable to build, of course that will be the ship built, and no one will be more pleased than myself if that shall prove to be the case. I do not feel justified, though, in handicapping, as it were, the next administration of that Department by an attempt on the part of Congress to dictate to the Department the precise type and character and detail of the ship that shall be constructed. For one I do not feel competent to give that kind of instruction to the Department. I do not know enough about the details of the construction of a modern steel cruising war ship to feel instruction to the Department. I do not know enough about the details of the construction of a modern steel cruising war ship to feel competent to lay down specific plans or designs by which the Navy Department shall be bound. But I am quite willing to appropriate this amount for a vessel of approved type and design to be built upon such specifications and plans as the administration of the Navy Department when they come to deal with the matter may deem to be for the best interests of the public.

I move, therefore, to amend by striking out the world to make the striking out the striking out the striking the striking out the striking the striking

I move, therefore, to amend by striking out the words "cruising monitor," in lines 6 and 7; also the words "type and to be constructed," in lines 10 and 11; and the words "to be furnished to the Navy Department by Hon. JOHN R. THOMAS, of Illinois," in lines 11 and 12; and the words "cruising monitor," in lines 14 and 15; and inserting the word "cruiser" in line 6 and line 14, and the words "most approved type" in line 10; so as to read:

Increase of the Navy:
To enable the President to further increase the naval establishment of the United States, he is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract one armored steel cruiser, of not less than 3,000 tons displacement, at a cost not exceeding $1,500,000, exclusive of armament, and of any premium which may be paid for increased speed, of the most approved type, according to plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

The contract for the construction of said cruiser, her boilers, engines, and machinery, shall contain, etc.

I think, sir, that saves the rights of all, that it leaves a proper discretion for the Department, and can in no way interfere with the rightful interests of anybody.

Mr. HERBERT. I will respond very briefly to what the gentleman from Maine has said. What was done when we passed the appropriation for the pneumatic dynamite cruiser was very much what is proposed here, except that then we went a great deal further than we propose in this There we provided for the cruiser, its length, breadth, draught, speed, horse-power, equipment, and everything connected with it with great particularity. The provision in this bill is to build a vessel the plans of which have been already furnished and already approved as far as they go, and they are nearly completed, by the Department. I hold here a certificate signed by Commodore Sicard, Commodore Schley, Commodore Wilson, Chief of Construction, and Commodore Melville, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, all of them approving the

A board of higher authority can not be found anywhere. They have already approved the plan, and it is also to be approved by the incommr. Wanamaker or any other.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it does not read so.

Mr. HERBERT (reading). "To be approved" (line 13, page 39)

"by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Who is the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. HERBERT. The Secretary of the Navy, whoever he may be, when the contract is made. It will be the incoming Secretary who will make this contract.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood you to say that the Secretary of

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood you to say that the Secretary of the Navy had already approved these plans.

Mr. HERBERT. The plans at present prepared have already been approved. I state, however, that they are to be perfected in some respects, and they are to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy when perfected. That will be the incoming Secretary.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It does not say so. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

Mr. KERR. It seems to me the objection to that is this: Unless the person named here shall furnish a plan which may be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, there will be no provision at all for the building of a ship. Unless the plan proposed by the individual named shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Navy there will be no provision in the bill for the building of a ship. Now, I understand this Congress desires to build a ship, and desires to build a ship that will be approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and to put in the limitation which the gentleman from Maine moves to strike out would be in effect to say that unless the Secretary of the Navy shall approve that plan to say that unless the Secretary of the Navy shall approve that plan there will be no ship built. Therefore, I am in favor of the proposi-tion of the gentleman from Maine. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

Mr. ADAMS. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that the plans have been furnished. I see by this proviso as it stands, "plans and specifications to be furnished." I believe in trying this experiment which has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy; but why it does not refer to a particular type I do not see. I suppose I know the type referred to, and I think it is a highly valuable experiment. The criticism I make is that it is not definite enough. I do not think it ties down the Navy Department, as the gentleman from Maine thinks.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It prevents the Department building a ship exept upon plans to be supplied by a particular individual.

Mr. ADAMS. The committee ask for a million and a half or thereabout for the purpose of building a certain kind of vessel, to wit, an armored cruiser of a varying water line or draught; that is, with power to use water ballast so that the draught of the vessel can be increased or diminished at will.

Mr. HERBERT. I stated that the plans have been approved as far as they have been perfected. The fact, as I understand it, is that the plans for the hull, the principal part of the vessel, are about complete, and also the general plan of the machinery. Still there are some details that are not yet completed. These are to be perfected, and they must and will be perfected to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, whoever he may be. He will be entitled, when these plans are completed, within a little while, to give his approval to them before the ship can be built; and he will be the incoming Secretary, so that there can be no harm in adopting this provision. The committee, so there can be no harm in adopting this provision. The committee, so far as they were present when this matter was considered, were unanimous in the recommendation of this scheme, and the recommendation by the board is very pointed. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we may have a vote upon this question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand the chairman of the committee

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.
Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there anything to prevent the Navy Department from authorizing the construction of a ship of this kind without any legislation whatever?

Mr. HERBERT. Nothing that I know of.
Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there any necessity for this compulsory legislation to enable the Department to build a vessel of this precise type if it chooses to do so?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly not. This simply gives the Department authority to do what it has already approved.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I simply desire to add to what I have said already, that I have reluctantly performed what I conceived to be my duty in calling attention to a proposition appropriating a million and a half dollars, and in appropriating it compelling the next administration to build a specified vessel upon plans which are to be furnished by a particular person. That is something which certainly has not been done since I have been a member of Congress, and it is something which seems to me to be unnecessary in any aspect of the case. If this vessel is such a one as the next Department will want, under the amendment I have offered they will be enabled to build it. If it shall not prove to be such a vessel as the next Navy Department deems it wise or expedient to build, then it ought not to be compelled to construct it. With this proviso, as it now stands, it seems to me that if the next administration should disapprove this plan, then this appropriation would fail, as there is no authority to build any vessel except the one described. [Cries of "Yote!" "Yote!"]

The question was taken: and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Division.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 15, noes 50.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no disposition to raise the point of no quorum. As the other side of the House evidently favors retaining this provision I am perfectly willing to let the matter be disposed of by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKEBY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McCreary, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12329) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with various amendments.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the previous question on the amend-ments and on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken upon them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that for a moment.
Mr. McMILLIN. I will withhold the motion for the present.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4089) for the relief of George Turner. The bill was read this morning

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. KILGORE. I object. I move that the House do now adjourn. Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to adjourn to a day certain?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PAYSON. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Texas I move that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Tuesday next. Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement with reference to a bill that I hold in my hand.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. What has become of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PAYSON. That is pending. I hold in my hand a bill to which desire to ask the attention of members. It is a Senate bill which has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands for the relief of the inhabitants of the town of Flagstaff, in Arizona. The settlement of that town was made in advance of survey, and it is now a town of some 4,000 inhabitants. When the surveys were extended so far, it was found that about three-quarters of the town was located on section No. 16, which, as every gentleman knows, is a school section, and under the law is not open to settlement. The town is now a town of about 4,000 inhabitants; it has a costly system of water-works, and is growing, and this bill simply provides for entering the section for the benefit of the town and indemnifying the Territory by locating the same amount of land elsewhere.

Mr. WEAVER. Has that bill passed the Committee on the Public Lands unanimously?

Mr. PAYSON. It has. This is the fourth time the bill has been recommended, and there can not be a shadow of objection to it in the

Mr. WEAVER. Let it be read subject to objection.
Mr. KILGORE. I hope that bill will be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be il enacted, etc., That the probate judge of Yavapai County, Territory of Arizona, be, and is hereby, authorized to enter, in trust for the occupants and inhabitants of the town of Flagstaff, for town-site purposes, the south half of section 16, township 20 north, range 7 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, in the Territory of Arizona, subject to the provisions of sections 2387, 2388, and 2389, of chapter 8, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to town sites. Sec. 2. That upon the passage of this act the Territory of Arizona, through its proper officer, shall be, and is hereby, authorized to select as indemnity for said land, and in full satisfaction thereof, and for the purpose stated in section 1946 of the Revised Statutes, one half-section, or 320 acres of public lands, at any office in said Territory, said selection to be made according to legal subdivisions and contiguous.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] that this bill be now considered? Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask my colleague one question. Are these lots to be sold for the benefit of the town?

these lots to be sold for the benefit of the town?

Mr. PAYSON. Solely for the benefit of the town.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can the ex-Union soldiers go upon these lots and get them for nothing? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; they can not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I amopposed to the bill. [Renewed laughter.] I can not allow anything of that kind to pass. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but of course I must oppose it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] withdraws his processition to adjourn to a day certain.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, yes.
Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] has objected to the consideration of the bill which I asked to call up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas did object. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] that the bill which has just been read be now considered?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTEAU RIVER NEAR FORT SMITH.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill which I send to the desk. It is a mere amendment to a bridge

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R.11735) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark."

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, to save time, I will state now that I intend to object to that bill. I intend to object to every one until mine is considered.

THE OKLAHOMA BILL.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of Oliver Ames, governor of Massachusetts, William E. Barrett, speaker of the house of representatives, Mrs. Mary Hemenway, who has been eminent as a benefactress to many institutions of education, William Claffin, Francis Parkman, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Oliver Wendell Holmes, John Fiske, and William T. Herritten and the petition of the petition of the house of representatives, Mrs. Mrs. Parkman, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Oliver Wendell Holmes, John Fiske, and William T. Harris, and the petition is also supported by an autograph letter from John G. Whittier, calling the attention of Congress to the ancient and celebrated ruin of Casa Grande, an ancient temple of the prehistoric age, of the greatest ethnological and scientific interest, situate in Pinal County, near Florence, Ariz., upon section 16 of township 5 south, range 8 east, and otherwise describing the site.

The petitioners state that this ruin, which is one of the most interesting monuments of antiquity in the world, a temple of great beauty and architectural importance, which was a ruin when Columbus discovered America, is specially worthy of the care of the Government; that it is in danger of being destroyed by visitors and also by the letting in of water on the adjacent land for the purposes of irrigation. Mrs. Hemenway has already been at large expense for the preservation of this ruin, and the investigation of the traces of the prehistoric races in that neighborhood; and the desire of the petitioners is that the Government will take proper measures to have the ruin protected from injury by visitors or by land-owners in the neighborhood. They ask no outlay of money from the Government for the purpose; that will be assumed, and they are willing that all the scientific discovery there shall go to the benefit of the Smithsonian or other Government institution.

I desire that this petition may be referred to the Committee on Public

BRITISH EXTRADITION TREATY.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I wish to take a moment on a question of privilege

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine will pro-

Mr. FRYE. Some one has handed me a special to the New York World, dated January 31. I admit that it is ancient history, but I would like to call attention to something in it. The dispatch says, speaking of the extradition treaty:

As framed by the diplomatic representatives of the two Governments and submitted to the Senate it failed to provide for either the extradition of United States boodlers who seek an asylum in Canada or the extradition—which was much desired by England—of that class of offenders who are called Irish dynamiters, and who seek in the United States a refuge from British vengeaned. The boodlers may still go free, so far as any of the provisions of the treaty are concerned, but on the motion of Senator FRYE the Senate committee have provided for the extradition of the Irish dynamiters. This is in conflict with the provision inserted by Secretary Bayard that political offenders should be free from extradition, and the clause in favor of political offenders is so loosely drawn that it is generally believed that it would be useless with the Frye amendment in force.

I am not permitted to say what took place in an executive session, but I am permitted to say, Mr. President, that there is not a word of truth in that statement'so far as I am concerned, and if the correspondent of the New York World had exercised the utmost ingenuity to have gone as far from the shadow of truth as it was possible for him to get, he could not have succeeded any better than he did in this statement, as every Senator who was present in the executive session knows.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (S. 3445) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, when the framers of the Constitution of the United States conferred upon Congress the power "to regulate commerce among the several States" they had no conception of what those words would import within a century. merce among the several States' then meant an interchange by slow and laborious methods of a few scattered products, insignificant in quantity and value. Steam was then practically unknown; ships, such as were then in existence, were sailing vessels, while the boats upon the few known navigable rivers were propelled either by the current or by human labor.

Overland transportation of commodities was confined to a few miles from the point of production. Judging at that time by the history of the "commerce among the States" except this primitive, inconsequential, and slow method of exchanging commodities. "Commerce among the States" as we know it, it had not "entered into the heart of man to conceive." human race for six thousand years it looked as if there was never to be any Man had not learned to harness "that wayward daughter of fire and water, steam." The marvel of vessels driven by this power with the speed of the wind against the current and against the wind was yet to be unfolded to the human mind, while carriages carrying tons of freight overland with the rapidity, smoothness, and ease of our time, and at a cost of less than 1 cent per ton per mile, had never been thought of.

These things have now, however, come to be so common that it seems strange, incredible almost, that the time ever was when they were not. The products of the most remote sections of our Union find their way so easily and so inexpensively into the homes of all classes that the fruits and fish of the Pacific have become to be necessaries of life to even such citizens of the Atlantic seaboard as make no pretensions to wealth. The tropical fruits of the far South are at home in the streets of the cities of the North, while the products of the North are laid at the doors of our Southern homes almost as cheaply as to the neighbors of the producers

Steam and electricity have well-nigh abolished time and distance, until every citizen of the great Republic is, if not actually present, at least at home in every part of our great country.

Every village in the broad land is the recipient of the blessings that a beneficent Providence has showered upon the varied and diverse soils, climate, characteristics, in endless variety in our wonderful country.

Whether, if this vast and intricate system of "commerce among the States" had been comprehended in all its immensity by the framers of the Constitution, this power of control, unlimited save by the discretion of Congress, would have been conferred upon us we may well doubt; and, doubting this, we should proceed with caution in the exercise of this great power.

For myself, I confess frankly that I have always regarded the exercise of the powers conveyed by this section of the Constitution as full of danger; for if we exercise all the power that we may under this clause, we practically assume control of everything. The details of "commerce among the States" have become so vast and complicated that there is not a home, a business, or a human being who is not more or less affected by it; and the exercise of all the power conferred by this section upon Congress might be made to absorb almost everything else.

No one can deny that there is great danger in centralization, and it becomes every patriotic citizen to watch with jealous care the en-croachments of Federal power and to check and restrain them by every legitimate means. Powers once assumed and exercised are rarely, it ever, relinquished, and we should be sure that we never enter upon the exercise of a new power or an old power in a new way except upon the clearest evidence that such exercise is absolutely demanded by the best interests of the nation.

I hesitated long before fully making up my mind that a law regulating interstate commerce should pass, but mature reflection convinced me of the utter inability of the States to deal with the class of evils me of the utter machinty of the States to deal with the class of evils that it was intended to remedy, and after judicial decisions had settled this as true, there was absolutely nothing left except the exercise of power by the Federal Government. I believe the exercise of that power has already brought great good to the general public, and I hope that the intelligence and patriotism of the people will prevent the evils that might quite naturally grow up out of it.

The enactment of the bill under consideration into a law will be another and a most important exercise of authority conferred by this clause of the Constitution; and for myself, while I am because the constitution is the constitution.

another and a most important exercise of authority conferred by this clause of the Constitution; and for myself, while I am keenly alive to the dangers to flow from it, the demand for some such action is so great that I am most heartily in favor of some such bill. The details of the bill and its construction I leave to the committee having the matter in charge. I simply mean to declare myself in favor of legislation to suppress a gross wrong. The dangers to come from this exercise of power are in the future and may never come, while the wrongs which it is intended to remedy are here present and pressing upon us and demanding attention.

The growth of these commercial monsters called trusts in the last few years has become appalling. For a long while they were limited in numbers and applied to but a few articles, and while even then they excited the detestation of good men, they did not exist in such numbers and power as to cause apprehensions for the public safety.

Now, however, having been allowed to grow and fatten upon the public, their success is an example of evil that has excited the greed and conscienceless rapacity of commercial sharks until in schools they are to be found now in every branch of trade, preying upon every industry, and by their unholy combinations robbing their victims, the general public, in defiance of every principle of law or morals.

The iron hand of the law must be laid heavily upon this system, or the boasted liberty of the citizen is a myth. If the proceeds of the labor of our men and women are not to be their own we have no liberty and our Government is a farce and a fraud.

The interstate-commerce law was aimed at a tendency to combination in railroading. This was wise; but it will be utterly useless if combinations in restraint of competition in all other branches of trade should be allowed. We are advised by the newspapers that a monster salt trust intended to control the salt market of the world, and which is to pay an annual dividend of 25 per cent., is now in process of organi-

The steel trust has with a mailed hand laid the entire country under tribute for years; its profits, if the "swag" it has pocketed may be called by so respectable a name, has reached fabulous sums; and now we are regaled by assurances that a pig-iron trust is to come in and control the trade and the price in that article.

The iniquities of the Standard Oil Company have been enumerated and recounted until some of them are familiar to every one, and the colossal fortunes which have grown from it, which in all their vastness do not represent one dollar of honest toil or one trace of benefit to man-the pockets of the rich. But why name them? There is scarcely an article of commerce which is not now or soon to be controlled by some combination of plunderers.

When Robin Hood undertook to rob his fellow-citizens he took his life in his hand and with at least some sort of courage took the consequences of his crimes, but these modern foot-pads have not the grace of his courage, but commit their robberies by stealth. I am in favor of so changing the laws that their robberies can not be committed in safety any longer, and so that even planning them will make the offenders amenable to punishment.

This bill is a step in the right direction, and if it shall prove the beginning of the end of this system of conspiracies and combinations it will be hailed as the dawn of genuine freedom, and if it is not so constructed as to accomplish this purpose, I hope the Senate will so amend it as to make it effective. I hope it may serve to set people to thinking of the wrong of either permitting people or authorizing people to combine to plunder the public. If it does this there will not be a repetition in this Chamber of what has recently passed here. Proposed financial legislation, which has received the sanction of the majority here, will, if it ever becomes law, promote and build up just such conspiracies, combinations, trusts, "sympathetic movements," as we propose in this bill to condemn. We have been actually paving the way for such things for weeks-making the way for them easy-practically making the Government of the United States particeps criminis in those that are to grow

If, however, this bill shall become a law, and I hope it will, it may prove a great educator, and people may come to believe after awhile that no class of persons in this country has any right to be enriched by indirect means at the expense of the many, and if this shall come to be fully accepted as correct and just by the whole people, your system of protection—that system of "concealed bounties," to use the expressive words of the honorable Senator from Iowa—will, like many another pirate that has gone before, have to "walk the plank."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this is a very important subject. The bill undertakes to deal with very great evils which in the last few years have done great injury to the people of the United States. I am in favor of legislation to prevent trusts and combinations, but I want effective legislation—legislation that will crush out these combinations and trusts. The trouble is in finding the constitutional power to do exactly what ought to be done, and if we exceed our constitutional power, our action, however well meant, will be of no value; it will be utterly void. The bill before us seeks to get under the commercial clause of the Constitution jurisdiction to pass a criminal law in relation to trusts, agreements, and combinations as described in the bill. This power is simply the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

I have given some thought and some reflection to this matter, and I am extremely anxious that some bill shall receive the assent of this Congress which will put an end forever to the practice, now becoming too common, of large corporations, and of single persons, too, of large wealth, so arranging that they dictate to the people of this country what they shall pay when they purchase, and what they shall receive when they sell.

I have considered with some care the provisions of this bill. I do not believe that the effect of its provisions is accurately understood by members of this body. I propose, therefore, to make an analysis of its provisions to see, if we can, what it means, what evils it undertakes to remedy, and what remedy it provides, and how efficacious this remedy may prove to be.

In the beginning, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the provisions of this bill are not confined to trusts, to combinations, to arrangements and agreements made between parties who are engaged in business; or, in other words, taking the language of the bill in its plain meaning, it refers to and brings within the punitory provisions of the fourth section not only arrangements and agreements. between manufacturers, between sellers, between transporters, but it brings within its grasp arrangements made by any persons, though merely for moral and for defensive purposes. The bill provides—

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view, or which tend, to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States shall be unlawful.

That would apply to an arrangement, to an agreement, to a combination, not of a business character, but, as I before remarked, to such as is purely moral and defensive. It does not say that all arrangements, contracts, etc., made between persons and corporations engaged in selling, transporting, importing, manufacturing, or producing the articles described in the bill shall be unlawful; but it applies to all persons whether so engaged or not. So if this bill passes as it now stands, the farmers and laborers of this country who are sending up their voices to the Congress of the United States, asking, pleading, imploring us to take action to put down trusts, these farmers and these laborers will find that they themselves in their most innocent and necessary arrangements, made solely for defensive purposes against the operations of these trusts, will be brought within the punitory provisions of this bill.

It will strike the Senate probably with some astonishment if it be ascertained that under this bill the arrangements made by the Southern farmers during the last season to prevent the consummation of the robbery of them by the jute-bagging trust are made highly criminal. Under it the farmers of the South who combine to prevent and defeat that most iniquitous and unjust combination will find that they themselves rather than the jute-bagging trust will be the subjects of severe

The bill declares that any arrangement, any agreement, any combination made by any person, whether engaged in trade or not, which tends to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of the articles described in the bill, shall be subject to indictment, and, on conviction, to punishment by fine of $5,000 or imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

Upon the formation of this bagging trust the cotton farmers of the South, many of them in their granges and in their alliances, agreed that they would not purchase jute bagging, and by that agreement to a very large extent the rich rewards anticipated by the men who formed that trust were defeated. These combinations tended to prevent full and free competition in the sale of this article. But if that is not very clear, if Senators think these arrangements of the farmers did not have the effect of preventing this full and free competition, I call their attention to another provision contained in the third section of the bill, which reads in this way:

If acts shall be done under any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination, which have for their purpose, or which shall tend to compel the giving up or sale of any lawful business, the person, partnership, or corporation injured thereby may sue for and recover in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction the damages sustained thereby.

The very object of this combination of Southern farmers was to break down the trust in jute bagging, to compel the men who had seized and got control of the bagging manufacture of this country to give up their business-to loose their grip upon the business of the farmers. very clearly violated the other provision of the bill to which I have just called attention. The fact that the bill does not restrict these combinations, these agreements, to persons engaged in trade, engaged in transportation, engaged in importation, engaged in selling—the fact that it applies to all arrangements, all agreements, all combinations, by whomsoever made, would bring within its reach all defensive agreements made by farmers for the purpose of enhancing the price of their products. This bill, instead of preventing trusts, would have the ef-fect of crushing out all efforts of the people to rid themselves of their injurious effects.
Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GEORGE. I do. Mr. SHERMAN. Do I understand my friend from Mississippi to claim that under this bill an agreement made by farmers not to buy claim that under this bill an agreement made by larmers not to buy cotton-bagging or not to buy anything else is a combination within the meaning of the act?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; directly within the meaning of the act.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a very extraordinary proposition. There is nothing in the bill to prevent a refusal by anybody to buy anything. All that it says is that the people producing or selling a particular article shall not make combinations to advance the price of the necessaries of fe. However, I simply wished to get the answer of the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the true construction of this bill which I put on it

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say distinctly that that is not my idea or the idea of any one of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I presume it is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nor do I believe it is a fair construction of the

Mr. GEORGE. But yet that is the legal meaning and force of the bill; and I will state to the Senate and to the Senator from Ohio that it is directly within the terms of this bill to forbid any number of persons belonging to or joining a temperance society whose object is to compel retailers of intoxicating liquors to give up their business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where men agree that they will not drink at all, does the Senator think that is a combination in restraint of the trade of liquor-sellers?

Mr. GEORGE. What is it?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator, as I understand, now claims that an agreement among several people not to drink whisky or brandy is in restraint of the trade of selling whisky or brandy and is therefore a combination within the meaning of this bill?

Mr. GEORGE. I insist that a society, making an agreement or a combination between citizens of a town anywhere in the Union not to combination between citizens of a town anywhere in the Union not to drink, not to use in any way vinous or spirituous liquors, and to persuade others to a similar abstention, does, in the language of this bill, tend to compel persons engaged in retailing liquor in that community to give up their business, and the doing of that is expressly condemned by the third section of this bill.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. If an organization for the purpose of having laws passed creating high license is formed, would not that enhance the value of the things prohibited in this bill?

Mr. GEORGE. I have considered that question. I have thought possibly that the courts might say that the right of political organization to bring about political results by legislation was not embraced within the provisions of the bill.

But this bill not only prevents combinations between farmers to raise the price of their products, but it would (though not so intended by the framers) embrace combinations among workingmen to increase the amount of their wages. For an increase in their wages would tend to increase the price of the product to the consumer, and thus the combination would come within the express terms of the bill.

But the bill is futile; it amounts to nothing. In the first place there are two subjects, as named in the first section, concerning which these arrangements or agreements are to be made. The first subject is imarrangements or agreements are to be made. The first subject is imports. Now, if there is anything settled in the constitutional law of this country, commencing with the decision of Chief-Justice Marshall in the case of Brown vs. Maryland, in 12 Wheaton's Reports, and coming down to the present time, it is that the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States under the commercial clause of the Constitution over imports ceases at the moment the import passes out of the hands of the importer, or, remaining in his hands, the package in which it was imported is broken up.

So, then, the first clause of the first section can have no effect beyond an agreement with reference to imports whilst they are still in the hands of the importer and before the package is broken up. Will any Senator say that there has ever been a trust, a combination, or an agreement within the United States between importers before the package had been broken up and before sale in reference to the sale of the imported goods? In all the long list of trusts, of combinations, of arrangements, and of agreements which have been made within the United States for the purpose of fleecing the people I have not as yet heard of a single combination between importers made with reference to the sale of the goods imported by them in the original package. So, then, the first clause of this bill is aimed at a phantom, is aimed at an evil which does not exist and which can not exist.

As soon as the article passes out of the hands of the importer, or, remaining in his hands, as soon as the package in which it was imported is broken, it passes beyond the jurisdiction of the United States and is subject to State authority alone, and therefore combinations with reference to these imports in that condition are not reached by this bill, because they are without the jurisdiction of Congress.

We will next go to the other provision in the first section and see how that is. It is as follows:

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view, or which tend, to prevent full and free competition * * * in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or Territory to another—

Shall be unlawful.

By this provision is drawn within the punitive provisions of this bill every agreement made by farmers not to sell any particular article of their production unless they receive a certain price for it, for that would be an agreement which, under the clause of the first section, which is under consideration, would tend to advance the cost to the consumer of any such articles, and is therefore condemned by the bill. This is another phantom at which this bill is aimed. There is no complaint, there have been no complaints that the farmers of this country have combined for the purpose of raising the price of agricultural products. There have been combinations of that sort, lawful in their character, meritorious in their aims, which have tended to prevent the farmers of this country from being fleeced by these great trusts; and yet under this bill they are condemned and punished. Under its plain provisions, if any grange in the United States, if any agricultural club, if any society called a farmers' alliance, if any number of farmers not embraced in these organizations should agree that they would withhold their products from sale until they could receive a certain price for them, every one of them would be liable to be fined $5,000 and put in the penitentiary for five years. The same is true, as I have shown, of combinations and arrangements made by laborers to increase their wages. I am not prepared to sustain a bill of that sort merely because it is entitled "A bill to declare trusts and combinations unlawful." It seems that the bill however beneatly intended for good has its effectivel aim.

that the bill, however honestly intended for good, has its effectual aim at phantoms, and not at the real grievances of the people, nor at the real culprits who have combined to plunder the great mass of the people.

I have shown how little can be done under the import clause to relieve the people of trusts; now let us see how much can be done under the interstate-transportation clause. Let me read that so that we may understand it:

That all arrangements, contracts, etc., made with a view-

I am reading from the first section-or which tend, to prevent full and free competition * * * in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or

Are prohibited.

How much can be done under that? And herenote that in the first section of the bill there is not a single provision against the unlawful acts themselves done under these agreements. The first section of the bill is aimed at the agreement alone. If the agreement be made, whether or not it does in fact increase the price or does in fact prevent full and free competition, if it be made with that purpose or with that view, or if it have that tendency, whether these evil results follow or not, then it is liable to the condemnation of the bill. No act however injurious done in pursuance of it is made criminal. The country may be robbed to the amount of millions, and, so far as these acts of pillage and plunder are concerned, they are not condemned by the bill. It is only agreements that are condemned. Here we find another trouble upon that subject. If the agreement be not made within the jurisdiction of the United States, as if it be made in Canada, it is not within the terms of the bill. So that under this bill an agreement may be made at Montreal or on the other side of Niagara Falls or at any other place outside of the jurisdiction of the United States, and then the wrongful acts may be done within the United States, and then the wrongful acts may be done within the United States and there is no punishment, no redress. You can not punish the agreement, because it was made outside of the jurisdiction of the United States; you can not punish the acts done under the agreement, because there is no provision in the bill which makes these acts subject to its punitory provisions. Scrutinize the bill, read it, study it, and you will find that is its legal effect. is its legal effect.

But here is another anomaly about this second clause of the first section. Suppose the agreement be made within the United States. Then whether it shall be held lawful or unlawful, whether it shall come whether it shall be field lawliff or unlawlar, whether it shall come within the provisions of this bill or not, depends upon an act to take place after the agreement js made. So far as this bill is concerned, the agreement may be perfectly lawful at the time it is made and it will become unlawful by a matter which may take place months afterwards, and by an act—and I desire to call the especial attention of the Senator from Ohio to that—and by an act to which the parties to the agreement were in no way privy, and for which they are in no way responsible. For instance, A and B combine to raise the price of domestic products. If the thing stops there they can not be punished under this bill, al-though that agreement be made within the city of New York; but if C, months afterwards, having acquired some of the goods, some of the articles of merchandise with reference to which this original agreement was made, transports them from one State to another, then the crime is consummated.

What a remarkable anomaly is that in legislation! The agreement when made is lawful, it only becomes unlawful by the subsequent act of men, not parties to it, not privies to it, and, what is more remarkable, it becomes unlawful by the lawful act of these subsequent parties, for it must be noted there is nothing in this bill which makes it unlawful to transport from one State to another goods, merchandise, or articles which are the subject-matter of the prohibited agreement. The original agreement is and so remains lawful because the fact has not transpired and may never transpire, or if it transpires at all it may not transpire for months after the agreement is made, and when that fact does transpire it is a thing which is perfectly lawful in itself. is not only lawful, but it is meritorious, and yet this subsequent inno-cent, lawful, and meritorious act relates back to the agreement, and makes it criminal without bringing on itself any criminality whatever. So, then, we have this remarkable anomaly, that two acts both of which are perfectly lawful, done by separate and distinct persons without any privity or connection between the two, just simply by the mere sequence in time of one to the other are compounded into a high crime, and punished by a heavy fine and imprisonment in the penitentiary

Mr. President, I make that statement deliberately. Senators who have not studied this bill will be astonished to find it so, but it is so nevertheless. The original agreement is not made unlawful until the subsequent transportation takes place. The transportation is not unlawful, nor is it made so by this bill, but it is a meritorious act, being commerce between the States; and yet these two acts done by two sepa rate and distinct persons without the slightest privity, without the slightest concert between them, both being innocent and lawful when they are performed, are by this bill compounded into a high misdemeanor punished by a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment in the penitentiary for

Mr. President, a bill of that sort will not do. You can not make a Mr. President, a bill of that sort will not do. You can not make a crime out of a lawful act by matter ex post facto done by a person without connection with the original actor. It is lawful to make a gun, but it is unlawful to kill a person with it. In that case when one of the acts was manifestly unlawful, the mind and the conscience would be shocked if by the subsequent unlawful act of the man who committed murder with the gun you should provide that the maker of the gun should be guilty of a crime. In that case one of the acts would be unlawful, but in the case made by this bill both are lawful, and yet a crime results; results, too, from the performance of the subsequent act, which under no circumstance does the bill condemn, but seeks to promote and encourage.

I am asked by a Senator who sits near me to give a specific illustration of the argument which I am making. I will do so. There is a combination made in relation to jute bagging, for instance, produced in this country, not imported. That combination, under the terms of this bill, is not unlawful until there shall be a transportation of the article from one State to another. I will again read the clause under consideration:

That all arrangements, contracts, * * * to prevent full and free competition in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or Territory to another, etc., shall be unlawful.

So that the Senator will clearly see that it is not the agreement or combination per se that is made unlawful, nor is the subsequent transportation unlawful; but if the lawful agreement be followed, however distant in time, by the subsequent transportation, then by this sequence alone a crime is made of the agreement.

This provision about transportation is inserted to draw this subject within the commercial power of Congress. Without the subject of transportation or without some provision with reference to transportation from one State to another, the bill would be manifestly unconstitutional, and therefore its framers were compelled to put in a subsequent act of transportation from one State to another, so that up to the time that transportation takes place the agreement, the trust, the combination is perfectly lawful, not only by the terms of the bill, but for want of constitutional power in us to make it anything else.

Mr. EUSTIS. In regard to the constitutional point, if the Senator will allow me

Mr. GEORGE. I will discuss that question hereafter.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; I am glad to do it.

Mr. EUSTIS. If I understand the difficulty which is presented by the argument of the Senator from Mississippi, it is that the jurisdiction, the power of Congress is derived from the fact of transportation from one State to another, in order to exercise that power under the commercial clause. I would ask the Senator whether the power of Congress would exist if the language were "shall or may be transported," etc.? In other words, I ask whether the power of Congress is conferred by the Constitution, dependent on the act of actual transportation and is confined to that, or whether the power of Congress may be applied to the transportable merchandise; so that if this bill were to read "shall or may be transported," would that correct the defect which has been pointed out by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GEORGE. Upon that point in the latter part of my remarks I expect to be full and explicit. At this stage I will merely state to the Senator in answer to his question that "shall or may be" would make no difference; that the power of Congress exists only over the subject so far as it comes from transportation, while the transportation is being carried on; that the power of Congress does not begin as to the subject until transportation begins, and it ends when transportation is completed. Upon that point I expect to make some remarks before I get

The trouble about this bill is that it is an attempt to do the impossible. It is an attempt to draw within the commercial power of Congress jurisdiction over this subject by the provision about transportation. That is the trouble.

There is another serious defect in the bill. It relates only to agreements, combinations, arrangements between two or more. It leaves wholly out of view acts of oppression and plunder when done by a single individual. If he be a great capitalist, so that by his own unaided means he can so provide to increase prices to the consumer or reduce prices to the producer, he is not touched by this bill. For, as I have shown, it is the agreements, combinations, between two or more, and the like which are punished, and not the wrongful acts which these agreements and combinations were designed to promote.

Mr. President, I believe that I have said about all I desire to say in the way of analysis and comment upon the bill, and I will go now to the point to which my attention was directed by the question of the Senator from Louisiana.

It is not denied anywhere by the friends and supporters of this bill that the power to pass it is claimed under the commerce clause of the Constitution. Certainly under no other clause can there be the slightest pretense for the claim of this power.

Now, let us see what is the extent of that power under the commercial clause of the Constitution. It is a power to "regulate commerce," foreign and interstate, not a police power to regulate the general business of the people. That power is reserved to the States. The Supreme Court said in Railroad Company vs. Husen, 95 United States Reports, page 465, that this police power of the States extends—to the protection of all property within the State. * * * By it persons and property are subject to all kinds of restraint and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State.

And Judge McLean, in the License Cases, 5 Howard, page 588, said:

The States, resting upon their original basis of sovereignty, * * exercise their powers over everything connected with their social and internal condition. A State regulates domestic commerce, contracts, the transmission of estates, real and personal, and acts upon all internal matters which relate to its moral and political welfare. Over these subjects the Federal Government has

These combinations and trusts, therefore, are clearly within the police power of the States. I ask the Senator from Louisiana, would it be lawful or constitutional for the State of Louisiana, or any other State, to pass a law punishing persons entering into these combinations and trusts within their respective limits, whether or not the subjects about which the trusts were made should afterwards become subjects of foreign or of interstate commerce?

Mr. EUSTIS. I think the States have the power.

Mr. GEORGE. You think they have, and I agree with you. If they have Congress has not, because there is a dividing line plainly marked by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, upon one side of which rests the police power of the State, and on the other the commercial power of Congress. That power is granted in these other the Congress shall have never to regulate commerce with foreign other the commercial power of Congress. That power is granted in the words: "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." It is a power of regulation, and a regulation only of commerce, not a regulation of something which may in the near or remote future become a subject of foreign or interstate commerce. The regulation must be of the act or the transaction of commerce itself.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me right here to ask him a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.
Mr. EUSTIS. In a case where the State of Kansas or the State of Iowa prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors, I should like to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, Congress has the constitutional power to prohibit the transportation of liquors into those States?
Mr. GEORGE. The States have no such power. That has been settled.

settled.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask if Congress has.

Mr. GEORGE. Congress would have the power to prevent anything from being transported into the States.

Mr. EUSTIS. Very well. Now the argument of the Senator from Mississippi has been that the actual fact of transportation is what gives Congress power and jurisdiction under the commercial clause. Now Congress power and jurisdiction under the commercial clause. Now he admits that in the absence of any act of transportation Congress can exercise that power.

Mr. GEORGE. Why, Mr. President, the regulation of commercation.

Mr. GEORGE. It is no transportation.

Mr. GEORGE. It is a prohibition of transportation. It regulates the transportation. This is done in a prohibition of transportation, and this is a regulation of commerce as was decided with reference to the same consistent product the administration of Jefferson. the embargo enacted under the administration of Jefferson.

Mr. EUSTIS. Therefore I do not understand how the Senator reconciles the argument he has made with the position he now takes, that the fact of actual transportation is what confers the jurisdiction upon Congress, and yet he admits that Congress has the power to prohibit the transportation of goods and exercises that power in a case where there is no actual transportation.

Mr. GEORGE. The answer to that is this: Congress has the power to regulate interstate transportation; it may either prohibit it altogether, or when it takes place may regulate the means and methods of carrying it on. But because Congress may prohibit the transportation of an article in interstate or in foreign commerce, it does not follow, as would seem to be the view of the Senator from Louisiana, that Congress may assume jurisdiction over matters entirely within the jurisdiction of the States merely because they may become the subject of interstate commerce, transportation being one of the means of inter-

Mr. EUSTIS. That is exactly the case that I stated, where Congress prohibits the transportation of liquors, for instance, to the State of Kansas. The power conferred upon Congress is not to prohibit, it is to regulate, and that power of regulation is exercised in the absence of any actual transportation; and the Senator from Mississippi informs us that in his opinion that power is rightfully exercised. Therefore I ask him if that be so how can it be necessary that the actual transportation should be the jurisdictional fact with reference to this bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Whenever Congress undertakes to regulate interstate transportation, as it does in this bill, then there must be transportation to regulate; but where Congress in the exercise of its power, as it has the undoubted power, in regulating interstate commerce, to prohibit the transportation of certain articles, they may do that. The power of Congress, says Chief-Justice Marshall, is to regulate commerce, which includes intercourse.

It is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.

Not prescribing rules for subjects, as I will show hereafter by the decisions of the Supreme Court, which are within the jurisdiction of the States, merely because those subjects may afterwards become the subjects of interstate commerce. Chief-Justice Marshall's language is, "to make rules for carrying on that intercourse." It is not "carrying on that intercourse "until there is actual commerce or the beginning of commerce between the commerce of the beginning of the commerce between the commerce of the beginning of the commerce of the comm ning of commerce between two or more States.

I am now trying to ascertain the limits of the power of Congress on the subject. I now quote from Chief-Justice Taney in the License Cases, in 5 Howard's Reports:

That imports ceased to be such when sold by the importer, or the original package was broken. This—

Chief-Justice Taney understands-to be substantially the line between foreign commerce, which is subject to the regulation of Congress, and internal and domestic commerce, which belongs to the States, and over which Congress can exercise no control.

McLean, justice, in the same case, after adopting the rule as to imports ceasing to be such when this happens, says of the imported article.

The imported article becomes mingled with the other property of the State and is subject to its laws.

This power is claimed here, as I understand it, not because there is any actual commerce between States or citizens of States, but because the subjects to which this bill relates may afterwards become the subjects of interstate commerce. Now, let us see how that stands in consti-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. FRYE. How much more time does the Senator from Mississippi desire to complete his remarks?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, not very long, say half an hour, or perhaps an our. Probably not more than a half hour will do.

Mr. FRYE. The bill which is the regular order has been laid aside now every day for a fortnight.

Mr. GEORGE. In that case I shall not occupy a great while. I am very nearly through.

Mr. FRYE. I consent that the bill may be temporarily laid aside for half an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for half an hour, or until the Senator from Mississippi concludes his re-

Mr. FRYE. Until the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He ought to be allowed to conclude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will be informally laid aside until the Senator from Mississippi concludes his remarks

Mr. GEORGE. I have shown as to imports that the power of Congress ceased when they passed out of the hands of the importer or when the original package was broken up. That is the end of the power of Congress. Now, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which fix the time when the power begins, and especially I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to that subject. This bill is framed on the idea that Congress may take jurisdiction of the subject, because at some time hereafter this subject may become a matter of interstate commerce; and on that point the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are uniform without one single break. I propose now to read some extracts from the decisions of the Supreme Court on that point point.

In the case of Veazie vs. Moore, 14 Howard, 568, the court say:

Commerce with foreign nations must signify commerce which is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately or at some stage of their progress must be extraterritorial.

Not "may be," but "must be extraterritorial." This bill is framed on the idea that "may be" will do. This is expressly overruled in the language I have read.

The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal between citizens of the same community, or to a polity and laws whose end and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community.

Nor can it be properly concluded that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture, or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered is legitimately within the import of the phrase "foreign commerce," or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce.

That decision overthrows the theory of this bill that these products of agriculture, of manufactures, and of the mines may ultimately become the subjects of foreign or interstate commerce, and therefore before they do actually become such the United States Congress will interpose and regulate them. The court go on to say:

A pretension as far-reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, and would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country, for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce.

And afterwards this same language is applied to interstate commerce. This case is exactly in point, and establishes the unconstitutionality of this bill. Though an old case it never has been overruled nor its doctrines departed from. In a very recent case, to wit, Lord vs. Steam-ship Company, 102 United States Reports, it was cited and confirmed. But there is another case, and a very recent one, which defines this matter with some care and precision. I read now from the case of Coe vs. Errol, volume 116 United States Reports, page 525:

There must be a point of time when they-

That is, articles of merchandisecease to be governed exclusively by the domestic law and begin to be governed and protected by the national law of commercial regulation, and that moment seems to us to be a legitimate one for this purpose, in which they commence their final movement for transportation from the State of their origin to that of their destination. When the products of the farm or the forest are collected and brought in from the surrounding country to a town or station serving as an entrepôt for that particular region, whether on a river or a line of railroad, such products are not yet exports, nor are they in process of exportation, nor is exportation begun until they are committed to the common carrier for transportation out of the State to the State of their destination, or have started on their ultimate passage to that State. Until then it is reasonable to regard them as not only within the State of their origin, but as a part of the general mass of property of that State, subject to its jurisdiction.

Here is another sentence a little more explicit answering the argument that they were intended for exportation, and when they were thus intended they become the subjects of the power of Congress. The court say on that subject:

Though intended for exportation, they may never be exported; the owner has a perfect right to change his mind; and until actually put in motion, for some place out of the State, or committed to the custody of a carrier for transportation to such place, why may they not be regarded as still remaining a part of the general mass of property in the State?

The court proceeds on page 528 thus:

Some of the Western States produce very little except wheat and corn, most of which is intended for export; and so of cotton in the Southern States. Certainly as long as these articles are on the land which produced them they are a part of the general property of the State, and so we think they continue to be until they have entered upon their final journey for leaving the State and going into another State. * * * This movement does not begin until the articles have been shipped or started for transportation from one State to another.

Until actually launched on its way to another State or committed to a common carrier for transportation to such State, its destination is not fixed and certain. It may be sold or otherwise disposed of within the State, and never put in course of transportation out of the State. * * Until shipped or started on its final journey out of the State, its exportation is matter in fieri, and not at all a fixed and certain thing.

So that if anything is settled in the constitutional law of this country it is that an article of commerce, an article of merchandise, does not become the subject of Congressional jurisdiction under the commercial clause of the Constitution until it has actually become the subject of interstate or foreign commerce, and that this does not begin, though it may be intended for that purpose, until transportation has actually commenced. That was the decision in Veazie vs. Moore, made many years ago, and also in the case to which I have just called the attention of the Senate.

My attention is called by my colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] to a still more recent case decided at the October term, 1888, the case of Kidd vs. Pearson, in which the court say:

This court has already decided that the fact that an article was manufactured for export to another State does not of itself make it an article of interstate commerce within the meaning of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, and that the intent of the manufacturer—

The intent of the manufacturer-does not determine the time when the article or product passes from the control of the State and belongs to commerce.

Then the court refer to the case which I have just read and approve.

That was the view of the Senator from Ohio himself in the beginning of this controversy, as shown by the RECORD. I do not state this for the purpose of convicting the Senator from Ohio of any inconsistency, but as a support and a strong support of the views which I entertain. On August 14, 1888, the Senator from Texas [Mr. Reagan] introduced a bill on the subject of trusts, which will be found printed on page 7512 of volume 19, part 8, of the Congressional Record, and is as follows:

on page 7512 of volume 19, part 8, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and is as follows:

Mr. Reagan infroduced a bill (8. 3440) to define trusts and to provide for the punishment of persons connected with them or carrying them on; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. Beck. Let that bill be read in full.

The Prissident pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time at length, if there be no objection.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That a trust is the combination of capital or skill by two or more persons for the following purposes:

"First. To create or carry out restrictions on trade.

"Second. To limit, to reduce, or to increase the production or prices of merchandise or commodities.

"Third. To prevant competition in the manufacture, making, sale, or purchase of merchandise or commodities.

"Fourth. To create a monopoly.

"Sec. 2. That any person who may be or may become a member of any such trust, or who may be or may become engaged in the business of any such trust in any trade or business carried on with foreign countries, or between the States or between any State or Territory and the District of Columbia, or between the District of Columbia and any Territory, or between the United States and the waters adjacent to any foreign country, shall be gulliy of a high misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any district or circuit court of the United States, after indictment shall be fined in a sum of not more than $10,000 nor less than $1,000, and may be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period of not more than five years and not less than one year.

"Sec. 3. That the purchase by any trust, or by the agent of any trust, of merchandise or commodities in a foreign country for sale in this country; or the manufacture, making, or purchase of any merchandise or commodity in one State for sale in another; or in any State or Territory; or in any Territory for sale in any State or Territory; or in any Territory for sale in any State or Territory; or in

On the motion to refer that bill to the Committee on the Judiciary the Senator from Ohio said this:

Mr. Sherman. I wish to say that the Committee on Finance has already een charged with the consideration of this subject. I have myself given some attention to it, to see how far it is within the constitutional power of Congress to prohibit trusts and combinations in restraint of trade. It is very clear there is no such power unless it is derived from the power of levying taxes—

Not from the power to regulate commerce, but from the power of that it is a power which must be exercised by each State for itself. Similar laws have been passed in England and in other countries. Indeed, in Blackstone's Commentaries there are declarations and denunciations of trusts, monopolies, etc., as strong as can be written in the English language. Whether such legislation can be ingrafted in our peculiar system of government by the national authority there is some doubt. If it can be done at all, it must be done upon a tariff bill or upon a revenue bill. If do not see in what other way it can be done.

So at that time the Senator who is the author of this bill concurred in the views which I have expressed upon that subject; and on July 10 of the same year—I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 19, part 7-the Senator introduced the following resolution:

19, part 7—the Senator introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire into and report, in connection with any bill raising or reducing revenue that may be referred to it, such measures as it may deem expedient to set aside, control, restrain, or prohibit all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations, made with a view, or which tend to prevent free and full competition in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or of the sale of articles imported into the United States, or which, against public policy, are designed or tend to foster monopoly or to artificially advance the cost to the consumer of necessary articles of human life, with such penalties and provisions, and as to corporations, with such forfeitures, as will tend to preserve freedom of trade and production, the natural competition of increasing production, the lowering of prices by such competition, and the full benefit designed by and hitherto conferred by the policy of the Government to protect and encourage American industries by levying duties on imported goods.

The referring of the matter to the Committee on Finance would have

The referring of the matter to the Committee on Finance would have

The referring of the matter to the Committee on Finance would have been inappropriate, unless it was designed that legislation on this subject should be a part of the revenue system of this country.

So that the Senator who is the author of this bill, with his great learning and his great experience and his well-trained mind, in the beginning of our consideration of this subject took the same view of it that I do. To show what he meant by taking jurisdiction of it in connection with the tariff and the power to levy taxes, I will read from a speech made by that Senator on January 4, 1888, in which he commented upon the President's message, quoting from the President as follows:

But it is notorious that this competition is too often strangled by combinations quite prevalent at this time, and frequently called trusts, which have for their object the regulation of the supply and price of commodities made and sold by members of the combination.

That was a quotation from the President. Now here is the reply of the Senator from Ohio:

When such combinations to prevent a reduction of price by fair competition exist, I agree that they may and ought to be met by a reduction of duty.

That is what was meant by the Senator from Ohio in restricting the power of Congress over the subject of trusts to legislation in connection with the revenue laws of the country.

Mr. President, I have said about all I desire to say on this subject at present. I shall offer some amendments to the bill at a later stage of these proceedings, based upon the ideas announced by the Senator from Ohio, amendments which look to a suspension or a reduction of the duties on imports where combinations and trusts have been formed in this country with reference to similar and competing articles.

I will also offer amendments which look to outlawing these trusts by preventing their admission into the courts of the United States to collect any debt due them or to redress any wrong done them; and also declaring the products and manufactures of all such trusts shall not be lawful subjects of interstate commerce.

For the present I desire simply to say in addition to what I have already said that the bill as now framed is ineffectual to carry out the objects and purposes for which it was introduced, and for which it was designed by its framer; that it is without constitutional authority, as settled by the Supreme Court of the United States in a long line of decisions coming down even to the present term of the court, and that in response to the demand of the people of this country, coming from every part of it, if we now pass this bill and nothing more we shall do nothing effectual in respect to the suppression of trusts. If the bill be constitutional it does not contain the provisions which are nece to make it effective, and it does contain provisions which bring within the force and operation of the law numerous arrangements and agree ments made by the producers of raw material in this country which have hitherto been regarded as a perfectly innocent exercise of the power of combination, and which have never been brought into operation to the extent of injuring a single human being, and which have been used solely for the purpose of defensive measures against the trusts which this bill vainly attempts to put down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. # PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to make a little personal explanation.

During a speech on the 30th of January by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Dolph], wherein he was referring to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, I made the inquiry whether he was not informed that that railroad was built by an express condition, I meant to say with British Columbia, the condition being that that colony should become a part of the Dominion government. I inadvertently used the words "New Brunswick" and said that in a personal conversation with the governor of that province he had so informed me, that that was the condition upon which the railroad was built. I inadvertently used the words "New Brunswick" instead of "British Columbia."

I desire to make that correction because the conversation was with the governor of British Columbia and not with the governor of New

Mr. DOLPH. I simply wish to say that what followed by myself was necessarily based on what was said by the Senator from Delaware. I understood the condition had been made by British Columbia, but I had not heard that it had been made by New Brunswick.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was reported as saying "New Brunswick" and undoubtedly I was correctly reported. It was a mere slip of the tongue, however, and I wanted to make this explanation because the conversation I had was with the governor of British Columbia and not with the governor of New Brunswick.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PAYNE presented petitions of citizens of St. Mary's, Pagetown, and Morrow, in the State of Ohio, praying for the submission of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of citizens of Dublin, Ind., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3401.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Patrice of t cific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that as the bill is read section by section certain amendments, merely of form, may be made.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the amounts of the respective indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, to which the subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in aid of the construction of the Pacific railroads and branches as of the 1st day of July, 1859, upon the same principle as if the whole sum of said bonds and interest paid and to be paid by the United States thereon, and not theretofore repaid by credits on account thereof, were to be paid to the United States in cash on said day. And the said sum shall be computed and ascertained as follows:

First. To the whole of the principal of said subsidy bonds attributable to each of said companies shall be added the interest paid or to be paid by the United States upon the same, so as to ascertain the total amounts that would have been due the United States for principal and interest paid on the bonds issued to each of said companies at their maturity, if no payments or reimbursements had been made thereon by the companies.

Second, From said amounts so ascertained shall be deducted any payments or reimbursements made by any of said companies upon their indebtedness at any time before the 1st day of July, 1889, as shall appear in the bond and interest accounts of the said companies, respectively, with the United States.

Third, Compute the present worths of the amounts so found as of the 1st day of July, 1889. From the sums so ascertained there shall be deducted the amounts in the sinking fund applicable to the said companies, respectively, computing the value of any bonds in said sinking fund at their market value at the time of such computation as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and said sinking fund shall thereupon be applied as a payment upon the debt of such company to the United States.

The Chief Clerk read section 2.

The amendments were agreed to. The Chief Clerk read section 2.

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe there is a report in this case. Is there

There is.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to hear it read.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.
Mr. FRYE. Before the report is read I wish to say just a word or

The special committee on the Pacific railroads and the funding of their debt to the United States was appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate early in the last session of Congress, and it entered immediately upon the performance of the duty assigned to it. We had quite a number of hearings early in the session. At those hearings all parties in interest were notified to be present, and I think at all of them the Government directors, or some of them, also the United States Railroad Commissioner, also the commissioners appointed by the President to consider this subject and report, and also the attorneys for the Pacific Railroad companies were present. Two of the commissioners appointed by the President gave their views at length before the committee. I think the Railroad Commissioner of the United States was mittee. I think the Railroad Commissioner of the United States was present at every hearing. Mr. Adams, in behalf of the Union Pacific Railway, gave his views. So did one or two attorneys for the Union Pacific Railway Company; so also did one or two attorneys for the Central Pacific Railroad Company,

The committee gave a full and careful hearing and came to an entirely unanimous conclusion. They regarded the matter submitted to them as one purely of business in which there was no sentiment whatever. They looked upon these Pacific railroads as debtors to the United States in very large sums of money which they could not pay at many States in very large sums of money which they could not pay at maturity, and the question practically submitted was, what under the circumstances should be done to make the ultimate payment of the debt to the United States certain, and also to make the payment of that debt more secure, if possible, than it is at present? These matters the committee considered with care, and they came to a unanimous conclusion in relation to these.

I could not in a speech by any possibility state the facts in this case so concisely as they are stated in the report made by the committee, and therefore I should like Senators who are present to listen to the report, as it gives facts that are very important in the consideration of this exceedingly important matter, and until I get tired of it, if the Presiding Officer will permit me, I will read the report.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Senator proceeds to read the report in this case, I desire to submit a motion, or rather give notice of an intended motion. I ask that it may be read and lie over, and I give notice that at the proper time I shall move the resolution, it being a motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

Mr. FRYE. Is this the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; it is not an amendment, I will state to the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee. It is a mo-tion proposing to recommit the bill to the select committee with instructions to include such proposed legislation as in their judgment they think is proper, covering the whole controversy of all the Pacific rail-roads involved. I simply present it now for the information of the Senate, and give notice that at the proper time I shall move it and ask for a vote on it.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to have it read now in order that may appear in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed resolution will be

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned, with the accompanying report, No. 1950, first session Fiftieth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, recommitted to the select committee on the President's message transmitting the report of the Pacific Railway Commission, with instructions to include in said bill such proposed legislation as in the judgment of such committee is proper, providing for the ascertainment of the amount of the indebtedness to the Government justly payable, due and to become due, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as the successor to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, in respect of the bonds of the United States heretofore issued to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific Railroads, and for the proper security and funding of the same.

The PRESIDENT mental property of the proper security and funding of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the report be read?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, one word before the report is read. The Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, one word before the report is read. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is not included in the bill reported by the committee. The attorneys for that road appeared early during the hearings the committee were holding, and they did not seem to manifest any great desire for a settlement with the United States.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I desire to give notice that to-morrow at the close of the morning business I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election.

Mr. FRYE. I was saying—
Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand the notice that was given by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. That to-morrow upon the close of the morning business I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election, now upon the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. The report which was made this morning on the case in Washington County, Texas, by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was made by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. I have not had an opportunity to confer with him on this particular point, but it was the understanding that that Senator would call up the resolution reported by him at the earliest convenient day, and I supposed many of the considerations that would apply to the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire so far as regards considerations of a general character would apply also to this resolution, which is the result of an investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of a transaction of the same general character, being what I suppose to be a series of crimes instituted for the sake of preserving the ascendency of the Democratic party in that State and region. If the Senator from New Hampshire brings up his resolution to-morrow morning I shall probably desire to move that that be taken up for action at the same time to save repetition in the argument.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Maine will allow me a word further, I have no objection, of course, to have the resolution which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks of taken up at the same time, or directly after the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election is disposed of.

I also take occasion to suggest that after the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election is disposed of, I shall ask the Senate to take some action upon the resolution submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] on the 20th day of December, 1888, for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the state of suffrage throughout the United States, which I think ought to be disposed of at that time.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hamp-shire, if I may be permitted, that to-morrow, when this subject is laid before the Senate, I shall move to refer the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to the Committee on Privileges and Elections

Mr. DAWES. I desire to give notice that immediately after the morning business to-morrow, or as soon thereafter as I can obtain the consent of the Senate, I shall call up for action the House bill establishing a court for the consideration of Indian depredation claims. It is a bill in which very many Senators are interested, and the commit-tee who have reported it have been pressed to call it up at the earliest time. It will be for the Senate, of course, to decide between that bill and the action suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. It seems to me to be of so much importance that I am justified in asking the Senate to determine between the two measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison], who is not now present, gave notice that to-morrow he would call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill No. 3401 is the regular

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, after hearing the attorneys for the Cen-Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, after hearing the attorneys for the Central Pacific Railroad Company it was entirely apparent to the committee that there was no parallelism between the cases of the two roads; that one, the Union Pacific, was entirely solvent, and could make a settlement with the United States by which the payment of the debt should be made absolutely certain, just as certain at any rate as anything human can be, and not only that, but could secure by a very large increase of security the new promises to be made by that company; and the Union Pacific could do this in fifty years. It was apparent that the Central Pacific Railroad Company could not submit to a settlement which should be demanded within that time of fifty years, nor could it give any such security as the Union Pacific Company could. Therefore the committee determined to proceed from that point forward with the consideration of the Union Pacific alone, and did so, and made a report accordingly, and reported a bill carrying out their views.

At the present session of Congress, about a month since, the question of the Central Pacific Railroad settlement was again raised by Mr. Huntington, the president of that company. A meeting of the committee was called, and he appeared and presented at that time the bill which was offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] as a substitute for this bill, which added to the present bill under consideration some ten or twelve sections providing for a settlement with the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Since that time Mr. Huntington has appeared again, and day before yesterday I received from him another amendment changing considerably the character of the one which the Senator from Oregon offered, and I have called a meeting of the committee for to-morrow morning to consider that matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state right there that the amendment I offered was a House bill that had been introduced in the other House some time ago.

Mr. FRYE. But not considered by a committee,

Mr. MITCHELL. It was not acted upon.

Mr. FRYE. I am not speaking for the committee now. It seems to me that these matters can be settled in separate bills a great deal better than they can by any one bill uniting the two roads. nize that there is an immense difference between the situation of the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific, and that very much more lenity must inevitably be granted to the Central Pacific than to the Union Pacific; that if the Government ever expects to get its debt from the Central Pacific it must give a very long time in which the payments shall be made.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose the chairman of the committee will agree that the condition of affairs with reference to the Central Pacific, so far as the rights of the Government are concerned, is much worse than it was ten years ago, and he will also concede, I have no doubt, that it will be getting worse from day to day the longer the question is put off.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know about that. I think they are in a worse condition to-day than they were ten years ago. Whether they will be still worse ten years from now or not I do not know.

Now I will have the report read. I intended to have read it my Now I will have the report read. I intended to have read it myself, but as a very large number of Senators have taken a recess I will let the Chief Clerk, if he will be kind enough, read it in my stead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. Frye July 31, 1888, to accompany bill S. 3401, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. FRYE July 31, 1888, to accompany bill S. 3401, as follows:

The select committee to which was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting the reports of the commissioners appointed by the President to examine into the affairs of the Pacific railways, with the accompanying reports and documents, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The relations between the Government and the Pacific railways which received aid from the United States have engaged the attention of Congress for many years, and a brief recapitulation of legislative history may make the present position of the question clearer to the Senate.

The original acts of Congress under which the subsidy bonds were issued to the Pacific railways (act of July 1, 1862, secs. 5, 6, U. S. Stat., vol. 12, pp. 492, 493; act of July 1, 1864, sec. 10, U. S. Stat., vol. 13, p. 360) made the grant expressly "upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity," and required no payment before that time except such as should be made by the application of one-half of the compensation for services rendered for the Government by the companies and the annual payment of 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the roads.

This requirement was undoubtedly considered sufficient in the light of the facts then before Congress. According to the report of the Secretary of War made under date of March, 1852, the average cost to the Government for the five years previous of transporting the mails, troops, and munitions of war between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and intermediate points was on an average $7,300,-311, a year. Half this sum would have more than paid the amnual interest on the subsidy loan, leaving the 5 per cent, of net earnings to be applied in extinguishment of the principal debt. The expectations of Congress ware the Atlantic and Pacific constanting the administration of the Unio every year. The phrase "net earnings" in this connection did not mean "net profits," but was used arbitrarily to describe the balance left after deducting certain specified expenses from the gross earnings. Other large expenses, such as the interest on all their indebtedness except their first-mortgage bonds, were not deducted in determining this balance, and the act did not apply to the Kansas Pacific, Central Branch Union Pacific, or Sioux City and Pacific Companies.

Companies.

The Thurman act took effect June 30, 1878. Its framers based their calculations upon the assumption that the fund would increase at the rate of 6 per cent. annually through the compounding of interest, but the reduction in the rate of interest which followed the refunding measures of 1879, and the rise in the price of United States bonds, in which alone the sinking fund could be invested, defeated these expectations, and the result is that the sinking fund today would be almost as large if the money paid in by the companies had remained uninvested and earning no interest.

The premium on bonds called and bonds remaining in the sinking fund December 31, 1887, exceeded the interest received from such bonds by the sum of $715,282.09, as appears by the following statement:

Bonds in sinking fund, at par	$6, 273, 650, 00 7, 816, 273, 07
Premiums	1,542,623.07 827,340.98
Excess premiums	715, 282. 09

If the securities are now sold the loss of premiums, except that which has already occurred on bonds which have been called (about $58,000), will be avoided. If they are held a large loss is inevitable.

The fact that the act would fail to produce the results desired was discovered almost at once, and under date of February 21, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, suggested the importance of amending the act by allowing greater discretion in the investment of the fund. This recommendation was repeated by him on December 8, 1879, in a letter submitting a draught of a joint resolution giving such authority, and again on June 14, 1880. The auditor of railroad accounts, in his report for 1879, made the same recommendation and repeated it in his report for 1880. In 1881 and 1882 the Commissioner of Railroads urged the necessity for such an amendment and argued from the figures in support of his suggestions, going so far, in 1882, as to say:

far, in 1882, as to say:
"The fund has evidently not accomplished the result anticipated, and since April, 1881, may be regarded as having practically failed for want of suitable investment."

amendment and argued from the figures in support of his suggestions, going so far, in 1882, as to say;

"The fund has evidently not accomplished the result anticipated, and since April, 1881, may be regarded as having practically failed for want of suitable investment."

In this last-mentioned report the Commissioner urged the advisability of entirely abandoning the method adopted by the Thurman act, and substituting a system of the method adopted by the Thurman act, and substituting a system of the method adopted by the Thurman act, and substituting a system of the method adopted by the Thurman act, and substituting a system of the method adopted by the Thurman act, and substituting a system of the company to give one hundred interest-bearing bonds for the amount found due July 1, 1833, one bond maturing at the end of each six months. The reasons for the recommendation are given by him at great length. In his reports for 1883 and 1881 he renewed this recommendation, and again supported it by argument.

At the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress it became apparent that some change in the law was necessary, and the House of Representatives passed a bill, reported by a majority of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, amending the Thurman into the sincing fund.

In the Senate a bill was reported by Mr. Garland from the Judiciary Committee, which is mustance provided for the payment of the debt due from the Central Pacific Railroad Company in one hundred and twenty semi-annual installments. At the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress this bill was referred back to the Judiciary Committee and amended so as to embrace all the aided railroads. In substance this bill fixed the sum which, if paid in eash on April 1, 1855, allowing interest at 3 per cent, payable at maturity, one of these bonds to be payable at the end of each six months thereafter. Under this scheme the semi-annual payment gradually increased. This bill was amended so as to make the entire summan payment gradually increased. This bill was a

This security does not include the branch lines nor the valuable terminals at Omaha, Ogden, Kausas City, and elsewhere.

To quote the language of Commissioner Anderson in his statement before the committee:

"The present security of the United States consists, as was stated to you last Saturday, of about 1,420 or 1,430 miles of railroad, beginning some 3 miles west of the Missouri River, and extending on that line (as you will see by the map before you, the upper line of the Union Pacific Railway Company) to a point 5 miles west of Ogden, and supplemented by a line on what was formerly known as the Kansas Pacific, commencing about half a mile west of Kansas City and extending to the point indicated by the cessation of the red line, the red line being the color on that map used to indicate the subsidized portion, and the point where the red line terminates being 333 miles and a fraction from Kansas City. * * *

*1,426 for subsidized mileage is incorrect.
See Report of Commission, page 195. The table there given is incorrect.
† The Omaha bridge bonds are not included here, the 1,430.11 miles not including the mileage of the bridge.
† The report of the minority commissioner variously estimates the value of the security as $102,385,496 and $41,657,500. (See Commissioners' Report, pages 195 and 196.) The engineer appointed by the commission estimates the value of the entire system, including branches, at $150,000,000. (See Commissioners' Report, page 11.) This shows that the larger of the estimates of the minority commissioner must be rejected, as Governor Pattison readily concedes. (See Commissioners' Report, pages 196 to 199, inclusive.)

thing except the obligation of the company to which it can look for a payment of its debt.

"The road I have described measures about 1,400 miles, and, " " according to the statement of the officers of the company, they consider that 1,400 miles of road, with its sidings and station-houses, its equipment and the advantage gained by the integration and adaptation of twenty years of ballasting and growth, and establishment for business purposes, as worth $40,000 a mile, and they state its approximate value at $80,000,000, and that the mortgage debt precedes the lien of the United States and is $33,000,000, the United States has as its present security a statutory equity of $28,000,000."

In short, the subsidized part of the Union Pacific Railroad proper begins west of the terminals at Manasa City and ends in a prairie 394 miles west. The Government lien covers a part of the Irunit, but not the whole, and it covers none comment lien evers a part of the Irunit, but not the whole, and it covers none comment lien evers a part of the Irunit, but not the whole, and it covers none comment lien evers a part of the Irunit, but not the whole, and it covers none comment lien evers a part of the Irunit, but not the whole, and it covers none comment in the statutory lien were held by individuals it is clear that its security would be almost valueless. The inability of such holders, on foreelosure, to control the adjoining connections, or to control the branches, would render it remement has the advantage of unlimited power and could, under a forcelosure of its lien, take and hold so much of the railway as is subject thereto. But for many reasons this is a result which can not be desired by any intelligent legislator. There are to be found advocates of governmental operation of the railway system of the whole country, but we think we may assume that it would way system of the whole, and the substance of carrying passengers and freight in competition with numerous and well-way as the substance of the railway country is consider our committee think that the bill fully protects the interests of the United States.

If this settlement is adopted the following advantages are secured:

First. All controversies between the United States and the companies, such as have occurred under existing laws, are terminated.

Second. All questions as to the investment of the sinking fund are ended, as the United States at once receives this large sum on account of the subsidy debt, and is relieved from all trust obligations to the company.

Third. The United States will receive before the debt matures, in addition to the sinking fund, which at the valuation of November 1, 1887, was $7,734,083, not less than $2,647,500, making a total payment of principal before maturity of $10,381,583, and will also receive interest on the entire debt every six months, the total payment of interest during the same period amounting to $12,255,767.

Fourth. The United States will receive a very large amount of additional security, which insures the ultimate payment of the whole debt.

The following tables will show of what this security consists. The values which appear therein are those given by the officers of the company and coincide with the valuations made by the experts employed by the Pacific Railway Commission to the extent indicated by the references to the commissioners reports. These valuations would make the value of the new security which the United States will receive about $70,000,000.

Mr. Anderson, one of the commissioners, in his statement before the committee, estimated the additional security as worth about $55,000,000, and somewhere between these estimates perhaps lies the truth; but your committee have not considered it necessary to decide which is more nearly correct, as in any event the United States will receive everything that the company has, and whatever the value, nothing more can be had. The United States will have a mortgage on a whole system with all its equipments and property, and there will be no alternative hereafter for the stockholder recover what the company has lost, and that the company alone can bring the necessary suits.

The bill therefore adopts the only possible course when it compels the company, as a condition of settlement, to allow the use of its name, and directs the Attorney-General to bring whatever suits he may think proper to recover anything that belongs to it. He has control of the suits, and the Government is to receive as payment on account whatever may be recovered. In this way alone can the legal obstacle to proceedings be removed, and while your committee do not undertake to say that these suits can be prosecuted successfully, they are satisfied that Congress can go no further than to direct the commencement of legal proceedings, as is done in this bill.

Believing, therefore, that the bill secures the payment of the debts due from the companies to which it relates, and that it makes all the provision possible for the punishment of those who are charged with having illegally enriched themselves at the expense of those companies, they recommend its adoption by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to submit to the chairman of the committee that inasmuch as he has offered and the Senate has adopted a great many amendments to the bill to-day, and it is now almost 4 o'clock, the matter go over with a view of having the bill printed in order that we may know just how it looks now and what it is.

Mr. FRYE. All the amendments are merely formal. They do not require any consideration at all. All but one were rendered necessary by reason of the lapse of time since the report was made.

Mr. DAWES. Just moving it forward one year.
Mr. FRYE. Yes, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, sim-Mr. FRYE. Yes, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, simply moving it forward one year. This bill has been awaiting action for a long while. The committee have been exceedingly patient, it seems to me, to have allowed legislation to go on when this was really a pressing matter. I hope it will not be postponed. I understand that there are Senators who desire to oppose the bill, and there are Senators who have amendments. I think there was one amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] which has been printed. He does not seem to be present now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit the motion I offered some time since to recommit the bill with instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An an act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned, with the accompanying report, No. 1850, first session Fittieth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, recommitted to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the report of the Pacific Railway Commission, with instructions to include in said bill such proposed legislation as in the judgment of such committee is proper, providing for the ascertainment of the amount of the indebtedness to the Government justly payable, due and to become due by the Central Pacific Railway Company as the successor to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, in respect of bonds of the United States heretofore issued to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific Railroad, and for the proper security and funding of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion to recommit with instructions?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I have no disposition to delay action upon any proposition looking to the funding of the Pacific railroad indebtedness, I propose now (inasmuch as the chairman of the committee declines to yield for the purpose of having the bill printed that we might know what it is), to offer some reasons why the motion I have just submitted should prevail. My motion is to recommit the bill to the select committee specially raised by the order of the Senate for the purpose of reporting some legislation looking to a settlement of the Pacific railroad indebtedness, with instructions to incorporate in it provisions for the funding of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Com-

According to the report of the Pacific Railway Commission, and summarized and repeated in the message of the President of the United States to Congress on the 17th of January, 1888, the sum total of this debt, principal and interest, to November 1, 1887, was $140,047,718.58; the principal of the bonds which had been advanced to the companies being $64,023,512. The interest to November 1, 1887, according to the authority just quoted, was $76,024,206.58, while the interest calculated to the maturity of the bonds, some nine years hence, added to the principal, will at that date (1897), that being the average date of maturity of all bonds issued, make the aggregate of the debt then due, principal and interest, less payments heretofore made and which may be hereafter made to that date, $178,884,759.50.

guished from a public debt, or a debt owing by a government, must be garded as of the very utmost importance.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the merits or demerits of the pending bill; that will be done later on. It is my purpose, however, to attract the attention of the Senate to the general situation, and to inaugurate an inquiry as to the propriety and justice under all the existing circumstances and the past history of legislation in reference to this important subject of proceeding to the consideration of the pending bill, which only in part undertakes or professes to deal with this question, and which omits to include within its provisions matters relating to nearly one-half of the whole controversy

In other words, I propose to inquire whether it is not a fact that it is the duty of Congress, if it acts at all, to proceed at once and without any unnecessary delay, and in one piece of legislation, and not by duplicates or triplicates, to consider this whole subject and to provide at the earliest possible moment such legislation as will, in so far as possible under all the existing circumstances, secure to the Government the ultimate payment of this entire debt, together with such reasonable interest as may be proper, all the circumstances considered, to be paid semi-annually to the Government on all deferred payments. What I shall have to say, therefore, at this time shall have a bearing upon this question rather than upon the merits or demerits of the bill reported by the select committee, which only professes to deal with one portion of this great subject.

By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes," the Congress of the United States, once more, after many failures in the past, entered upon the work with an evident determination to accomplish it, of doing two things:

First. To ascertain, after a most rigid investigation, the present indebtedness to the Government of the United States of all railroads that have received aid from the Government in bonds; and,

Second. To enact such legislation in the shape of a funding measure as would in so far as possible, under all the circumstances of the respective cases, secure ultimate payment to the Government of the whole of such indebtedness, including such reasonable interest on all deferred payments as might seem to be reasonable and proper in each individual case, all the circumstances considered.

Never before had Congress manifested such determination and never before in all the many previous attempts made to accomplish this purpose had such unanimity of sentiment and action characterized the proceedings, as it will be remembered that the act just referred to received the vote of every member present of the two Houses of Congress.

This legislation was intended to include within its grasp, and did in plain and unequivocal terms include within its provisions, not merely one or more but all of the Pacific railroads which had previous to that time received aid from the Government in bonds. It did not, however, include any railroad, however much aided in grants of land or otherwise, that did not receive any aid in bonds,

By the first section of that act the President of the United States was By the first section of that act the President of the United States was authorized to appoint three commissioners, and the character of the commissioners whom Congress evidently expected to be appointed was plainly indicated by the fact that by the provisions of such act each should receive compensation at the rate of $750 per month and all necessary traveling expenses and board bills; that they should have a stenographer and the right to fix his compensation; that these commissions are the second commissions of the property of the present and methods. sioners should have the power to examine all books, papers, and methods of all such railroad companies, employ experts, if necessary, and they should at all times be under the immediate direction and control of the President of the United States.

Section 2 of the act prescribed in detail, with much exactness, the duties of such commission. This section reads as follows:

culated to the maturity of the bonds, some nine years hence, added to the principal, will at that date (1897), that being the average date of maturity of all bonds issued, make the aggregate of the debt then due, principal and interest, less payments heretofore made and which may be hereafter made to that date, $178,884,759.50.

Mr. PLATT. Is that by both companies?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is by both companies. That is the amount that will be due when the bonds mature, less payments that have here tofore been made and which would probably be made under existing law.

Against this enormous amount there has been repaid by the companies, according to the authority quoted, down to November 1, 1887, the sum of $30,955,039,61; so that, not counting any payments that have been made—and they can not be very considerable in amount—since November 1, 1887, to the present date, and conceding that no further payments will be made by these companies until 1897, the date of the average maturity of the bonds, when the whole debt, principal and interest, will become due and payable, there would then be due and payable as such interest and principal, according to the Pacific Railway Commission. This section reads as follows:

Szc. 2. That the duty of said commission shall be to examine into the working and financial management of all the railroads that have received aid from the Government in bonds; to ascend such a did remained in the sum of said commission. This section reads as follows:

of any criminal proceeding.

By the third section of the act an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States of $100,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, was made for the purposes of the "investigation provided for in the act."

Section 4 conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury under the direction of the President the power to redeem or otherwise clear off any paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury of the United States whenever in the opinion of the President it might be deemed necessary whenever in the opinion of the President It might be deemed necessary to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of any or all of the several companies upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States in the same property or any part of the same might exist or be then lawfully liable to be enforced, while section 5 of the act, which is the only remaining section, provided for the manner of investment of the sinking funds accumulated in the Treasury under the Thurman act.

In pursuance of this act the commission was appointed and the investigation made, and on the 17th of January, 1888, the President of the United States in a message to Congress of that date transmitted the report of this commission and also the report of the minority commissioner, the three commissioners having been unable to agree as to the manner in which these railroads should be treated respecting their indebtedness to the United States, or to unite upon the plan best cal-culated to secure the payment of such indebtedness. These two re-ports—that of the commission, and of the minority commissioner are to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 51, first session Fiftieth Congress.

These two reports, and the accompanying message of the President, in which sundry suggestions were made to Congress, became the bases of further action by Congress looking to the accomplishment of the great purpose indicated, namely, the ascertainment of the present value of the indebtedness of these companies severally included in this legislation and in these reports, the funding of the same, and the creation of such means as would result in its security and ultimate payment. The initiatory step in this proceeding was taken in the Senate on the 17th day of January, 1888, by the raising of a select committee of this body, composed of five Senators, and which, on January 23, 1888, was increased to seven.

In pursuance of this order of the Senate, the following-named Senators were designated: Messrs. FRYE (chairman), DAWES, HISCOCK, DAVIS, MORGAN, BUTLEE, and HEARST, and to which select committee the message of the President and accompanying reports were com-

This committee, it will be observed, was not raised for the purpose of considering simply the indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, was not raised for the purpose simply of considering the in-debtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and of its branches, but it was raised, as the RECORD shows, for the purpose of considering this whole subject and reporting upon it.

This special committee subsequently entered upon their work, and on the 31st day of July, 1888, to the surprise of many, reported to the Senate a bill with an accompanying report, which bill provided for the ascertainment of the value of the present indebtedness of the Union Pacific and its branches, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company only, but did not include or make any reference to the Central Pacific.

That was omitted entirely. The company representing the company That was omitted entirely. The company representing the company and its branches that is indebted to the Government in a sum nearly equal in amount to that of the company that the committee has dealt with has been silently, for some reason, ignored; and not only that, but seven long months have transpired, over half of a year has gone by, since this select committee made its report with reference to the Union Pacific and its branches, and yet they make no sign whatever in reference to the other great controversy in which the Government of the United States is so largely interested-interested, as I said a moment ago, to an extent much more, if I am correct in my understanding of the case, than is the Government of the United States interested in the companies with which the select committee has seen proper to deal.

Mr. CULLOM. What amount of bonds were originally issued to the two companies

Mr. MITCHELL. About $64,000,000 was the sum total of the bonds issued to both companies. The bonds issued to the Central Pacific were somewhat, not very much, in excess of the bonds issued originally to the Union Pacific—about twenty-seven million and some odd thousand dollars to each company, I believe, as I now remember it.

The exact statement is this:

To Central Pacific. The Western Pacific.	$25, 885, 120 1, 970, 560
Total Central Pacific and Western Pacific	27, 855, 680
Union Pacific proper	27, 236, 512 6, 303, 000 1, 600, 000
	35, 139, 512

So, then, if there were anything in the suggestion made by my friend, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the chairman of the committee, that the circumstances then surrounding the two cases were so different as so require the application of different remedies, then why is it that after having reported a bill seven long months ago, which only dealt with one branch of the case, the committee has not since then, with all this lapse of time, taken up the other branch of the case to which it is claimed a different remedy should be applied, or at least a remedy containing different terms, and report that to the Senate?

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.
Mr. FRYE. I stated that in presenting the case of the Central Pacific in the early days of our hearings, the very manner of presentation indicated to the committee that there was not then a disposition on the part of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to settle.

Mr. MITCHELL. What difference does it make whether the Central Pacific Railroad Company or the managers of the Central Pacific Railroad Company hesitate? Is it not the duty of the Government to make an effort to try to secure that debt?

Mr. FRYE. It makes all the difference in the world from the fact that there is not a dollar of this debt due and payable for ten years yet, and there is no power on the part of Congress to compel the directors of any railroad company to make a settlement now.

Mr. MITCHELL. The same thing can be said of the Union Pacific; and, again, that is begging the whole question, because the Supreme Court of the United States decided several years ago that Congress had the power to deal with this matter now in so far as providing for the creation of a sinking fund, and impressing a lien upon whatever property was in sight.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to add further to what I have said, in justice to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, that in the last month they have shown a disposition and a very great desire to make some settlement and adjustment of this debt with the United States, and that there is now pending before the committee an amended bill which the committee is called to consider to-morrow morning.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all right, Mr. President. That shows some disposition on the part of the committee to take up that which has been omitted by them in the past, and which is a part and parcel of one great controversy in which this Government is interested, and it shows a beginning.

But this whole investigation started in the first place, as I have already said, upon the theory that it was one great controversy, and that there should be a thorough investigation of the whole business. One act of Congress covered the whole business when the commission was appointed with instructions to investigate the whole matter. That commission made a report in which they accompanied what they had to say by way of report with two bills, one looking to the funding and the security and ultimate payment of the debt of the Union Pacific and its branches, and another bill in the same book and as part of the same report suggesting legislation looking to the funding of the debt of the Central Pacific, with security so far as security could be obtained, and its ultimate reports when it became due.

payment when it became due.

Therefore I insist that it is not wise now to have the roads fork at this stage of the game, to proceed with one part of the controversy in each branch of Congress and permit the other part of the controversy to remain untouched, unconsidered, until we find out what the outcome may be of the bill which has been reported.

may be of the bill which has been reported.

Mr. President, the reason assigned a half hour ago by the chairman of the select committee why one part of the controversy should be dealt with and the other not is a reason to my mind why, if any portion of this matter is to be considered first and any portion of it postponed, then it is the indebtedness of the Central Pacific that should have been considered first, because the chairman of the committee has stated, and stated in his report, if I have read it correctly, in substance, that the Union Pacific is a solvent company, that it is able to pay its debts, that there is no particular question about the ability of the Union Pacific to pay the United States on reasonable terms and within a reasonable time the whole debt that it is owing to the Government of the United States, and which will become due in about nine years from now, while upon the other hand it is suggested by the chairman of the committee that the Central Pacific is insolvent, that it is impossible to collect the whole debt perhaps, except on very easy terms, and it must be admitted, and was admitted a few moments ago by the chairman of the committee, that the condition of the Central Pacific's affairs is much worse with respect to the rights of the Government in the premises now than it was ten years ago when the Thurman bill became a law; and it must also be admitted that every day that Congress postpones the consideration of providing some proper measure by which the indebtedness of the Central Pacific can be funded the condition is becoming worse and will continue to grow worse from day to day and from year to year just as it has grown infinitely worse from the passage of the Thurman act down to the present time.

Therefore I say every reason exists why Congress, if it only proposes to take up one part of the controversy, should take up the subject of the Central Pacific indebtedness and not that of the Union Pacific, that is declared to be solvent. If that should wait, the Government would lose nothing.

Now, then, the question arises, why is it, after all the steps indicated by me have been taken—the passage of the act of March 3, 1887, unanimously by Congress, without a dissenting vote in either House, the appointment of the commission, the investigation, the report, the suggestions of the President of the United States, the order of the Senate creating the select committee, the lapse of over six months before submitting any measure whatever—that such committee should then in their report and in the bill submitted by them deal with one road only, the Union Pacific and its two branches, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company and the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and entirely omit from the provisions of the bill all the other Pacific railroads; or rather, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as the successor of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, which was included in every step taken prior to the report of this committee, including the very order of the Senate that breathed the breath of life into it and caused it to live and act?

In 1878, when what is known as the Thurman funding act was under discussion in the Senate, I opposed it with all the power I could command and for reasons which I then gave on this floor; and for the reasons then given, the validity and absolute soundness of which, although not received as such at the time, have been vindicated beyond all question by the history of the operations of that act, I shall now, and always oppose any further legislation, so long as it is possible to obtain something better relating to this all-important subject, which has for its basis the underlying principle upon which the Thurman act is predicated.

But I must not be misunderstood or misrepresented. I was never opposed to some suitable, proper, and effective legislation looking to the funding of the Pacific railroad indebtedness. On the contrary, I was then, am now, and always have been, and always expect to be, earnestly in favor of such legislation. Not only so; I was, when the Thurman funding act was passed, as was a large minority of this Senate, in favor of a certain, specific measure, agreed upon in committee after a most thorough and careful consideration of the whole subject, and which looked to a final and complete settlement of this whole controversy on a basis of mutuality of agreement between the Government and the companies, and the reimbursement, on fair and reasonable terms, of the United States of the vast sums included in the principal and interest of bonds issued to the aided roads.

I refer to these things as bearing upon the propriety of an effort on the part of this honorable committee, selected, as we all agree, from among the ablest men of the Senate, to take in this whole subject and present it as one subject and have it decided as one controversy.

Nor am I unmindful, Mr. President, of the fact that it was quite fashionable eleven years ago, when the Thurman funding bill was under discussion, for certain men, some of them then and now Senators, to denounce all who opposed it and who favored another measure for the settlement of this great question, as working in the interest of corporations and in opposition to the true interests of the United States.

Time, however, sets all things even; the imperishable records of history sometimes come to the rescue and vindicate the integrity and tory sometimes come to the rescue and vindicate the integrity and judgment of men as well. And in reviewing this subject and its history the past few years, we may correctly conclude not only as to the motives, but the relative judgments of men as well. We may not infrequently glean instruction by consulting the records of the past. And I propose at this time, as bearing materially and directly on the subject under discussion, to review the history of the controversy in this Chamber in the spring of 1878, which resulted in the passage of the Thurman bill. I propose to compare the Thurman act and its practical operations with the bill, and its probable operations, had it been adopted in its stead as reported from the Railroad Committee of the Senate, March 11, 1878, of which committee I had the honor at that time to be chairman. This bill was reported from that committee, however, not by myself, although it had my earnest and unqualified support, as well as the earnest and unqualified support of every member of that committee, then composed of the following-named Senators: Henry L. Dawes of Massachusetts, H. M. Teller of Colorado, Alvin Saunders of Nebraska, William Windom of Minnesota. Stanley Matthews of Ohio, S. W. Dorsey of Arkansas, MATT. W. RANSOM of North Carolina, W. H. Barnum of Connecticut, L. Q. C. Lamar of Mississippi, David H. Armstrong of Missouri, and myself as chairman.

That bill was prepared and reported by one whose personal integrity.

That bill was prepared and reported by one whose personal integrity, whose transcendent ability as a jurist, will be questioned by none. I refer to the then Senator Matthews of Ohio, now a distinguished and honored justice of the Supreme Court of the United States from that State. The contest in the Senate at that time was not one of a funding bill or no funding bill. On the contrary, every member of the Senate realized the importance, the imperative necessity of some legislation looking to a funding of the Pacific railroad indebtedness; all without a solitary exception were in favor of one or the other of these two bills. The contest was between the bill reported by Judge Thurman, of the Judiciary Committee, and which finally became the law, and the bill reported from the Committee on Railroads by Senator Matthews. Each member of the Senate supported one or the other of these two bills. The Senators who supported the Matthews bill were then, as it is the custom with many and delight of some in certain quarters now, de-nounced as railroad Senators, laboring in the interest of the railroads and in opposition to the best interests of the Government.

I propose, therefore, to compare these two bills, and, in the calcium light of the history of the past, I shall leave the unprejudiced tax-payer, the honest journalist, the impartial judge, and the fair-minded throughout the realm to judge as to which of these two bills was the better calculated to protect the national Treasury and to secure to the United States, on proper terms and at a proper time, the complete reimbursement of every dollar owing to the United States, or which was to become due from the aided Pacific railroad companies. And that there may be no misunderstanding or mistake in regard to the real character of these two bills, I propose to incorporate in my remarks and place in juxtaposition the Thurman act and the Matthews bill in extenso. I ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE MATTHEWS BILL OR THE RALLEOAD COMMITTEE'S BILL.

A bill to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the Government bonds advanced to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, under and in pursuance of the act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and the acts amending the same or supplemental thereto, and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said bonds.

military, and other purposes." approved July 1, 1882, and the acts amending the same or supplemental thereto, and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said bonds.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That in order to establish a sinking fund for the purpose of liquidating the claims of the Government on account of the bonds advanced under said act of July 1, 1882, and the actsamending the same or supplemental thereto, to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized to carry to the credit of a sinking fund for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Secretary of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and to the eredit of a sinking fund for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and to the eredit of a sinking fund for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the amount due, or which may be due, the said companies, respectively, for the carriage and transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of, war, supplies, and public stores for the Government, under the acts aforesaid, up to and including the 31st day of March, 1878, which, if not amounting at said date to the sum of $1,000,000, shall be made up by the respective companies to that sum each.

Sec. 2. That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said sinking fund, either in lawful money or in any bends or securities of the United States Government, at par, annually, the sum of $1,000,000, shall be made up by the respective companies to that sum each.

Sec. 2. That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of said sinking fund shall on account of the carriage and transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores until said default is removed.

SEC. 3. That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments required from said companies under said act, and the amendments thereto, in relation to the reimbursement to the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations: Provided, however. That said companies shall not in any manner be released from their present liabilities to keep the said railroads and telegraph lines, constructed under the acts of Congress aforesaid, in repair and use, and to transmit dispatches over said telegraph lines, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, upon said railroads for the Government, whenever required to do so by any Department thereof, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation (said rates to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service), the whole amount of which shall be paid by the Government to said companies on the adjustment of the accounts therefor, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the mortgage of the Government created by the fifth section of the act of July 1, 1862, amended by the act of July 2, 1864, shall not be in any way impaired or released by the operations of this act until the whole amount of the principal of said bonds, with the interest thereon paid by the United States as aforesaid, shall be fully paid; but said mortgage shall remain in full force and virtue, and, upon the failure of either of said companies to perform the obligations imposed upon them by this act, said mortgage may also be enforced against such defaulting company for any such default; the Government, however, duly crediting and allowing to the company upon said mortgage all payments which may have been made in part execution of this act, and interest thereon to be credited and added thereto se vided.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect upon its acceptance by said railroad companies, or if accepted by only one of said companies, then as to the company so accepting the same, which acceptance shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury within four months from the passage of this act, and shall show that said company or said companies have agreed to the same at a meeting of stock-holders; and if said companies shall make punctual payment of the sum herein provided for, and perform all the conditions hereof, this act shall be deemed and construed to be a final settlement between the Government and the company or companies so performing the same in reference to all matters relating to a reimbursement to the Government by said companies; but in case of failure so to do Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act as to such company so making default.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Oregon will give way, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield for that purpose.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 5, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 4, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W.

H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and ap-

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. CLARK, for ten days, on account of important business. To Mr. BOWDEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] asks that the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua be reprinted, the supply having been exhausted. If there be no objection, the bill will be reprinted with the House amendments. There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills, resolutions, etc.

COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. PAYSON introduced a bill (H. R. 12496) to establish a court of appeals; which was read a first and second time (the first reading being at length on the demand of Mr. PAYSON), referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. PAYSON also introduced a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. PAYSON called for the reading of the bill, and the Clerk proceeded to read it.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Before the reading of the bill was concluded, Mr. CRISP said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. I am reluctant to interfere with the business of suspension day; but it does not seem that anything is likely to be done under that order. I therefore call up for present consideration the conference report on the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce." This report was presented the other day and has been printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] calls up a conference report. This is a matter of the highest privilege.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When the order of business which is now progressing shall be resumed, will not the reading of the bill introduced by me be again in order?

The SPEAKER. The conference report simply interrupts the pending order of business; that is all. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Heuse recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And the commission is hereby authorized and required to execute and ence the provisions of this act; and, upon the request of the commission, it shall be the duty of any district attorney of the United States to whom the commission may apply to institute in the proper court and to prosecute, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and for the punishment of all violations thereof; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And of soldiers and sailors' orphan homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge."

And the House agree to the same.

That as to amendments numbered 3 and 7 the committee of conference are unable to agree.

unable to agree.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
A. R. ANDERSON,
CHAS. O'NEILL,
Managers on the part of the House,
S. M. CULLOM,
O. H. PLATT,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate,

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the report of the committee of conference and the accompanying explanation were published in the RECORD of last Saturday; and perhaps most of the members of the House are familiar with the effect of the agreement and disagreement on the part of the House and Senate conferees. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this is only a partial agreement. As to the first and second amendments of the House there is an agreement. Those amendments relate simply to the question of publicity of rates. The Senate bill provided that the railroad companies should be required to keep in their offices schedules of rates; the House amendments require that these schedules shall be posted in conspicuous places. This is the only effect of those two amendments of the House, and to those the Senate conferees have agreed.

The third amendment of the House relates to the transportation of petroleum in tank cars and in barrels. As to this amendment the Senate conferees and the House conferees have been unable to agree; and we now report to the House a disagreement.

The fourth amendment is agreed upon by the conference commit-

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. As to the third amendment, does not the difference between the two Houses relate simply to the charge for freight on the barrels in which petroleum is transported?

Mr. CRISP. The House amendment, Mr. Speaker, sought to require, as suggested by my friend from Vermont, that the rates of freight should be the same as to car-load lots, whether carried in barrels or in tank-cars. The language of that amendment, I believe, provides that the barrels shall be transported free as the tank-car is transported.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Did not the Interstate Commerce Commission decide in a case, between the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company and Mr. Rice, that the railroad companies should be entitled to charge freight on the barrels; that this would be just as between the different manufacturers or dealers, some of whom transport the oil in tank-cars and some in barrels?

Mr. CRISP. There were several decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon this question. One of those decisions is, I think, substantially as stated by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. The point is, Mr. Speaker, whether the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon a full hearing of the whole subject as to the relative cost to the railroad companies of transporting oil in tank-cars and in barrels, did not decide it to be just that the railroad company should be permitted to charge full weight, just as they do for sugar or anything else?

Mr. CRISP. I think that was substantially the ruling of the commission under the law as it is.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a point of order here, that the amendment which I understand is being discussed by gentleman from Vermont and the gentleman from Georgia is one that I introduced, and an amendment in which I have much interest; and that I have not been able to hear a word of the discussion owing to the confusion prevailing in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCreary). The Chair will suspend public business until order is restored upon the floor of the House.

Mr. CRISP. I will state, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Vermont and to the gentleman from Ohio that this report is a disagreement as to two of the House amendments, and any question as to the propriety of the House either insisting upon or receding from those amendments would come up after the adoption of the report and when amendments would come up after the adoption of the report, and when a further conference is asked. As I understand the rule, at that time it will be in order, that is when we ask a further conference and after the adoption of the report, for any member of the House to move that the House recede from its disagreement or recede from its amendment, as the case may be, and in that way and at that time the question as to the propriety of any amendment which was before the committee of conference would properly be before the House for such action as the House might see proper to take, and in such shape that members might record their votes one way or the other.

We have agreed upon everything but the oil amendment and one other relating to the jurisdiction of State courts.

The next amendment is number 4, which was an amendment of the House to the Senate bill, in which we provide a penalty upon shippers for false representation of the contents of the package about to be shipped, and to that amendment the Senate have agreed. The fifth amendment-

Mr. BAYNE. Before the gentleman passes from this question I wish to ask if the fourth amendment is the one in reference to shippers making false representations.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir; and the gentleman will find on page 9 of the bill the amendment to which I refer. It relates to false representation of the contents of a package.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. And that has been agreed upon. Mr. CRISP. That has been agreed upon, and so reported by the con-It is in connection with a part of the Senate amendment which seeks to impose a penalty upon the shipper as well as the carrier for any misconduct, and the House enlarged it by providing a penalty upon the shipper for false representation as to the contents of a package

Mr. DALZELL. Its effect is to make two parties enforce the law when only one was required before.

Mr. CRISP. The next amendment is that numbered 5, and to this amendment there is an agreement upon the part of the conferees that the House recede from its position. This is the amendment authorizing and requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe for the use and guidance of common carriers, in making schedules, rates, and charges, one uniform classification; and as to that amendment the report of the committee recommends that the House recede.

I am very frank to say, sir, that I was most anxious, and I believe the House conferees were most anxious, to do something that might aid in obtaining the enforcement of a uniform classification as to schedules and rates on the part of railroads; but I became satisfied, sir, upon such examination as I was able to give, and from the very able argument made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in their last report upon that subject, that it is wiser and better at this time to make port upon that subject, that it is wiser and better at this time to make no change in the present law in that regard. If gentlemen will read the summing up of the commission in that report, I think they will conclude that the wiser thing for us to do now is to wait, for a time at least, and see how nearly the railroad companies of their own accord will respond to the popular demand for uniformity in the classification of their freights. The House, therefore, as well as the Senate conferees, agreed upon that subject, and by the terms of the agreement this amendment is stricken from the bill.

There are two other amendments, numbered 7 and 8. Amendment No. 8 requires the Interstate Commission to enforce the provisions No. 8 requires the Interstate Commission to emote the problem of the act, and upon the request of the commission the Attorney-General of the United States shall put in force the necessary proceedings in the proper court to compel the enforcement of the act. The Senate and the House conferees have agreed upon a provision which is substantially this amendment, but is put in a little different form. Instead of casting this duty upon the Attorney-General, the amendment which is agreed upon and now reported to the House requires the com-mission to call the attention of the district attorney of the particular court having jurisdiction of the particular carrier involved to any vio-lation of the law on the part of the carrier, and makes it the duty of that district attorney to prosecute the carrier for such offense. substantially the amendment of my friend, Mr. ANDERSON.

The other amendment is the seventh. This amendment confers upon the State courts concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts to hear and determine causes arising under the provision of the act. The House conferees, Mr. Speaker, have felt that it would be improper on their part in view of the past history of this subject in this House to recede from that amendment. Ever since the first agitation of the question of the regulation of interstate commerce by Congress, the House of Representatives has, I believe, in every bill or almost every bill that was reported to it, incorporated a provision that the State courts should have concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal courts of all questions arising under the act. In the Forty-ninth Congress the bill passed by the House contained a provision of that character. The Senate bill contained no such provision. The conferees on the part of the two Houses, I state, because I was a member of that conference—

Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question Mr. OATES.

there?

Mr. CRISP. As soon as I have finished this statement

The conferees on the part of the House had a very considerable struggle on this question at that time, and finally the conferees on the part of the House, in order that there might be some legislation, in order that there might be at least an assertion by Congress in the form of a law of the right and power to regulate commerce, receded or recommended to the House that it should recede from that amendment, and that report was adopted at the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress. Now I will answer the question of my friend from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. Is it recommended now that that proviso shall be adopted conferring on the State courts jurisdiction under this act?

Mr. CRISP. The conferees on the part of the House insist upon that amendment adopted by the House.

Mr. OATES. Does not my friend think that that is rather a novel kind of legislation for Congress to undertake to confer jurisdiction on State tribunals?

Mr. CRISP. I do not, Mr. Speaker. I say to my friend from Alabama that this is not a new question. The Congress of the United States has conferred upon State courts authority to hear and to determine questions arising under the postal laws; to hear and determine suits arising against the national banks incorporated by the United States; to hear and determine questions in which-

Mr. OATES. Is not my friend mistaken respecting the right to bring suit against national banks in State courts?

Mr. CRISP. I think not, sir. I think if my friend will examine the question he will find the State courts have that jurisdiction expressly given by act of Congress, which has been reviewed and cited in the Supreme Court, and that the Supreme Court has given as a reason why the State court-

Mr. OATES. The act of Congress gives the same jurisdiction to the Federal courts as the State courts in all litigation to which national banks are a party; but in the Forty-eighth Congress that was amended so that the national banks may not go into the Federal courts except in such cases as State banks and State corporations can. That amendment was made upon the motion of the gentleman's colleague, Mr. Hammond,

Mr. CRISP. I think, Mr. Speaker, that a reference to the authorities which my friend, Mr. Anderson, of Iowa, has, but which I have not before me, will satisfy my friend from Alabama that this is not a novel proposition; and so far as I am concerned, if it was I am in favor of giving the citizens the right to sue and be sued in a tribunal of the vicinage where he lives, the right that he has at common law.

Mr. OATES. Is it not a fact that has been decided by the Supreme Court, that when Congress attempts to confer jurisdiction upon a State tribunal State courts may exercise that jurisdiction or not as they

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it is quite possible and highly probable that it is not in the power of Congress by an act to require a State court to do a particular thing; but it is also quite possible and highly probable that where Congress says a State court may exercise jurisdiction, and the exercise thereof would be a great convenience to the people, that the Legislature of any State in the Union will confer the power and will make it the duty of the State court to exercise the jurisdiction. It certainly is not a novel proposition that a person may go into a State court to obtain a right secured to him by a Federal statute. The foreigner who comes to this country for a home obtains the right of citizenship in the State court; he becomes a citizen by the judgment of a State court, and he is enabled to do this because an act of Congress says he may go there and obtain the right of citizenship.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRISP.

Mr. CRISP. With pleasure. Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. If the State courts assume jurisdiction hereafter under this United States statute in all the different States of this country, I would ask my friend if he thinks that is likely to secure uniformity of interpretation and administration of the law?

Mr. CRISP. Why, Mr. Speaker, every one of the corporations affected by the interstate-commerce act, as to very many causes of action which naturally arise in the business of a railroad, are amenable to the State courts where the railroad runs. If my friend or myself should unfortunately be injured in a railroad accident, we are not driven to a United States court for redress.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. That question does not arise under the interstate-commerce law; that is by common law.

Mr. CRISP. The point I am trying to make is this: As to a great many matters the carrier is governed and controlled by the State law and the construction of the State courts, and no trouble arises from diversity of construction. Has it ever occurred to gentlemen who object to this provision that the effect of this law as it now stands is really to deprive the citizen of a forum that is given him at common law and force him to one that the statute directs him to?

Why, gentlemen at all familiar with the interstate-commerce act know that it forbids the common carriers to do scarcely anything which was not forbidden by the common law. It is a statutory enactment of the provisions of the common law.

Now, in every one of these cases before the passage of this law the citizen had the right to go into the State courts to obtain redress, so that the effect of this law conferring jurisdiction upon the United States courts alone to hear and determine these cases is really to take away from the citizen a right which existed at the common law.

Mr. ROWELL. Does the gentleman intend to say that any common-law right of the citizen to go into court was taken away by the interstate-commerce act?

Mr. CRISP. Well, perhaps that was not correctly stated.
Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I think not.
Mr. CRISP. What I mean to say is that before the enactment of this law the citizen had the right to go into court to seek an enforcement of the common law; now, in order to enable the citizen more easily to obtain redress, we have put into statutory form what was before the common law, and in doing so we have said to the citizen, "You shall not go into any but the United States courts under this act to have the law enforced."

Mr. ROWELL. Before the enactment of this law could you go into common-law court to enforce your right in relation to a matter of interstate commerce?

Mr. CRISP. Perhaps you could in the absence of any legislation by Congress on the subject. I am not, however, positive about that.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Would not this be the result of this legislation? In the State of New York, for example, a question arises as to the construction of a United States statute and the State court there holds one way. The State court of Georgia in a similar case holds another way, and the State court of Iowa holds another way. Do you not, therefore, introduce an element of confusion into the construction of a United States statute if you give jurisdiction to the State

Mr. CRISP. Of course the gentleman well understands that where a Federal statute is at issue you can always reach the court which finally determines the proper construction of such statutes. You can reach that court from the supreme court of a State wherever there is a question of Federal law involved. I think, therefore, there is nothing in that point. If you get uniformity in the Federal courts, why can not you get the same uniformity in the State courts when you have a final review by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES Granting the power of Congress to confer jurisdiction on the State courts (which of course they can exercise or not as they see proper), it you should extend the principle and, in all cases where Congress has jurisdiction, confer upon the State courts jurisdiction to adjudge causes under any and all laws that may be passed by Congress, would not that be bad policy, and would it not lead to inextricable con-

Mr. CRISP. I think that no policy can be called bad which enables the citizen conveniently to apply to the courts for redress. that in some of the States it is quite easy to apply to a United States court for redress, but there are States in this Union where the citizen must go, and must take his witnesses, two or three hundred miles to a Federal court in order to have his cause tried. Now, I have always be-lieved that the most certain way to secure from individuals and corpo-rations a strict compliance with law is to put it in the power of the persons who are injured by their failure to comply with the law to reach, with as little trouble and expense as possible, a court which can compel obedience. I have always believed, and I believe the rule prevails in every State in this Union—I have always believed in the policy of having a court within easy access so that the citizen without great expense or great trouble may have an opportunity to have his cause heard. To say to a man that he must go two or three hundred miles with his witnesses to reach a court where his case may be tried amounts in many instances to an absolute denial of justice. Upon that principle this House has always acted when dealing with this question. The House has always, in such statutes, inserted a provision that the State courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts. There is no reason, I would say to my friend, why the State courts should not have this jurisdiction. The same jurors are to be found in the one court as in the other, and it is no reflection upon the judicial integrity or capacity of the judges of the United States court to say that the judges of the State courts are in all respects their peers.

Why should there be any fear or dread that the tribunals in the States, which pass upon questions involving the life, the liberty, and States, which pass upon questions involving the life, the liberty, and the property of the citizen, will do injustice when it comes to a matter between an individual and a corporation? I confess, sir, I have no sympathy with that fear. I have no anxiety on that score. Justice is meted out there as it is elsewhere. Taking the great body of judges throughout this whole country, State and Federal, I have no sort of doubt that they are men of exalted character and great learning, and either in the State or the Federal courts the citizen and the corporation can confidently expect to obtain justice, and no more than that should be asked by any one.

I have said more on this point just now than I expected to say. We have a brief which, at the proper time, will be furnished, and which may relieve the minds of those gentlemen who seem to think that this is a novel proceeding.

We have disagreed as to this amendment. If the House should adopt this conference report the motion will then be made that the House insist upon this amendment and ask a further conference; and at that time any member who wishes to take the sense of the House on either of these two propositions can do so by simply moving-a motion that has precedence of the other-that the House recede from this or that amendment. At that stage of the case the question will be directly before the House; it will be debatable, and the House can then intelligently express its opinion as to either of these amendments. stage the House must either adopt or reject the report. The adoption of the report will not in any way preclude the House from taking a vote as to whether it will or will not insist upon either of these two amendments. The adoption of the report means this and only this: that the House approves and agrees to the action of the conference committee so far as the conferees have agreed with each other. As to those matters the adoption of this report is a ratification and adoption on the part of the House of the action of the conferees. As to these two matters about which no agreement has been had, the time to test the sense of the House will be after the adoption of this report. the motion which will immediately follow the adoption of the report is made, that the House further insist and ask a conference, then any gentleman can move to recede, and in that way the sense of the House

If no gentleman desires to ask any further question in relation to this report, I would be glad to have it adopted; and then the question can be raised, if any member desires to raise it, on the two amendments upon which there has not been an agreement.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question-whether this amendment is among those which have been recommended to Congress by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CRISP. It is not.
Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question with reference to the provision in this bill which requires the shipper to make classification-to designate when he offers his goods to the carrier for shipment the class to which they belong.

Mr. CRISP. What page of the bill is that?
Mr. BAYNE. Page 9.
Mr. CRISP. What line?
Mr. BAYNE. The House amendment, I believe, is in line 50.

Mr. BAYNE. The House amendment, I believe, is in line 50. Mr. CRISP. That is not the House amendment; that is the Senate bill; we have inserted the italicized words; that is all.

Mr. BAYNE. The proposition embraced in that paragraph is the Senate proposition, I understand.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir; that is the bill as passed in the Senate and agreed to in the House, with the amendment inserted in italics. The other words are not in conference at all; they have been agreed to by both Houses

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman wherein the provision of this paragraph on page 9 differs from the existing interstate-commerce act?

Mr. CRISP. This amendment, I will state to the gentleman, was recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and seeks to extend to the shipper, as I understand, in cases of misrepresentation, penalties corresponding with those which the present law extends to the carrier.

Mr. DALZELL. The object was to prevent collusive arrangements between the agents of the railroad company and shippers whereby dis-crimination might be made to the advantage of some shippers as against

Mr. CRISP. In the mind of some of us there was an apprehension that the insertion of that provision might make it somewhat more diffi-cult to obtain knowledge of violations of law. Still the House agreed to that amendment; and we have not considered that matter at all in the conference.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to say a word or two on this question.

Mr. CRISP. How much time does the gentleman desire?
Mr. BAYNE. I think I can say all I wish to say in five or six min-

Mr. CRISP. I yield the gentleman that time.
Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, in the regulation of interstate commerce by Congress we began with a law which I very strongly and heartily favored-a law which was intended to reach the railroad corporations of the country and prevent discrimination against shippers.

We have in the course of a short time reached a stage when we propose to regulate the shippers of the country. This provision, on page 9 of the original Senate bill, makes it a penal offense with $5,000 fine and imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding two years for any person, any shipper or consignor of goods to willfully by false billing, false weighing, false report of contents of a package, or false report of weight or by any other device put goods into the hands of a common

It attaches that penalty outside of the original intention of the interstate-commerce law altogether. This proposition is not in the interest of the shippers of the country. It is a scheme in the interest of the railroad corporations. Why should not the shippers be permitted to make their own contracts with the carriers? This measure will affect the carriage of large amounts of freight. If it becomes the law, the corporations will classify freight, and upon particular classes they will put higher tariff, and upon other classes a lower tariff. They will require the shipper to discriminate when he brings his packages in for shipment as to what classes those packages come under, and they will charge him according to the classes to which they belong, whereas now the shipper can put his freight into such class as he may choose, only he shall take his own measure of compensation in case of loss, unless he puts it too high. In no court could he recover more, because that was his own valuation of his property when presented for shipment. But if this bill becomes a law there will be a classification made of the freight, and a particular quality or class of freight will be required to pay so much, and an inferior quality or class so much less, and a still inferior quality less still, and the shipper will be compelled to state to the railroad corporation, under penalty of a fine of $5,000 and an imprisonment not exceeding two years, exactly to what class of freight the package which he presents for shipment belongs. I think if this becomes the law it will complicate the shipment of freight all over the country, and I can conceive of no better method of rendering the interstate-commerce law odious than by the adoption of the propositions contained in this bill.

The scheme was never suggested by the shippers of the country. came from the common carriers. It is they who want that embodied in the law as a part of the interstate-commerce act. I think this House should hesitate, and especially hesitate before it has taken testimony of the shippers as to the effect of that provision on their line of business. I do not know whether the Committee on Commerce has taken any such testimony or not.

Mr. CRISP. No. Mr. BAYNE. W Mr. BAYNE. Well, I will say, Mr. Speaker, there are bitter com-plaints against this on the part of shippers, and they do say it will interfere largely with their business in transporting their freight from one State to another. I hope this measure will be put in such shape these persons may be heard from in order that we may arrive at such conclusion as that this will not return to plague us, as in my judgment it certainly will unless it is modified before it becomes a part of existing law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the language to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers is not a part of the House amendment. whole bill, the gentleman understands, is one which originated in the Senate as an amendment to the existing interstate-commerce law. The House amended this bill, the Senate disagreed to the House amendments, and the conference report deals only with those matters that are in issue between the Houses. The portion of the bill to which the gentleman refers has been agreed to by both Houses.

A part of the provision to which the gentleman has referred is the language of the original act.

Mr. ADAMS. The original Senate bill.

Mr. CRISP. The original bill now existing law. The change or addition made by the Senate bill is to extend to the shipper for false representations or deceitful practices the penalties that are now imposed upon the carrier under existing law.

The argument for it, and I am frank to say that I did not like the provision very much, but the argument for it is this, that here you put a penalty upon the railroad company for violating certain provisions of the law, and perhaps they might violate it through ignorance, being misled by the false representation of the shipper. The argument was that inasmuch as you compelled the railroad company to equality and uniformity in their rates you should give them the benefit of requiring the shipper to tell them honestly what it was he was shipping. It was not conceived that would be any hardship upon the shipper. I take it for granted that the case cited by my friend from Pennsylvania, while I know it is practiced generally, is hardly fair dealing. If the carrier puts in a certain classification one article and charges a certain rate of freight for it, and puts another article in another classification and charges a different rate of freight for that, it is hardly fair either to the railroad company or to the public to allow the shipper by falsely representing the contents of a package toget the lower rates of freight which are fixed by the carrier for another kind of freight.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman will permit me just there, I want glass puts in a box 100 feet of window-glass, say worth $2.50 or $3 a box, whatever it may be, and puts into another box, of identically the same size and the same weight, a quantity of glass worth $20. Now, he is willing to bill them both as common window-glass at the value of $3 a box. The railroad company takes the freight, and in the course of the shipment an accident happens by the preligence of the course. of the shipment an accident happens by the negligence of the corporation, which becomes responsible for the full value of the goods shipped, and is liable for any damage to the shipper for the value of the shipment placed upon it by the shipper. He is willing, in view of the reduced rate at which he ships his merchandise, to take the $2.50 or $3 for the box of glass, being himself willing to run the risk of accident because of the reduced rate at which he gets his freight.

Mr. CRISP. But how does that affect the other gentleman in Pittsburgh who is not willing to ship on those terms, but who is willing to ship his goods in the classification to which they properly belong, and to pay the freight on them which that classification calls for?

Mr. BAYNE. Why, he can do that now. There is nothing in this provision or in the law to prevent it, and the shipper can put such value upon his goods as he chooses and hold the railroad company responsible for the loss in case of negligence. He can value his glass at $20 per box if he chooses, or at $3 per box, and ship it at that rate and hold the company responsible at the rate shipped. It is a matter of no consequence to the railroad company if he is willing to ship his goods at that rate, because the weight is the same, the compensation is the same, and the railroad company is only liable for the lower value fixed upon the goods. But now to require the shipper to declare to what class his goods shall belong is an invasion of the rights of the shipper and not in accordance with the original intent of the interstate law

Mr. CLARDY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that feature is not in dispute now.

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly it is. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If what you argue should be done, does it not permit the dishonest man to classify his goods and get them carried at a third or a quarter or a half of what the honest man who classifies his goods at their proper value is compelled to pay?

Mr. BAYNE. No, I think not; but when you make this law in this form I believe that will be the effect of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But I mean now, under the present circumstances, does not that follow?

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; not necessarily.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. And that is precisely what this provision is intended to prevent, so that the honest man may not be forced to pay more than the dishonest man for the same service.

Mr. BAYNE. But you are quite mistaken, I think, in that. The effect of this provision is just the reverse.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I think the House understands this question now. The gentleman from Pennsylvania bases his whole argument upon this idea—and, of course, I see the force of the position he assumes—that if the shipper is willing to accept, in case of loss, the value of the cheaper article, he ought to be allowed to ship at the rate established by the transportation company for the cheaper article.

Mr. BAYNE. Provided he is willing to take the same pay in case of loss or damage.

Mr. CRISP. That is precisely what I have said—that if the shipper is willing to accept, in case of loss, the value of the inferior article, then the carrier ought to carry the superior article at the same rate as the inferior.

Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. CRISP. And that is absolutely ignoring the great object had in view by the passage of this law.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. CRISP. It was just such questions between particular shippers and the railroad companies that created the demand for the law, a demand for uniformity and equality in classifications, and a demand that no man should have an undue advantage over the other in such shipments. But the gentleman contends that if the shipper is willing to take the risk of loss and accept the reduced price, he may ship at the same rate as if he was shipping a low-priced commodity.

Mr. BAYNE. Permit me just there to illustrate my idea. It is this:
If you take a 2-foot square box and fill it with glass weighing 50 pounds, and worth $20, and then take a box of the same size filled with common glass weighing also 50 pounds, and worth but $3, and the shipper is willing to take his compensation at the inferior rate in the event of loss, if permitted to ship the better grade at the lower rate, then you have secured uniformity if the carrier will take that freight at the same rate as the lower grade of freight. But if you undertake to graduate the rate of freight according to the value placed upon the article by the shipper, then you have a complication which enters into the matter, you have a variable rate, and Congress is taking steps to do that in the interest of the carriers, willingly but not knowingly, that makes the interstate-commerce law odious.

Mr. CRISP. I know that the value of the article must more or less enter into the price of transportation, because the question of loss enters into it. They may lose the article and have to pay for it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. That is not in issue.

Mr. BAYNE. It is in issue. I am going to move to non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. The two Houses have agreed to that.
Mr. DALZELL. Both Houses have agreed to that.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman has read the report and the bill he will see that its practical effect is to put a penalty upon the shipper for false representation as to the contents of the package. It positively forbids anything of that sort, and gives the common carrier the opportunity to know what he is carrying.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This was in the Senate bill, and we have passed

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no; it was not in the Senate bill, and we have not agreed to it yet. Mr. CRISP. The italicized words are in conference. These italicized words represent the points of difference. That is all there is in

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit one sugges-

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir.
Mr. ADAMS. We have been arguing about this on the merits; and I am inclined to think that my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is right, and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is wrong. This matter is no longer in dispute between the two Houses. makes a proposition to amend section 10 which you have not agreed to, and therefore that proposition is still in dispute between the Houses. The differences there are now on a certain line, and everything else excepting that has been agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman did not get the idea I wanted to convey. I do not mean to say that it is not in the power of the conferees, but say that as the Senate have got what it wanted, and the House got what it wanted in that language, the conferees did not consider it an issue-that there is no difference between the two Houses on that question.

Mr. ADAMS. But there is a parliamentary motion to strike this out. Mr. CRISP. I have no question about that. But whether there is a parliamentary way or not there is a way in which the matter could be changed or altered. You know, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes conference committees have made entirely new bills. But what I meant But what I meant to say was that by a vote in each of the Houses this language has been approved, except that italicized. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a vote upon this report. As to the language referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I should understand the adoption of this report as a further instruction that the House approves it as it stands; and I am frank to say that if that question is raised the matter should be determined before the adoption of the report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The question I desire to ask is whether that is the item in reference to the transportation of oil and turpentine in tanks? Mr. CRISP. There is a disagreement as to this

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is no issue now as to that?

Mr. CRISP. None whatever. The question is as to agreeing to this report. We ask that the House agree to this and ask for a further conference on these two points.

Mr. BUCHANAN. You simply report action upon what you have agreed to and ask for a continuance of the conference as to the others.

Mr. CRISP. Yes. We merely report what has been done—the differences as to which we have agreed, and the two to which we continue to disagree. That is as far as the report goes. If this report shall be adopted, then I shall move that the House further insist upon these two amendments and ask for a further conference. Then it will be in order for the House to recede.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In view of that statement, which I had supposed the gentleman would make, I would ask whether that motion will be made in any other manner except as a pro forma motion?

Mr. CRISP. I am very frank to say that I would be very glad if the House would consider these two propositions.

Mr. BUCHANAN. On their merits.

Mr. CRISP. I believe that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], one of the conferees on the part of the House, is going to move that the House recede.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I supposed it would come with more propriety from me, because I am that one of the conferees on the part of the House who disagreed with the other members of the conference as to this matter.

Mr. CRISP. I should be glad to get a vote upon this report. How much time have I left? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would like simply to state to the House what has been stated by the gentleman from Georgia, that these conferees are attempting to come to an agreement; that they have agreed in many respects, and I presume the proposition would be between the two Houses that there shall be an agreement on the points which have been agreed upon by the conferees, and that in another conference we may come to an agreement upon certain points in the bill which are in conference now.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, of course my idea was just this: The conferees are divided on the part of the House; two of us favor these amendments, one is opposed to them; but I supposed the gentleman would test the sense of the House, which is his right to do in a parliamentary way, so that we might know when we get back into conference again whether you want us to agree or disagree to these amendments.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The only idea is this: That the conferees, when they are appointed again, shall go into conference; they may come to an agreement; or that gentlemen may move to recede or not to recede just now.

Mr. CRISP. That of course rests entirely with the gentleman himself, or with any other member of the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Any member of the House can make that motion, but it appears to me that we have not reached the stage when it is proper to move to recede or not to recede.

Mr. BAYNE. I want concurrence. I hope this re

I want concurrence. I hope this report will be voted down

Mr. CRISP. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on agreeing to the conference report; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAYNE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 123, noes 4.

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. CLARDY. I move that the House insist on the remaining amendments and ask a further conference.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, can not those recommendations be separated? I should like a separate vote on the one relating to the State

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A separate vote can be demanded on the amendment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] moves that the House insist upon its disagreement and ask for a conference on the first amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We shall have to ascertain which amendment comes first.

Mr. CRISP. Number 3, on page 7 of the printed bill.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I would like to have the chairman of the committee state precisely the question involved in that amendment, so that members can understand it fully.

Mr. CRISP. Nothaving expected to call this up, I have not here the decision of the Interest of Commission is relation to the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to the matter of the transportation of oil.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the amendment the proviso on page 7? My copy has not the italicized words, and the copies with the italicized words appear to be exhausted.

Mr. CRISP. That is it; number 3, on page 7.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I asked the chairman of the committee that question because it seems to me that the text of this proposed amendment does not present the question, or rather that it is calculated to mislead as to what is the question before the House, and if the chairman will explain how the question arises, as I understand it was explained by the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of Rice against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, members can then understand precisely what bearing this amendment has.

Mr. CRISP. The language is very plain. The gentleman has it before him. That is the amendment adopted by the House. tive which actuated the House or the mover of the amendment the gentleman can judge of as well as I can.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Yes.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Provided, however, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry refined oils and other petroleum products, cotton-seed oil, and turpentine for any shipper, in tank or cylinder cars, who shall own, lease, or control the same in any manner, except upon the condition that said carrier shall charge the same rate for the transportation of said products in wooden packages or barrels, in car-load lots, as in said tank or cylinder cars, the said tank and cylinder and said wooden packages and barrels being carried free in each case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], which is that the House insist upon its amendment and ask for a further conference.

Mr. CRISP. I ought, perhaps, to state to the House that the House conferees have not insisted upon adhering to this amendment in exactly the form in which it now is. The amendment was adopted by the House perhaps without giving so much consideration to the form of it as ought to have been given. Under its terms the amendment fails, I think, to accomplish what the House wanted to accomplish; and the conferees on the part of the House have suggested that, if the Senate would agree to it, line 144 should be stricken out entirely and that the word "or" should be substituted for the word "and" in line 143, so as to make the amendment do what we understand the House intended it to do, namely, fix the same rates for the transportation of petroleum in barrels in car-load lots as in tank-cars. I have no wish about the matter myself.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman believe that the House at to give credit to a shipper of oil or turpentine in cars for the use of those cars, the shipper owning the cars?

Mr. CRISP. As to that, of course I can have no better information upon which to form an opinion than the gentleman from New Jersey

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the question because you spoke of what the conferees understood the House to mean.

Mr. CRISP. Yes. Mr. BUCHANAN. And, since the minds of the conferees have been to some extent opened to the House, permit this other question: Do the conferees think it proper to insist upon legislation which would deprive the owner of cars, he being also the shipper of oil, of the benefit of the ownership of those cars?

Mr. CRISP. I am trying to say that so far as I am concerned I would like to divorce, so to speak, the business of the shipper from that of the carrier. I would like to have the law in such a shape that the carrier must furnish everything upon which the material transported is carried; that for the transaction of his own business, the transportation of such freight as the country through which he runs may offer, the carrier should furnish whatever vehicles may be necessary, so as to do away with the idea of favors to any shipper.

The gentleman will see at once how this demand for legislation, if there be a demand, has arisen. Here may be two refineries upon the line of the same road; one of them has sufficient means to carry on the oil business proper; the other has sufficient means to carry on the oil business and also a part of the business of a railroad; that is, is able to buy cars, cars which can be used only on a railroad, cars for which there is no use except as vehicles for railroad transportation. Now, this demand, if it exists, has arisen from this state of facts, that the shipper who owns the cars gets reduced rates-

Mr. BUCHANAN. But in consideration of furnishing the cars.
Mr. CRISP. Exactly. I say there is where the trouble has arisen. It has arisen from the fact that one shipper, by reason of his larger means, is enabled to have the use of a public highway on more favorable conditions than a man who has not so large means.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But that runs through all business.
Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. The shipper owning cars does not have the free use of those cars; he pays for them.
Mr. CRISP. But as gentlemen understand, the common-law rule is that the common carrier must transport everybody on equal terms; he can not give in one case facilities of transportation which he withholds in another; he must give equal transportation to all for the same money.

Now, I do not want gentlemen to understand that I am specially wedded to this amendment. It was not reported by the Commerce Committee; it is an amendment put on by the House. I merely want in the conference to represent the wishes of the House; but I am stating what I understand to be the occasion of the demand for such legislation. It arises, I say, from the fact that here is one man who is partly a refiner and partly a carrier—

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say to the gentleman that I have no more sympathy than he has with an attempt to secure lower rates because of an alleged ownership of cars. I am just as much in favor of equal rates to all under equal circumstances as the gentleman himself can be. But I am trying to ascertain whether the conferees are, using the expression of the gentleman, "wedded" to this particular amendment, or whether they would take into consideration the propriety of framing an amendment which would secure equal rates under equal conditions.

I am very sure, speaking for myself, that they would. Mr. BUCHANAN. This certainly does not secure equal rates under equal conditions, or anything like that.

Mr. CRISP. There is where the trouble has arisen. the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission—the last decision on this subject, I think-the companies must charge the same by the hundred pounds for oil in barrels, in car-load lots, as they charge for oil in tank-cars, and they may allow the owner of the car a reasonable price for the use of his car.

Mr. ROWELL. Is not that a good rule—an honest rule?

Mr. CRISP. Here is the point which is made: Under that decision the shipper in barrels is paying freight by the hundred pounds for his barrels, while the shipper in tank-cars, which it is claimed are but another form of barrel, is paying nothing for the weight of the tank-

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. But he has paid for the car.

Mr. CRISP. The practical effect of this, according to the evidence, is that, for instance, from here to Atlanta, Ga., there is probably 20 or 30 cents difference on a barrel of oil, enough to give the shipper in the tank-car the command of the market.

A MEMBER. And to drive the others Mr. CRISP. To drive the others out. And to drive the others out.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. CRISP. Certainly.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I misunderstand this case, if the statement of my associate on the Committee on Commerce is correct. any time intended to enact a law under which it would be impossible | persons were before the committee urging this amendment, which was not adopted by our committee, but was afterwards inserted by the House, I asked this question: Is a tank-car with the tank on it any heavier than a box-car into which you load your barrels would be without the barrels? It was admitted that perhaps it was not. Therefore this amendment is compelling you to carry the barrels in the tank-car with the addition of not being dearer than the box-car without the barrels.

There is another question which enters into it, and that is, the danger of carrying oil in barrels is immense. In case of fire or collision or accident the danger is fearful. The great safety of carrying in tank-cars is a great consideration. This compels us to pay higher rate for the carriage of oil in tank-cars and for its carriage in barrels.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And therefore take advantage of the equitable principles of the interstate-commerce act for purely private purposes.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is as I understand it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The question I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, is this: Why is this amendment made applicable to the transportation of petroleum or other oil? Why is it not made also applicable to the petroleum or other oil? Why is it not made also applicable to the Pullman Company?

Mr. CRISP. I will state that this amendment is not from the Committee on Commerce of the House. This amendment was adopted in the House on motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. By whom? Mr. CRISP. On motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gros-VENOR]. This amendment, the House will understand, was never reported by the Committee on Commerce, but put in by the House on motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOB].

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. But what action was recommended by the committee in reference to it?

Mr. CRISP. I asked the House or the Committee of the Whole, when the amendment was offered, not to adopt it.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I beg the House to recede from that amendment.

Mr. CRISP. This is the amendment offered by the gentleman from

Mr. CRISP. This is the Children of the floor ever since this amendment was up, and have failed to do so.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Ohio many control who moved the amendment.

[Mr. GROSVENOR], who moved the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would be glad to get a word in here, but there have been so many gentlemen occupying the floor so far I have not had a chance.

Mr. CRISP. I am glad to see the gentleman from Ohio on the floor. Mr. GROSVENOR. Ever since this conference began I have tried to get the floor.

Mr. CRISP. I did not see the gentleman and supposed he was re-serving himself on this question. How much time does the gentleman

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want more than ten minutes.
Mr. CRISP. I will yield that much time to the gentleman from

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised there should be a question about adhering to the amendment proposed by the House in Committee of the Whole at the time of the consideration of this bill. The bill would never have passed the House of Representatives if this amendment had not gone into it. The RECORD will show I served that notice at the time, and that provision met the objection I had to the interstate-commerce bill at the time it was on its passage. I pointed out to the House of Representatives they had put a bulwark of strength to the Standard Oil Company in the provision of the interstate-commerce law. I knew where that provision came from. I knew who its author was. I knew the effect it was expected to have, and I have lived to see the effect it did have.

The language of the act under substantially similar circumstances and conditions had the effect to exclude from the operations of the general provisions of the law and tariff of rates the shippers in a tank-car. The conditions were different, and therefore it was rates were made by the barrel in tank-cars-as in the case cited of Atlanta at rates that drove out of the Atlanta market every man who could not ship a tankcar. So that throughout the length and breadth of the country there is no man who can sell a gallon of oil who does not ship it to market in a tank-car. I have the proof of this in the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of George Rice against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. They procured this to be excepted out of the law, and in barrels at one rate and in tank-cars at another rate. The result is that the interstate-commerce law, which was made for the purpose of equality of rates, has destroyed this industry in the hands of every man in the United States except the Standard

That is the fact; it is not denied; and when Mr. Rice went into the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the argument which I hold in my hand, of Mr. Gowan, formerly president of one of these great railroad lines, the Interstate Commerce Commission made a judgment, conferring a partial relief only, and then specially requested Congress to wipe out the discrimination by legislation.

This amendment was brought here, framed at the suggestion and as a result of the Interstate Commerce Commission using this language in closing their decision upon the Rice case, that-

This matter is a matter which requires the intervention of the legislative department of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the language of the amendment is immaterial: that may be changed, so that it meets the idea suggested, and I recognize the propriety of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the committee. It is not important that this language should be adhered to. If the House will only stand by the amendment and send it back to the conference committee, I hope and that that something will some of it which will give relief in the direct that trust that something will come of it which will give relief in the direction indicated. I have no feeling about the matter myself, but I saw, or thought I saw, exactly where that language in the interstate-commerce bill was going to strike the interest of which I am speaking, and the facts developed by the operation of the law have been exactly as I supposed.

I have in my hand a table of the rates charged to-day by the tankcar and by the barrel, in car-loads, on oil, which table shows a dis-tinction or discrimination which can not be reached under the law, and which amounts to an absolute destruction of the business of the men, excepting those who are willing and able to ship in tank-cars. Further than that, I have here a statement showing that where certain individuals have been able to raise the money to buy a few tankcars they have not been allowed to do so, and that the monopoly has extended itself beyond the mere shipment of oil and even to the control of the manufacture of the tank-cars. Fortified behind this law, they have extended their monopoly in that way; and it seems to me that the argument of the gentleman from Georgia that it has not been fully considered in the House justifies me in asking this committee of conference to further consider it, and to come back with a further report upon a question of so much importance.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, as he is a member of this conference?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not a member of it.
Mr. CANNON. I thought the gentleman was, but I would like to ask a question for information to find out what is my own duty in the matter. I do not know of the facts which have been stated here. Does the gentleman from Ohio understand that oil can be shipped cheaper in fact in tank-cars than in barrels?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman mean whether the rates of freight are less:

Mr. CANNON. I mean can the work be done for less in that way? Mr. GROSVENOR. That depends upon a number of circumstances which enter into it. In certain directions I should say it could be done cheaper in the tank-cars. If these cars are returned empty it may not be so. But the return of the tank-cars, if they come back loaded with linseed oil or turpentine—

Mr. BUCHANAN. Or cotton-seed oil.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, or cotton-seed oil, it may be that it would be much cheaper in the tank-cars. But as I have said, there are many considerations which enter into it. I suppose, however, as a rule it can be done cheaper in the tank-cars.

Mr. CANNON. If that be true, I want to know if the gentleman from Ohio thinks it proper that the law should be so amended as to prohibit that method of cheap shipment to the consumer? I want to get at it from a practical standpoint.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will answer the gentleman in this way: You can ship twenty car-loads of fresh beef from Chicago to New York at a less rate to the shipper than you can ship one, but I am in favor of legislation that will enable the shipment of one car-load at the same rate that we ship twenty, and the whole object of the law is to prevent discrimination against the man who ships in small quantities as against the large shipper.

Mr. CANNON. But if a man who ships twenty car-loads of beef in refrigerator-car owned by himself ships at a cheaper rate than another man can ship only a car-load, does the gentleman say that he should not be allowed credit for the car?

Mr. GROSVENOR. But that question does not enter here.
Mr. CANNON. I think the same principle is involved.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not talking of that now, but whenever Congress decides that a man who ships one car-load shall pay in the same proportion by the car-load that a man who ships twenty car-loads pays, then you have equality; whenever you say that a company may make a contract to ship twenty car-loads at a rate per car-load less than the shipper of one car-load is allowed, then you have broken down your equality and the object of the law utterly fails.

Mr. ROWELL. Do I understand you to say that the Standard Oil Company controlled the building of these cars?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say that to a large extent they do. Mr. WHITE, of New York. Is there a patent upon them? Mr. ROWELL. If that is true it makes a very different phase in this question. Mr. WHITE, of New York (to Mr. GROSVENOR). Is there a patent

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think there was, and I think it has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. If there ever was it expired long ago. Mr. GROSVENOR. While on the floor I will read a little on this subject which seems to reflect upon that point. I do not make any statement without my authority. I read from a letter from Murray, Dougal & Co., limited, of Milton, Pa. The letter speaks for itself:

MILTON, PA., December 6, 1887.

My Dear Sir: We have just wired you as follows: "Our financial friends decline to advance the money. We can not build them except for cash," which

My Dear Sir: We have just decline to advance the money. We can not build them except for cash, which we confirm.

Our Mr. Dickerman returned this morning, and after using every exertion failed to negotiate the deferred payments on your cars. Our financial friends state that they have declined to do this mainly on account of some supposed controversy which they claim you have had with the Standard Oil Company and various railroads in the West. They feared you could not use these cars to advantage if the railroads should be hostile to your interests.

We regret this very much, as we have been to considerable trouble and expense in making arrangements to build the cars, and are now seriously disappointed at the refusal of the parties to take the deferred payments, as they had partially promised to do.

We should be very much pleased to build these cars for you if you can negotiate the notes with your friends and pay us the cash.

Please let us hear from you at your earliest convenience concerning your ability to raise the money.

Yours, very respectfully,

MURRAY, DOUGAL & CO., Limited.

GEORGE RICE, Esq., Marietta, Ohio.

Mr. ROWELL. That affects their getting the cars built on credit. Mr. GROSVENOR. They had agreed to build them, but afterwards refused because the Standard Oil Company refused to allow them.

Mr. CRISP. I now yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART] for five minutes.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. This looks very much like an attempt to settle by Congress a controversy between George Rice and the Standard Oil Company. Now, I have no interest in either of them and no relation to either of them. All the information I have on this subject is derived from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission of a controversy between George H. Rice and the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. It is stated there that there was some discrimination against the carrying of oil in barrels, and the Interstate Commerce Commission decided in that case that the railroad company should give Mr. Rice the same rate per hundred pounds that it gave to the Standard Oil Company in the tank-cars. They, however, held, and in that I think they were right, that while the rate should be the same per hundred pounds, that it would be just and fair that the railroad company, all things taken into account, should charge Mr. Rice for the weight of the barrels.

Mr. CRISP. Treating the tank as part of the car?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Treating the tank as part of the car.

Other considerations entered into the decision. It appeared that the commission, as I understand it, thought it was advantageous to the carrier to take this freight in a tank-car rather than in barrels, because if they took the oil and went to the South, for example, with petroleum in a tank-car, when they returned they could bring turpentine or cotton-seed oil, so that they had the advantage of carrying both ways, whereas if they transported in barrels they had no return freight.

Therefore the commission stated it would be unjust to the railroads, while they gave these competing companies the same right per hundred pounds, that they should not be permitted to charge the weight of the barrel. Now, then, we find these amendments; and here is where Mr. George Rice appears, I suppose, although I do not know anything about it. Having failed in the commission to get all he desires, he comes here through his representative and asks Congress to intervene and settle this private controvers. It is special logical to intervene and settle this private controversy. It is special legislation which I think Congress ought not to be called upon to grant.

Mr. KERR. Would the car weigh any more with the tank than otherwise?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I understand the tank is considered as part of the car. I do not know of any reason, and I do not think as part of the car. I do not know of any reason, and I do not think any gentleman can give any reason why, in the interest of the great mass of consumers of oil, a controversy between these people should be settled by Congress. This does not interest the general public. What they are interested in is the price of the oil, and what they want, so far as the administration of the interstate-commerce law is concerned, is that all parties shall be treated alike.

Now, the Interstate Commerce Commission have declared that these parties in controversy shall be treated alike, provided that the railroad company is permitted to charge for the gross weight. I think that is right, Mr. Speaker; and I will move, if that motion is not pending, that the House recede from this disagreement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the permission of the House to incorporate in my remarks a number of letters which I have received from the smaller oil-refiners in Pennsylvania advocating this amendment, and stating that they will have to close up business if some such provision is not made.

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to make but one more statement, and I will ask but a moment. I am surprised that the gentleman from Vermont should seek to prejudice this matter by referring to Mr. Rice as having some controversy with the Standard Oil Company, etc. Mr.

Rice is only the man who happens to be put forward by the smaller refiners to bring this litigation; and he speaks as one of the men who are opposing that giant monopoly which the gentleman from Vermont so eloquently defends on this floor—the Standard Oil Company of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentle man from Ohio, to print certain letters with his remarks? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

TITUSVILLE, PA., January 29, 1889.

The letters are as follows:

Titusyille, Pa., January 29, 1889.

Dear Sir: We understand that you are a member of the conference committee on amendments to the interstate-commerce law, and that the proposed amendment relative to tank and barreled oil rates is still unsettled. There seems to be considerable difference of opinion as to result of such a law among those most interested, but to our minds, after considerable experience and reflection, it would certainly result only in injury to those expected to be benefited, namely, "outside" oil-refiners and the public consumers. If the rates were made the same, the barrel rate would not come down, but the bulk rate would go up; any shipper with the slightest knowledge of railroad matters knows this, and further that the Standard Oil Company are better off on high railroad freights than on low ones, as it is notorious that rebates, by other names in other ways, are and will be still paid to them by the railroads, and the higher the rate the greater advantage against the small refiner, who without any intimate acquaintance among railroad officials has little chance against those who make a business of railroad matters and "keeping in" with railroad men. It is useless to say such things are "against the law," but they are done nevertheless, and the surest preventive is the lowest possible open rates.

The movement of oil in bulk is undoubtedly the most economical for both shippers and railroads, and our "export oil" will no doubt very soon have to be transported in this way to the seaboard and thence in tank-steamers to Europe. If this is not generally done, American oil can not compete with the Russian oil, and we can not compete with the Standard Oil Company's seaboard pipe lines. To imperil a low tank-car rate bylegislation making it everywhere the same as barreled oil would, in our opinion, be extremely fill advised, and would probably be ruinous to the independent refiners engaged in the "export" trade and who are considerably the largest in number in the refini remain, Yours respectfully,

NATIONAL OIL COMPANY, LIMITED

Hon, C. H. GROSVENOR, M. C., Washington, D. C.

BUFFALO, N. Y., January 30, 1889.

DEAR SIR: The newspapers say that the conference committee report adversely on the inclosed amendment to the interstate-commerce law. Many shippers that I have talked with regret this adverse report and wish the committee would reconsider this matter. This amendment is surely right, if the interstate-commerce law is right. There can be no commercial liberty to shippers and manufacturers outside the Standard trust as long as the railroads are permitted to discriminate against goods in barrels. Discrimination against the public by the roads has built up the Standard monopoly and they can be relied on every time to oppose legislation tending to make the roads common carriers in fact. My experience as manufacturer and shipper makes me very anxious for the success of the proposed amendment.

Yours, truly, for the success of the Yours, truly,

C. B. MATTHEWS.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR.

PITTSBURGH, January 29, 1889.

PITTSBURGH, January 29, 1889.

SIR: We heard with great regret from Mr. Rice that the conference committee had rejected the amendment to the interstate-commerce bill equalizing freight charges on oil in tanks and in barrels, which passed the House of Representatives September 14, 1888.

We write to ask you if there is any possibility in any way that this action may be reconsidered. The amendment is alike an act of justice to the railroads, the independent refiners, jobbers, and consumers.

The advantage to the railroad of transporting oil in barrels, both in the way of increased safety and economy, are most clearly set forth by Mr. John T. Wilson, late general traffic agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and by Mr. W. J. Brundred, general agent of the tank line belonging to the same company, in their testimony in a case brought by Nicolai & Brady against the Pennsylvania Railroad before the Interstate Commission.

The same facts are also stated in a memorandum published by the interstate commissioners, contradicting the assertion that the advance in freight on barrels was authorized by them.

To the independent refiner, the jobber, and the consumer, the amendment is of great value, as it tends to hinder the Standard Oil Company in their efforts to obtain a monopoly of the oil business.

Prior to the use of the tank-cars every wholesale merchant or wholesale druggist in every town of any size purchased oil by the car-load, buying where they could buy the best oil at the cheapest rate, and a wholesome competition between themselves insured to the consumer good oil at fair prices. Now that the Standard Oil Company have established tank stations in all such towns, paying less freight, and buying cheap, second-hand packages, they are enabled to sell so low as to inflict certain loss on any dealer who is bold enough to draw his supplies elsewhere than from them. This may be said to give the consumer cheaper oil, but the opposite is the result in fact. As soon as the competition is broken down the Standard advance thei

By R. P. CRAWFORD, Treasurer.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, House of Representatives.

Mr. CRISP. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE]

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, it was a significant admission on the part of the gentleman from Ohio who spoke last [Mr. GROSVENOR ] that this bill would not have been permitted to pass without the amendment which the gentleman presented when it was reported by the Commerce Committee. I congratulate the House that we have now a quorum; that this matter, being in conference, is privileged, and that what could not have been done, as the gentleman states, at the time when we had no quorum and it was not privileged may now be done, so that a fair expression of the sense of the House can be had, and that there is now no possibility of any gentleman from any part of the country holding any kind of club over the House in the interest of any one competitor or in the interest of many competitors as against one.

The question in this case is, is it right, is it fair, to compel the rail-roads to carry the weight of the barrels free and to load and unload them without charge, when the tank-cars empty themselves from the them without charge, when the tank-cars empty themselves from the application of the laws of gravity? Are these things right in regulating the transportation of oil, and shall they be granted to the competitors of the Standard Oil Company, which has been held up before the House as the great hobgoblin that should frighten every man (who looks to his constituency for a return) into voting here for what may be supposed to be opposition to the interests of that company?

Now I want to call the attention of the House for a minute to the contradiction which is involved in the positions assumed here. A great hue and cry is raised against the Standard Oil Company, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] tells us that unless his proposed legislation shall go through, the other competitors in the oil business will have to go out of business. Why? Because the Standard Oil Company is furnishing to the people of this country, of whom we are the representatives, the product of manufacture of oil at rates so cheap that other parties can not compete with them in the market. And we, as the representatives of the people who are the consumers of the oil, stand here crying "Monopoly! monopoly!" because that company is able to do business so cheap and to sell the manufactured product so cheap to our constituents that other people can not compete with them.

For one, I am opposed to legislation for the purpose of affecting competitors in business. I believe that if the Standard Oil Company can manufacture their products for a less price and can sell them for a less price than others, then, on the principle of fair play to all, they are entitled to have the benefit of what they are capable of doing. And I believe that it is not in the interest of the people, but in the interest of higher prices for manufactured oil for us to step in here and say that the railroad companies shall carry the oil in barrels, without counting the weight of the barrels, at the same price at which they carry the oil in tanks, not charging for anything except for the weight of the oil. That is not fair. All this talk about monopoly is not proper, it seems to me, in legislation.

Mr. Speaker, what is monopoly and who are monopolists? According to the talk we hear upon this floor a monopolist, Mr. Speaker, according to this standard, is a man who, having built a house for him-self and his family, fails to build one for everybody else and everybody else's family. [Laughter.] That is all. A monopolist in the com-mon-carrier business is a man who builds himself a railroad and then does not parallel it with another railroad and make somebody else a present of it. [Laughter.] A monopolist is a man who, having devised or obtained the means of furnishing an article for consumption by the people at a price cheaper than anybody else, does not put into the hands of everybody else the opportunity to do it a little cheaper than he can. Now, principle is principle, and fair play is fair play, even if the Standard Oil Company is a party on the one hand and all the world is on the other.

The Standard Oil Company since it has come into prominence as a great factor in this country, has by its competition lowered the price of refined oil from 20 cents a gallon to 8 cents a gallon, and while it has it has enriched its members. But while it has enriched its stockholders it has at the same time enriched the constituents of every man on this floor to the extent to which it has reduced the price of oil to the consumer; and that is the real history of this competition. So, Mr. Speaker, I ask that this question shall be taken with reference to the interests of our own constituents, the consumers of oil, instead of with reference to the interests of the constituents of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor], whose credit was so bad that they could not obtain oil-tank cars without paying "spot cash." And that is the entire extent to which there is a patent right on tank-cars.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, if these prices are to be brought upon the same level it will not be at the expense of the railroads but at the expense of the people by raising freight in the tank-cars to the price necessary to pay for transporting and handling the freight in barrels.

We will have "got in our work" as against the Standard Oil Company, but we will have done it by raising the price of oil for our constituents, the people; and we will have benefited the manufacturers in that district in Ohio represented by my friend, Judge Grosvenor, by raising the price of refined petroleum to a point where those manufacturers can produce it at a profit, which at present it appears they can not

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention for a moment to the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission so that the House may fully understand it, and then so far as I am concerned I shall be ready for a vote.

The decision is as follows:

The decision is as follows:

When for a special traffic, e. g., the transportation of petroleum oils, a carrier provides rolling stock for one method, but does not provide it for another for which it publishes rates, but the shippers are expected to provide the same, the terms on which such rolling stock is to be provided should be uniform and be published with the rate-sheets, and can not lawfully be left to be the subject of bargain and of different terms in the case of different shippers.

It is properly the business of a carrier by railroad to supply the rolling stock for the freights he offers or proposes to carry; and if the diversities and peculiarities of traffic are such that this is not always practicable and consignors are allowed to supply it for themselves the carrier must not allow its own deficiencies in this particular to be made the means of putting at unreasonable disadvantage those who make use in the same traffic of the facilities it supplies.

When two methods for the transportation of an article of merchandise are nominally offered by the carrier, for only one of which it offers rolling stock and for the other of which the shipper must supply his own rolling stock and erable expense, it can not be said that the resort to the latter by the shipper is so far a matter of choice that he has no concern with the charges for transportation in the other mode.

tion in the other mode.

The man of small means being compelled to make this choice by reases of the carrier's failure to supply rolling stock for the other mode, has a right to insist that the charges by transportation in the two modes shall be relatively just and equal.

Mr. ADAMS. "Relatively."
Mr. CRISP. I am going on to show what they mean by "relatively."

When oil is transported in tanks permanently affixed to car bodies-

Here is the trouble in the way-the tank is to be considered as part of the car; and for oil transported therein the charge for transportation should be the same by the hundred pounds—

Not by the barrel, by the hundred pounds-that the carrier charges for transportation between the same points of barrels filled with like oil and taken in car-load lots. The carrier is guilty of unjust discrimination if the shipper in barrels is charged a higher rate.

Neither the fact that the shipper in the one case supplies the rolling stock, nor the alleged fact, which is not found sustained, that for the tanks there is a greater probability of return loads, nor the further alleged fact that with barrel shipments there are greater risks to the carrier's property and that which it carries, can justify imposing upon the barrel shipments the greater burden.

Under this rule the carrier will be at liberty and will be expected to make to the owner of tank-cars a reasonable allowance for their use.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read that last sentence again?
Mr. CRISP (reading):

Under this rule the carrier will be at liberty and will be expected to make to the owner of tank-cars a reasonable allowance for their use.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman will observe that this amendment forbids that.

Mr. CRISP. Of course the amendment is meant to change the law as now interpreted by the commission. My object in calling attention to this matter is that the House may act intelligently and with a full understanding of what the commission has decided in regard to the interpretation of the present law. Here is another case:

terpretation of the present law. Here is another case:

It is a common-law and charter duty of every railway carrier, subject to the act to regulate commerce, to furnish a proper and adequate car equipment for all the reasonable needs of the business it advertises and undertakes to do, and if the carrier fails to do this, to the wrongful injury of the shipper, it is liable in damages therefor; but the statute has not clothed the Interstate Commerce Commission with the jurisdiction to order the carrier to furnish any particular equipment of ears, or in fact any cars at all. It is the duty of such carrier to select and furnish its own equipment of cars, under all the responsibility which the law requires of it in so vital and important a matter, for the public has not undertaken to divide responsibility with the carrier in this respect.

The law does not forbid a carrier from obtaining cars for the transportation of freight over its line from other carriers or car-furnishing companies, but in every such instance the rates of freight must be exactly the same, and none other, as they would be if such cars were owned by the carrier so using them.

The law does not forbid a carrier from obtaining cars from a shipper for the transportation of such shipper's freight over its line; but in every such instance, after deducting a reasonable rent published in the tariff as part of the rate and paid by the carrier to the shipper for the use of such cars, the rates must be exactly the same, and none other, as upon freight transported in the same service in the carrier's own cars; and in every such transaction the carrier, at his peril, must see to it that a shipper furnishing his own cars receives no other or different rates than other shippers who use the cars of the carrier for a similar service.

Now, as I understand the rule as it exists to-day under the inter-pretation of the commission, it is just this: The carriers must charge for car-load lots the same rates per hundred pounds for petroleum transported in a tank-car as for petroleum transported in barrels. The trouble arises from the fact that the tank is treated as part of the car and the barrel as part of the freight. There is the distinction from which this trouble arises.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Is there any doubt on the proposition that the tank-car, including the tank, does not weigh more than the box-car, including the box?

Mr. CRISP. I am not informed about that.
Mr. WHITE, of New York. Well, it is a fact that it does not.
Mr. CRISP. That is where the whole complaint comes in; and the practical effect is just that suggested by my friend from Ohio-that the Standard Oil Company has an absolute monopoly of the oil trade in almost all parts of the country by reason of their possession of means to enable them to build these tank-cars.

Now, I think the proper rule would be-of course I am not offering an amendment now-but the proper rule in my judgment would be that suggested in one of these decisions by the commission; that is, that a common carrier should be required to furnish suitable and proper cars for the transportation of every commodity which he advertises he will carry, so that he may be enabled to afford equal facilities to all individuals who may choose to transport in that way. It strikes me that would be a reasonable and proper rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the House should adhere to the amendment, will there not be entire power in the committee of conference to put in such a provision as the gentleman suggests?

Mr. CRISP. I think so; and I am in favor of that kind of a provision. Of course I see some objections, as other gentlemen do, to singling out one particular article like oil when there may be trouble in many other respects. But one of the great difficulties in this country which created the demand for the passage of the interstate-commerce law was the fact, amongst other things, that railroad companies engaged in other business than that of transportation. They might be pro-in other business than that of transportation. They might be producers of coal at a particular place, and owning the highway also would have the advantage of everybody else.

Now, if a railroad company occupied with reference to oil the same position which it does with reference to the transportation of passengers there would be no complaint. While one gentleman may obtain from a railroad company a special car in which his family may be transported, every other gentleman can go to the company and obtain the same accommodation, if he is willing to pay for it. That is not true about this oil business. The railroad company advertises rates for the transportation of oil in tank-cars; and when you go to them and say, "I desire to ship so many gallons of oil in a tank-car," they say, "We have no tank-cars."

have no tank-cars."

Right at the same station where you live it may be they have a tank-car they have rented from the Standard Oil Company, but they will not accord its use to anybody else. It is renting a car for the exclusive use of the person from whom it is rented. There is where the trouble comes The complaint is made that no transportation company should be allowed to do that. It is not in harmony with the old common-law rule in respect to common carriers. The common law is fair and founded in equity and justice. It requires equal facilities for the same money to every one who seeks the service of the carrier.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If this is not agreed to and the matter is left in the hands of the conference committee, is it not within their power to report a substitute which will give us a provision of precisely that character?

I think so. That is what I want to do. what I ask to do. It is the position I assumed before the committee; that is, not to single out any article, but to require all common carriers engaged in the transportation of people and property to give equal facilities to all.

Mr. ADAMS. Would not the effect be to prohibit the railroad company from transporting vehicles not owned by itself; for instance, grain-cars owned by private individuals, or some other patent hereafter invented?

Mr. CRISP. I know there are many troubles about it. I hope the provision before it becomes a law will be framed properly. I do not want to stop the common carrier from carrying such a car as that suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. It is a difficult problem just what to do. If the carrier owned the tank-cars it could not hire their exclusive use to any one shipper, but under the law as it now is the carrier rents from an oil-shipper tank-cars and allows that shipper alone to use them, thus practically granting the use of its cars to one party and refusing their use to another. It enables a common carrier to discriminate among shippers. It enables the common carrier to supply something to one and to refuse it to another dealer, so as to render the latter unable to compete with the former in the same line

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not possible to compel the common carrier to charge for the use of its car reasonable rates, and if so, why is there not adopted some provision requiring equality and uniformity in this

Mr. CRISP. That seems to be reasonable, with this qualification: The common carrier is a public corporation which must not discriminate. Here it rents its car from one individual and allows no one else to ship in it except the person from whom it is rented.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not reasonable.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not reasonable.
Mr. CRISP. The commission say they have the right to do so if they charge a reasonable price for the use of the car.

Mr. ADAMS. No railroad ought to refuse to take goods for transportation so far as the vehicle in which they are transported is con-

Mr. CRISP. This is a troublesome question. What I want is to put the common carriers in the position where they can charge a reasonable rate for any service they undertake to perform. But when they undertake to perform a service they must perform it for everybody who wants it; that is, that they shall use a public charter for the interests of all and not for the benefit of a few. But I am not wedded to this particularly. I would like to have a vote on it. [Cries of "Yote!"]

I believe the pending vote is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART] to recede from this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART], that the House recede from its third amendment.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. CRISP. I move the House further insist on its amendments and ask for another conference on the disagreeing votes of the two

Mr. LODGE. I want to move to recede from amendment No. 7. Mr. CRISP. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(7) SEC. 11. That in all civil actions and proceedings of whatever nature arising under an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and under all acts amendatory thereof, concurrent jurisdiction with United States courts is hereby conferred upon State courts of competent jurisdiction.

(8) SEC. 12. That the commission is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act; and upon the request of said commission the Attorney-General of the United States shall institute and prosecute all necessary proceedings in the proper court for the enforcement of this act and for the punishment of all violations thereof.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts would involve the striking out of both sections as the two are inserted as one amendment.

Mr. CRISP. That is a mistake, Mr. Speaker; there are two amendments, numbered 7 and 8, and they so appear in the printed bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the action of the House, which shows that the two are embodied in one amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following additional sections, 11 and 12.

Mr. CRISP. This provision was treated in the conference committee as two amendments, and were numbered 7 and 8. On one of these there was a disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will so treat them, but as a matter of fact there are two amendments; and the Chair thinks the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken in stating that it was but one amendment.

Mr. CRISP. But the latter part of that is numbered 8 in the printed

The SPEAKER. What does the report do with No. 8?
Mr. CRISP. They disagreed as to No. 8, and put it substantially in another part of the bill.

The SPEAKER. It does not seem to be so stated in the report.

Mr. CRISP. I think the Speaker is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that part of the conference re-

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 4. That the House recede from its amendment numbered 8.

Mr. CRISP. That is the last one in the printed bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that part of the amendment on which the gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House recede.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That in all civil actions and proceedings of whatever nature arising under an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and under all acts amendatory thereof, concurrent jurisdiction with United States courts is hereby conferred upon State courts of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the question is taken may I be permitted to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question? I would like to know whether under the law as it now exists an individual has a right to bring his suit in a State court; and if the right of appeal to a Federal court ex-

Mr. SCOTT. Not under the act as it stands to-day?

The object of the amendment here, then, is to give concurrent jurisdiction to the State courts, and the Senate amendment proposes to confine it practically where it is now; that is, in the Federal courts?

Mr. CRISP. The Senate have said nothing about it; but the House proposes an amendment to which the Senate disagree.

Mr. SCOTT. But does not the conference committee report upon it? Mr. CRISP. Yes; they report a disagreement between the two Yes; they report a disagreement between the two

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House recede from its amendment numbered 7.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain the House on the motion which I have submitted further than to state that the interstate-commerce law, affecting every carrier and shipper in the country, certainly demands uniformity of judicial decision more than almost any act that can be imagined. It is proposed to take that jurisdiction and give it to the varying decisions of the various State courts. It seems to me that such is a very dangerous movement for the business interests of the country; and further than that I think it a blow at the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in a matter which is peculiarly their own, and which should be left in their hands, because they can give to all this far-reaching legislation the uniformity and steadiness of character so important to the business interests of the entire country.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a few words with reference to this amendment.

Mr. OATES. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds will he yield to me for a moment to make a correction?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, when the gentle-man from Georgia and myself were discussing a question as to the jurisdiction conferred on the State courts, I, speaking from memory, denied that the national banking act conferred jurisdiction upon the State courts; but I find in that statement I was in error. Section 57 of the act referred to confers such juirsdiction, and the act to which I referred, amendatory of the national banking act, was a limitation only upon the right of national banks to sue in the Federal courts. Up to that time they could sue in the Federal courts in all cases, but that act limited their right to those cases in which a State bank or banking association could sue.

I merely wanted to correct the error into which I had fallen.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is only a few years ago that there was a contention on the part of the railroad interests of the country that they were not subject to legislative control, and those cases, known as the "Granger cases," which came from Iowa and Illinois, proceeded upon the theory that there was no power in the State to regulate them. That question was settled definitely, and settled definitely against the railroad companies' contention. These companies went on in the exercise of the tremendous power they have of discriminating, which enables them to make of the commerce of the country a football, until it was manifest that the power which the Supreme Court said existed must be exercised in the control of these corpora-tions and in the interest of the people at large. In view of that pub-lic demand the act to regulate interstate commerce was enacted and approved on the 4th day of February, 1887.

Yet, notwithstanding the enactment of that law, we find that there is a great deal of difficulty yet throughout the entire country arising out of the matter of the unjust discrimination that these railway companies make in the transportation of persons and property. We are told by the very highest authority in railway circles that the "difficulty" is not so much in the law as it is in the refusal on the part of the railway companies to obey and observe the law.

The Interstate Commerce Commission concede gross violation of the interstate-commerce act, and the railway managers themselves confess that the law is practically a dead letter and assume that the authorities are powerless to enforce it unless they, the law-breakers, will condescend to take the matter of its enforcement into their own hands.

This is insolence without parallel in a country of law and order, and is born of the fact that there is no tribunal provided for the enforcement of this act that is within the reach of the common people whose rights are invaded, and who would seek redress of their grievances and the enforcement of the law in good earnest had they an opportunity to do so.

So this brings me to the conclusion that the difficulty which to-day confronts this country with reference to the control and management of these railway companies is an executive one rather than a legislative one. And for that reason, that the fault is not so much one of the law as of the executive in fulfillment of the law, I am emphatically in favor of the adoption of this amendment that sends these corporations, like all other commercial corporations and all other industries and all other citizens of this country, to the common courts of the country. The same parties who said some years ago that railroad companies were not subject to legislative control are here seeking virtually the same end by a contention that it is unconstitutional to give the State courts jurisdiction.

It has been stoutly affirmed on this floor and elsewhere that there was no power under the Constitution to confer jurisdiction on the State was no power under the Constitution to confer jurisdiction on the State courts. But when routed by overwhelming authority from the constitutional position they take refuge behind one of policy. This position will be found as untenable as the others which they have been compelled to abandon; and the suggestion by my learned friend from Massachusetts, that State court jurisdiction will lead to difficulties because of the great difference and diversity of the railroad interests, is but another means of compassing the original purpose of defeating all real efforts in the direction of practical railway control.

Now, I want to say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that the diversity here alluded to is, in my judgment, just that kind of diversity which is indispensable in the administration of public justice throughout the country, and is as applicable and as necessary to legislation growing out of the business of railway companies as to any other line of business out of which litigation arises.

When we were contending for the adoption of this proviso for a uniform classification throughout the country we were confronted with an objection that seemed somewhat plausible, that there was such diversity in climate and in product, such varying conditions in the different sections of the country, that the railroad companies could not afford at the present time to make a uniform classification that would be uniform, coextensive with the system.

Now, their argument, whatever it is worth, against the uniform classification of property intended to prevent discrimination is a strong argument in favor of this diversity of jurisdiction of the courts that will be adapted to the different and varying conditions through the country. Something has been said with reference to the fact that it has not been the practice of the Congress heretofore to pursue the line of policy indicated in the amendment under consideration. Speaker, it has been the uniform policy from the formation of the Government for the Congress of the United States to confer jurisdiction upon State courts and State tribunals in similar cases to the one we are considering, and that it has never been broken or interrupted nor objection raised until that objection was raised in the interest of the railroad corporations of this country. I desire briefly to allude to some of the cases in which the Congress of the United States has conferred jurisdiction upon State tribunals.

I have given this matter some attention, and I find that in the matter of remedy for the deprivation of Federal office the State courts are granted the same jurisdiction as the Federal courts, in section 2010, page 353, of the Revised Statutes. Again, in section 2177, page 381, United States marshals may qualify before the State as well as Federal judges. Again, I find that in suits and prosecutions in State courts under the postal laws where the trial of claims and demands of as great value and of prosecutions where punishments are as great in extent as under the State laws in like cases, jurisdiction is given to the State courts, as will be found in section 3833, page 750, of the Revised Statutes. Again, in section 4522 of the Revised Statutes, penalties for omitting to begin a voyage by seamen, the jurisdiction is conferred on State courts; and again, in section 4599, for the arrest of seamen for desertion without warrant, and under section 4063 jurisdiction is conferred as to process against foreign ministers and their domestic servants upon State courts.

Then we come to the national-bank act, which, in plain language, provides-

That suits, actions, and proceedings against any association under this act may be had in any circuit, district, or Territorial court of the United States held within the district in which such association may be established, or in any State, county, or municipal court in the county or city in which said association is located having jurisdiction in similar cases.

And, Mr. Speaker, under that provision there have been decisions by the United States Supreme Court sustaining the power of Congress to thus confer jurisdiction on State courts, one of which I shall refer It is the case of National Pahquioque Bank vs. The First National Bank of Bethel, Conn., reported at page 383, 14 Wallace. I read from that case the statement of facts:

I read from that case the statement of facts:

The First National Bank, of Bethel, in Connecticut, on the 21st of February, 1888, failed to redeem some of its circulating notes. They were protested, and on the 26th of February a receiver was appointed under the above-quoted fiftieth section of the currency act, who immediately entered on the duties of his office, The National Pahquioque Bank, of Danbury, Fairfield County, in the same State, asserted that it was a creditor of the Bethel bank and presented its claim to the receiver. The receiver, however, disallowed it.

The Pahquioque Bank thereupon, on the 30th day of May, 1863, brought assumpsit in the superior court of Fairfield County, a court of Connecticut having jurisdiction in similar cases, against the Bethel bank. The Bank of Bethel defended itself against the claim on these, in substance, among other grounds:

I. That the courts of the United States alone had jurisdiction after the appointment and acceptance of the receiver.

Mr. Justice Clifford, in delivering the opinion of the court, upon this point says:

Mr. Justice Clifford, in delivering the opinion of the court, upon this point says:

Support to the first proposition is supposed to be derived from the conceded fact that such associations are created by an act of Congress and that they are instruments of the National Government intrusted with the power of carrying on the business of banking and of employing and circulating Treasury notes as a national currency, subject to the supervision and direction of the Comptroller of the Currency and of the Secretary of the Treasury. Banking associations, it is said, were established as instruments by which the Government may perform the trust of furnishing and regulating the national paper currency; and the argument is that inasmuch as they are instruments of the Government to carry into effect a national purpose they can not be impleaded in a State court. Confirmation of that view is also attempted to be drawn from the fact that such associations are controlled by the Treasury Department; that all the notes which they circulate as money are received from the Comptroller of the Currency, and that they can not issue any instrument for circulation or use as money except the notes intrusted to them by the Comptroller of the Currency, as authorized by the act of Congress.

Beyond all doubt such associations are created by an act of Congress and for the purposes assumed by the defendants, but the conclusion attempted to be drawn from those facts can not be sustained, as express provision is made by the fifty-seventh section of the act that suits, actions, and proceedings against any such association may be had "in any State, county, or municipal court in the county or city in which said association is located having jurisdiction in similar cases." Commenced, as the action was, in the proper court of the State where the association is located, and in a court having jurisdiction in such suits is unquestionably vested in any circuit, district, or Territorial court of the United States held within the district in which such ass

Mr. Speaker, I might go further and cite still other authorities sustaining Congress in conferring jurisdiction upon the local courts of the States that are within the reach of the people, but it is idle to do so, as no honest lawyer questions seriously this power. As I said before, in my humble judgment the difficulty is not so much in what the law is, or that it requires amendment, as that there should be some tribunal provided, somewhere within the reach of the plain, common people, where they can enforce and defend their rights. A good deal has here asid short requires the residual to the reach of the plain. pie, where they can enforce and defend their rights. A good deal has been said about providing them with means to prosecute their suits in United States courts that are beyond their reach. It seems to me that that is altogether too kind. With reference to these questions, give the people the same right to go into their home, domestic courts that they now exercise under the interstate-commerce act, under the postal laws, and the national-bank act, and, in my opinion, we will find that we have entered upon a solution of this whole difficulty, and that it will be soon settled, as other questions like it have been settled in the same way heretofore.

will be soon settled, as tener questions are way heretofore.

This idea that the railroad system of this country is an institution that is not subject to the law, that it is sui generis, that it is a law unto itself, seems to me to be a most erroneous idea and one that is dangerous to the rights of the people. It is within the knowledge of almost every member of this House that, as a rule, the United States courts are the reach of the ordinary litigant, and that to compel him are beyond the reach of the ordinary litigant, and that to compel him under this act to go to those courts or to the United States commission is well-nigh to deprive him of his constitutional right to have his day in court. Then, Mr. Speaker, as there is no constitutional objection to this amendment, and as there is no sound reason in policy why this this amendment, and as there is no sound reason in policy why this amendment should not prevail, I hope the House will sustain the committee in its action and will not recede. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House more than a moment. I am opposed to this amendment to the bill and hope that the House will recede. The power to regulate interstate commerce is in the National Government and not in the State government. ment. The power to regulate railroads doing business within a State is a State power and not national. I do not think it wise policy to put the business of interpreting national laws into the hands of any other than national courts. It would not be wise for the States to confer jurisdiction upon the United States courts to enforce their laws with reference to the railroads, and to me it seems wise policy to keep separate State commerce and interstate commerce.

In that way we will procure the real enforcement of the law. In no other way can we have suitable and legitimate State laws and suitable and legitimate national laws. There is a broad distinction be-tween State commerce and interstate commerce. If this law is to be successful, if we are to go on and, through experience, make it better, and if we are eventually to have a body of laws and rules which the railroads and everybody else will be constrained to obey, we must have those rules established by courts created to interpret and enforce the laws of the national Congress. That is the only philosophical way, and to depart from it is to depart from what ought to be the rule with reference to all such matters of Congressional legislation. This is not a matter of ordinary commercial transactions. It is a new departure; not a new law, because from the time railroads were first built every court before whom the question came has held those corporations to be quasi public and subject to public control; but it is a new departure for the national Congress to enact laws with reference to interstate commerce. We have started on the road, and if we keep the interpretation and enforcement of the laws of Congress within the control of courts created under the Constitution of the United States, courts courts created under the Constitution of the United States, courts which are amply competent to interpret the laws, we shall sooner reach a definite system of rules and a definite interpretation of law, so that the railroads will be compelled to obey. That is why I am opposed to this proposed mixing of State jurisdiction with national jurisdiction. That is all I desire to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the colloquy between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] in regard to the national-banking act, I rather think my friend, Colonel OATES, will have to explain again, because Congress did, by an act passed in the Forty-ninth Congress, renounce jurisdiction of all controversies in relation to national banks. That act will be found in the acts of the last session, chapter 866, an act entitled "An act to correct the eurollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled act to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States to regulate the re-

March 3, 1875." The fourth section of that act provides that—All national-banking associations established under the laws of the United States, shall, for the purposes of all actions by or against them, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed citizens of States in which they are respectively located, and in such cases the circuit and district courts shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have in cases between individual citizens of the same State.

Moreover, by the second section it is provided:

SEC. 2. That whenever in any cause pending in any court of the United States there shall be a receiver or manager in possession of any property, such receiver or manager shall manage and operate such property, according to the requirements of the valid laws of the State in which such property shall be situated, in the same manner that the owner or possessor thereof would be bound to do if in possession thereof. Any receiver or manager who shall willfully violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $3,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

And the section following provides that these receivers of railroad companies appointed by Federal courts may be sued in State tribunals, whose judgments shall be recognized in the administration of the assets of these corporations by the Federal courts. Moreover, the first section of this act, I am very much inclined to think, makes the discussion which we have just now had altogether unnecessary, because it provides that-

The circuit courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction, concurrent with the courts of the several States—

Observe the language-"concurrent with the courts of the several States"- of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, etc.

Under this provision, unless there is something in the interstate-commerce act about which I am not advised which confers exclusive jurisdiction upon the Federal courts in cases involving sums less than $2,000, the jurisdiction is already in the Federal courts.

Allow me to make a single further observation upon this subject. The whole tendency of modern legislation in both Houses of Congress is to give the suitor an opportunity to go into the most convenient court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Mr. OATES. I did not quite understand the remark which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] made a few moments ago in egard to myself.

regard to myself.

Mr. ROGERS. I remarked that, if I correctly understood the colloquy between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], the gentleman from Alabama would have to make another correction, because by this act, from which I have just been reading, the Congress of the United States renounces jurisdiction in all cases with reference to national banks, except where the parties may come into the Federal courts by virtue of their citizenship, as provided in the Constitution. ship, as provided in the Constitution.

Mr. OATES. That was not in controversy at all between the gentleman from Georgia and myself.

Mr. ROGERS. I understood you to say that originally the Congress of the United States had conferred jurisdiction in national-bank cases upon the State courts and afterwards withdrew it; that such jurisdiction is the state courts and afterwards withdrew it; that such jurisdictions is the state courts and afterwards withdrew it; that such jurisdictions is the state of the st tion was conferred in the original act concurrent with the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, but that subsequently the Federal jurisdiction

Mr. OATES. The gentleman did not quite understand what was the point in controversy nor my explanation.

Mr. ROGERS. Then all I have said on that subject is inapplicable, Mr. OATES. The point was that the original act providing for the establishment of national banks did confer jurisdiction on the State courts; but when we had a controversy on that point I at first denied that proposition, speaking from memory. Afterward I found I had been in error, that the act did confer such jurisdiction: that I had confounded that act with the act passed in the Forty-eighth Congress, which limited the right of national-banking associations to sue in Federal courts to cases in which like associations of the States could sue in such courts.

Mr. ROGERS. It occurred to me that my friend was inadvertently in error. I see that my remarks, so far as that colloquy is concerned, were inappropriate.

Mr. WEAVER. If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Rogers] will examine carefully the interstate-commerce act he will find that it strictly confines all suits to the Federal courts without regard to amount.

Mr. ROGERS. Then it ought to be modified; and I hope the committee will not adopt the suggestion of my friend from Massachusetts—

Mr. WEAVER. I hope so, too.
Mr. ROGERS. For, permit me to say in this connection, so far from that provision of the bill being an attack on Federal jurisdiction, the Federal judges of the United States, by orders entered of record in cases where they were administering the assets of bankrupt railroad cor-porations through a receiver, have permitted suits against the receivers to be brought in the State courts and have uniformly—at least in some jurisdictions—recognized these judgments rendered against the receivers in the administration of the assets in the Federal courts. Following the precedent set by the Federal judges, the Congress of the United States, in the act to which I have alluded, gave authority in all jurisdictions for these suits to be brought in State courts and for their judgments to be propried in the administration of the preceding of the state courts and for their judgments to be recognized in the administration of the preceding of the state courts. ments to be recognized in the administration of the assets of these corporations by the Federal judges

So that I say the modern tendency of legislation upon this subject of jurisdiction is to open the nearest court and make it accessible to the people. And why should one of these corporations, transacting business within the jurisdiction of a State and with citizens of the State, be unwilling to submit itself to the jurisdiction of that State? There can be but one reason. No gentleman will rise in his place and say that the judges of our State courts are not generally as honest and as capable of transacting the ordinary public business confided to their charge as the Federal judges. The Federal judges as a class may be regarded perhaps as men of superior ability; but the State courts being capable, to say the least, of transacting the public business of the citizens of the State, why should not these corporations which seek to transact business with those citizens be willing to submit to the jurisdiction of the State? After they have thus submitted their controversies to State jurisdiction, if there is any Federal question involved and the sum is sufficiently large, they can take out their writ of error from the supreme court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What sum does the gentleman say would be required for that?

Mr. ROGERS. Five thousand dollars, I presume.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Nothing at all.

Mr. ROGERS. Ah, perhaps that is so.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The suit can go into the Supreme Court of the United States every time at the instance of the corporation.

You are merely making the route circuitous and lengthy.

Mr. ROGERS. I submit that it should be the policy of the House to adhere to the principle I have stated. There is nothing whatever in the objection that we shall have one class of decisions in one State and another class in another. That objection would apply as well to matters of commercial law and other branches of the law. And at last the State courts are always governed in matters of this kind by the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States; I do not mean in all matters of commercial law, but in all national questions. So that I conceive there is nothing in that objection whatever.

But there is something in it to the citizen who does not want to be dragged two or three hundred miles to a Federal court when the amount involved would not justify any such expense. His personal expenses would amount to more, in many cases, in getting into court than was involved in the suit, and the litigation far more expensive in every way. Hence to the citizen this is a most important matter. I hope the House will adhere to its former action.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment. I concede that Congress has the power to confer this jurisdiction on the State courts. About that I think there is not the least question. The only question is whether the interests of the people, not the interests of the corporations, will be subserved by conferring this jurisdiction.

It has been found that the States can not successfully control the railroads or regulate their tolls and tariffs—that if that is to be successfully done it must be by the Federal Government. Hence the interstate-commerce law, so called.

Some of the lines of road reach through many States; and as State laws can have no extra-territorial operation or effect it was found necessary for Congress to exercise its power. So, too, contracts for carrying freights and passengers may be made in New York to be completed in San Francisco or San Antonio or St. Paul; and it is important that the same construction should be given to such contracts in the different States through which they have to be performed.

Indeed, it seems to me clear that if this law is to have the beneficial effect that it is hoped it may have it must have a uniform interpreta-tion throughout the country. That it can not have this uniform in-terpretation is beyond a doubt if jurisdiction to interpret it is to be given to the numerous courts of the several States throughout the Union.

The principal objection made to conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the Federal courts in this class of cases is stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Anderson]. He says that we should give the plain, common people a tribunal in which they can attend to their rights speedily. This sounds very well, but on examination it will not be found that the people will very well, but on examination it will not be found that the people will get justice either more speedily or cheaply in this class of cases by giving this jurisdiction to the State courts. This is not like of cases by giving this jurisdiction to the State courts. the case of suits against national banks referred to. In that class of cases a Federal question could rarely arise. In cases arising under this act it would be rare that a Federal question would not arise. question arises either party has right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. So that the commencement of suit in the State court would protract rather than shorten the litigation.

If the suit is begun in the State court it would go on appeal to the supreme court of the State, and from that either on writ of error or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; whereas if it is commenced in the United States circuit court it would go directly from that court to the Supreme Court of the United States; and in whichever court it is commenced the same legal assistance would be required. If a suit is begun under this act, it is idle to suppose that it will not be carried to the court of last resort. The giving of the State courts jurisdiction would not therefore shorten or cheapen the litigation, but the contrary, while as I believe it would tend to greatly embarrass the administration of the law.

Mr. ADAMS. Suppose a contract called for transportation from Chicago, in Illinois, to New York, this amendment provides that jurisdiction is conferred on the proper courts. Then what courts would have jurisdiction over a contract of that kind? How many different courts?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I admit that more than one court might have jurisdiction, and I am opposed to making such a state of things possible.

Mr. WEAVER.

Mr. WEAVER. You could plead that pendency. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not think you could plead the pendency of an action in the Federal courts in abatement of an action in the State courts, or vice versa.

Mr. WEAVER. You could if the law conferred jurisdiction.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But I pass from that. further than I in favor of limiting the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to Federal questions. But this is peculiarly a Federal question. It is just such a question as it is appropriate and proper to submit to the Federal courts. As I above said, it is only by so doing that the law can be made to work out the best results.

In view, therefore, of the fact that an appeal will go to the Supreme Court of the United States any way, and that nobody is benefited by commencing the action first in the State courts, and that this is simply opening the door for a diversity of decisions as well as a multiplicity of legislation, I hope the course proposed by the gentleman from Georgia will not be adopted. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CRISP. After one word of reply, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the House to vote upon this question. It seems to be conceded now by gentlemen who oppose the amendment that there is no constitutional objection to it, and that there is no question but that there are numerous precedents for this kind of legislation; so that the matter resolves itself at last into this: As a matter of policy is it wise to confer concurrent jurisdiction upon the State courts to hear and determine causes arising under this act?

When gentlemen talk of uniformity of decisions let them ask themselves if they are any more likely to have uniformity of decisions in the various district courts of the United States than in the highest courts of general jurisdiction in the several States of the Union? of a district judge in Maine is no more binding upon a district judge in New York than a decision of a State court in Maine would be upon a State court in New York. There is no more uniformity attained by leaving it to the United States courts, I respectfully submit to any man at all acquainted with the practice of the courts, than there is of leaving it to the State courts. What binds a district judge in Minnesota to observe the rulings made by a district judge in Massachusetts?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Does he not know, as a rule of decisions in the Federal courts, that when one or two circuit courts have passed upon a question giving a different ruling the others follow as a matter of course and adopt it as the settled practice?

Mr. CRISP. Let me say to my friend, if he does not already know it as a fact, that the courts in every State in the Union conform to the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The Supreme Court of the United

Mr. CRISP. Yes; and if the gentleman does not know it, I say to him that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on Federal questions must be followed by the State courts.

So on the question of uniformity there is nothing, Mr. Speaker.

Wherever there is a Federal statute involved, the suitor can go to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the question before us resolves itself simply to this: Shall individuals who are wronged or conceive themselves to be wronged by a corporation be allowed to appeal for redress to a court in that county where they live, or shall they be driven to go to the Federal court, which may be inaccessible and hard to reach?

The gentleman from Minnesota says whether the case is large or small the parties litigant have their lawyers. Certainly the gentleman knows there is some other question to be considered besides that of the lawyer employed with the cases. There is the matter of the suitor's personal expenses, the expenses of his witnesses, and all those questions that have induced the people of every State in the Union to establish tribunals of easy access in which they could have their contentions heard and determined. Why should a gentleman in Minnesota who conceives himself to be injured by a corporation running within 50 feet of his door be required to go 150 or 200 miles to a Federal court to try his case, when perhaps in sight of his very door there is a State court of general jurisdiction with a learned judge upon the bench and competent jurors of his neighbors who may by act of Congress be authorized to hear and determine his case?

It is no inconvenience to the company or corporation to appear in the courts of the State. It has an agent wherever the line runs, and the State courts will have no jurisdiction except in counties through which their lines run. Their agent is there, their land, their line, their property is there, and they can go into the courts of the State and have the question adjudicated as between them and the shipper. But the citizen must be inconvenienced to go 150 miles to try his case in a Federal court in order, as the gentleman says, "to secure uniformity." I do not say that the gentleman has no confidence in the State courts. suppose he has, and so supposing I can see no reason why he should wish to force a citizen to go away from home for justice when it is conceded that he can there get a fair and speedy trial. Uniformity will be attained by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, for when once that court decides a question the rule established will be observed everywhere. Now, the House has voted already four or five times on this question and always in favor of the proposition. There has never been a vote at the other end of the Capitol upon it, and I appeal to those gentlemen who believe that it is the right of the citizen to have a court of easy access, to stand by the amendment put upon the bill by the House, and vote down the proposition of the gen-tleman from Massachusetts to recede; and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I hope the gentleman will permit me one moment.

Mr. CRISP. I withdraw it.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia must have overlooked or misunderstood what I said, but the gentleman from Georgia knows that my contention in this House, and my contention many years before I came to this House, has been in favor in all proper cases of giving to the State courts jurisdiction, and limiting the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. But what I did say, and what the gentleman did not answer, and that can not be answered, is that to give the State courts jurisdiction in these cases is simply to lengthen the litigation rather than to shorten it, and to multiply the litigation rather than to lessen it. He answered another question which is not in the case, and did not answer that which I put.

Mr. CRISP. I think the gentleman's question has been answered, and I demand the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House recede from its amendment numbered 7.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 78.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House further insist and request another conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the conferees announced on the part of the House were, Mr. CRISP, Mr. ANDERSON of Iowa, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCREARY. Before the House takes any action upon that motion I hope the gentleman from Missouri will yield to me a single moment in order that I may ask the House to disagree to the amendments of the Senate on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and ask for a conference.

Mr. CLARDY. I will withhold the motion for that purpose. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a conference.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let them be read. Mr. McCREARY. I will make an explanation to the gentleman from New Jersey about some of the amendments. There is one amendment in the bill which proposes to appropriate $100,000 for the matter of the occupation of Pago Pago. There was an amendment added to the naval appropriation bill on Saturday covering that amendment. There are a number of other small amendments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. McCREARY. There are a number of other matters.

The question was taken; and the House non-concurred in the Senate amendments, and agreed to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House, Mr. McCreary, Mr. Hooker, and Mr. Hitt.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HATCH. I ask, by unanimous consent, gentlemen having reports from committees may be permitted to file them by handing them in to the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

FOREST CITY AND WATERTOWN BAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GIFFORD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 6700, a bill (H. R. 12497) granting the right of way to the Forest City and Watertown Railroad Company through the Sioux Indian reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 6700 was reported back with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

YANKTON AND MISSOURI VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

NICARAGUA GANAL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has called up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime conference report on the bill (H. R. 1305) to incorporate the Random Canal Company of Nicaragua.

During the reading of the conference report,
Mr. COBB said: I desire to raise the question of consideration.
Mr. CLARDY. The report of the committee of conference has already been printed in the RECORD, and I ask by unanimous consent that its reading be now dispensed with.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The Clark read the report in full.

The Clerk read the report in full.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the statement demanded?

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been read once and printed twice. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of it be waived.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration against the report. My purpose, however, is not exactly to raise the question of consideration, but rather to raise a question for the Chair as to whether or not this conference committee have made such a statement whether or not this conference committee have made such a statement accompanying their report as is required under Rule XXIX of the House. I insist that the statement made by the committee to accompany their report is not such a statement as the rule requires; that therefore there is no statement accompanying the report, and consequently that the report is not now in a condition to be considered by the House. That is the point that I desire to make if the Chair will That is the point that I desire to make if the Chair will the House. hear me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not read the statement submitted by the managers of the conference on the part of the House, and for the purpose of deciding this question it is not necessary for the Chair to do so, because it is not the province of the Chair to decide whether the statement is sufficient or not. The Rules of the House require every committee when it reports a bill or a resolution to accompany it with a written report, and Rule XXIX, to which the gentleman from Alabama refers, requires the managers of a conference on the part of the House to accompany their conference report with a statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House as to the effect of the agreement which the conferees have reached. Now, it is not for the Chair to say whether a report made by a committee is a sufficient report or not, or whether a statement submitted by the conferees is sufficient or not. That is a matter for the House, and the House may refuse to consider a measure because it is not satisfied with the report or the statement that has been submitted.

Mr. COBB. Is it not the province of the Chair to decide whether or not the rule of the House has been obeyed in the matter of making the statement required by the rule?

The SPEAKER. That would compel the Chair to decide upon the contents and the merits of the report or statement. The Chair might think it was wholly insufficient, while other members might think it was entirely sufficient, and vice versa. In other words, if the managers of the conference upon the part of the House actually submit a statement which purports to be in accordance with the rule, then it is for the House itself to say whether that statement is sufficient or not.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not required under Rule XXIX that a conference committee shall make a statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House of the effect of every individual proposition or amendment embraced in the conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is.
Mr. COBB. Now, if that be true, and if the statement made by the conferees conveys no information as to the effect of any one of the propositions embraced in the conference report, is not that a violation of the rule, such a violation of the rule as amounts to no statement upon that particular item of the conference report? Now, I submit to the Chair that this statement contains absolutely no information in regard to the effect of the individual propositions contained in the conference report, and inasmuch as it gives no information as to the effect of the individual propositions, this report is in effect presented to the House without any accompanying statement at all from the committee of conference. I submit, therefore, whether the Chair is not called upon to pass upon that, and say whether or not the "statement" of the committee of conference contains what the rule requires as to each and every separate individual proposition contained in a conference re-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can see where his argument would lead. It would become the duty of the Chair in every case to examine the measure under consideration, to examine the report made upon it, and to decide upon the contents and merits of the report. The Chair might think that the report in any given case stated exactly the effect of every amendment, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] might think that it did not. The gentleman might think that it stated just the contrary of what would be the true effect. So there would be no end to the controversy. The House itself must decide whether or not the statement presented by the conferees affords the House sufficient information to act upon the conference report, and the only way to reach that decision as the Chair has held frequently heretofore is to reach that decision, as the Chair has held frequently heretofore, is to raise the question of consideration; that is to say, when any statement at all is presented it is for the House to determine whether it is a sufficient statement or not. If there is no statement presented, then the Chair will hold that the rule has not been complied with.

Mr. COBB. My point is that in reference to certain individual propositions there is nothing embraced in this statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will pardon the Chair for a mo-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will pardon the Chair for a moment. Suppose the managers should report that the effect of a certain amendment would be so and so, when in fact its effect would be entirely contrary. Could the Chair on that ground rule out the statement?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; not if the committee discussed the effect of the amendment at all. But when the committee says absolutely nothing in regard to individual propositions the case is different. I raise the question of consideration on this report.

Mr. CLARDY. I want to say a word—
The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is not debatable.
Mr. CLARDY. Then I will ask to have the statement of the House conferees read. It embraces a specific statement of all the facts, and has not yet been read to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. COBB. I would be glad to call attention to those points which think have not been met.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement of the House conferees as already published in the RECORD. Before the reading was concluded, Mr. COBB said: Mr. Speaker, I did not make this objection in any captious spirit or to delay the proceedings of the House, but in the ut-most good faith. I would have been glad to have an opportunity to state the point I intended to make. But I do not care to obstruct the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] asks to have the statement read.

Mr. COBB. He insisted I asked it; but I did not.

Mr. CLARDY. It had to be submitted to the House, and the House had to pass upon it.

The SPEAKER. Is the further reading demanded?

Mr. COBB. I could readily have called attention to one simple point which I desired to present. I withdraw the question of consideration.

Mr. Nelson addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], having presented the conference report, is, according to the practice, entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ought perhaps to call the attention of the House to the changes in the House amendments, as proposed by the report, and to state briefly the reasons which have influenced the managers in assenting to them. I wish to say in the outset that, regarding the action of the House in adopting the amendments (on which the votes were taken by yeas and nays) in the nature of an instruction, we endeavored to retain, and I think we have succeeded in retaining, the essential features of the more important ones.

From their disagreement to the first amendment striking out the clause authorizing the company to pay stock for property and concessionary rights, and inserting a provision requiring all stocks, bonds, and other securities to be issued from the company's office in New York, and declaring that such stocks, bonds, and securities should be disposed of only for cash, the Senate conferees recede, with an amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:
That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the words proposed to be stricken out and the words proposed to be inserted, the following:
"May issue stock to the amount of the just value of such estate, property, and rights, and for work and labor done or materials provided in the execution of the work of constructing said ship-canal; and stock issued for these purposes shall be deemed paid-up stock, and shall not be liable to any further calls or assessments."

Mr. CLARDY. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, makes it clear that the company may issue stock for work and labor done and materials used in the construction of the canal as well as for the concessionary rights acquired from Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Taken in connection with the second and third sections of the bill, it is a reasonable guard against the issue of stock except for value; and it carries out the view I expressed in the consideration of the measure, that stock should only be issued in the consideration of the measure, that stock should only be issued for property, rights of property, concessionary rights, and for money actually paid in. The effect of the House amendment would have been to restrict the issuance of stock to purchasers for cash only. It occurred to your committee that this was, perhaps, an unreasonable restriction, and that there was no good reason why the company should be precluded from paying stock for property used to construct the canal, or from issuing bonds to persons undertaking to build it, provided that the persons furnishing the material and proposing to do the work were willing to precive their new in stocks and bonds. It can work were willing to receive their pay in stocks and bonds. It can not be objected, Mr. Speaker, that a fabulous amount of stock may be issued; for if the projectors of this great enterprise are to derive any benefits from it, such benefits must come from the stock, every increase of which will lessen its value.

The stock will represent the value of the canal company's property with the bonded indebtedness upon it. The smaller the bonded in-debtedness the more valuable will be the stock. The smaller the amount of stock passing from the control of the incorporators the more valuable will be that which remains in their possession.

It was suggested, and, as we thought, with reason, that this right, which belongs to all corporations of this character, to pay stock for property necessary to carry out the purposes of their creation should not be denied this company.

From their disagreement to the second amendment of the House the Senate conferees also recede with the following amendments: Inserting, before the word "liabilities," in line 71, the word "pecuniary," and striking out, in line 77, the words "or otherwise," and the proviso at the end of the section which requires that the amendment shall be printed on the stock, bonds, and other obligations of the company. The propriety of the two verbal amendments will, I think, be readily seen. I do not suppose, Mr. Speaker, it was the purpose of the House to do more than to protect the Government against pecuniary liability; but it has been suggested that it was the object of the House to go further and, in effect, after incorporating the company, to denationalize the incorporators.

The Panama Railroad Company was organized under the laws of New Granada, but because that road was planned by American engineers and built by Americans with American money we have on more occasions than one dispatched a fleet to the Isthmus to protect our citizens in the enjoyment of their franchise and property. And I trust, sir, the time may never come when the United States will be willing to withhold their protection from an American citizen wherever he may Once an American, always an American!

I think, too, the propriety of our action in agreeing to strike out the proviso will on reflection become equally obvious. Men are presumed to understand the law governing the contracts they make, and this presumption is not a violent one when applied to persons who have money to lend or to invest in corporate stocks. Without the amendment negativing the liability of the United States the Government would not be liable, as no government by the simple act of incorporation becomes responsible for the debts, default, or miscarriage of the corporation it creates.

poration it creates.

No man lends money to one person expecting another, not a party to the contract, to pay it. No man lends money to a corporation and takes a bond for its payment expecting the Government creating the corporation to pay the bond. But to make assurance doubly sure, and for the purpose of preventing, or at least, I suspect, for the purpose of preventing, so far as it could be done, the company from applying to some future Congress for relief from financial embarrassment, the House adorted the amendment of the centleman from Indiana, which in antesome future Congress for relief from financial embarrassment, the House adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which in apt, exact, and explicit language declares that the United States are not directly or indirectly, expressly or by implication, liable for any of the debts or contracts which may be made or entered into by this company.

Then follows the proviso requiring the law to be printed on every share of stock or every bond, and on every contract the company may make or enter into.

make or enter into.

It occurs to us, Mr. Speaker, this proviso might be construed to mean more than it does mean. It is an unusual one. I think I can say it is a unique one; and if this bill passes with the proviso in it the charter will stand alone in the library as a monument to the superior caution of the American Congress.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that it might be construed to mean even more than it does mean. A person who should apply to purchase stock, and, after examining the face of the certificate, should read on the reverse side thereof, "Caveat emptor" ("Let the purchaser beware"), would be very apt to beware, and would be most likely to go elsewhere in quest of stock to invest his money in. And then I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is sufficient if we exclude the possibility of the Government's liability, without advertising on every share of stock, on every bond, on every contract, on every piece of paper issued by the company, our belief that this magnificent commercial enterprise will fail, and that the investors in stocks and bonds will lose every dollar they put into

From their disagreement to the third amendment the conferees on the part of the Senate recede with an amendment which consists in reproducing from page 3 of the printed bill the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], requiring all stocks, bonds, and other securities to be issued from the office of the company in the city of New York.

The fourth amendment is a very important one, and one to which we gave considerable attention in the committee. From that amendment the conferees on the part of the Senate recede with an amendment striking out the amendment which constitutes now a section of the bill and inserting a new section in its stead. I call the attention of the House to the parts of the amendment which appear modified in the amendment agreed on in conference and to the clauses which are omitted The first clause of this amendment provides that-

No certificates for stock shall be issued till at least 10 per cent, of the same shall be fully paid for in money at the par value of said stock and the money deposited in the treasury of said company.

According to the terms of the concession the company is required to pay to the Republic of Nicaragua 6 per cent. of all the bonds and stocks issued by it. Six per cent. of $100,000,000, the amount of the capital issued by it. Six per cent. of $100,000,000, the amount of the capital stock, would be $6,000,000; and 10 per cent. of the latter sum would be $600,000 that this company would be compellable to pay to Nicaragua under this amendment before it could avail itself of the concession. I am sure that neither the gentleman who offered the amendment nor the House intended to impose this additional burden upon the company

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Let me ask the gentleman a question. I want to understand this. Do you mean to say that of all the money paid in on the stock, whether it be 10 per cent. or 100 per cent., it would be necessary to pay so much more over, of the money paid in, to Nicaragua?

Mr. CLARDY. I mean this: The amendment provides that no certificate shall be issued unless 10 per cent. be paid in cash. The contificate shall be issued unless 10 per cent. be paid in cash. The contract between Nicaragua and the company can be discharged by paying the whole amount in certificates of stock. Under the amendment, however, the company can not avail itself of that concession without Nicaragua paying $600,000 in cash on the capital stock of one hundred millions, and as it is not probable that Nicaragua would pay that sum in addition to making the concession of lands, the incorporators would be obliged to pay it into the company's treasury.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Without paying that much in money?

Mr. CLARDY. In money. How could they issue certificates of stock unless they paid the money? We declare that they shall issue no certificates of stock unless they are paid for in cash. The contract between Nicaragua and the company enables the company to discharge between Nicaragua and the company enables the company to discharge its obligation by paying Nicaraguain the company's stock. This amendment would prohibit that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the obligation of the company to Nicaragua?

Mr. CLARDY. To pay 6 per cent. of all stock and bonds issued by the company.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Let me ask another question. Under the amendment proposed, and that you are now criticising, it is stated that no stock shall be issued until 10 per cent. is paid. Is it not true under the amendment as you have amended it that you require 10 per cent. to be paid in cash?

Mr. CLARDY. The amendment to which the gentleman refers, and which was agreed on in conference, provides "that no certificates for stock, except as otherwise provided, shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the par value thereof be paid, etc.;" that is to say, full-paid stock may be issued as provided in the first amendment, but upon stock sold for money 10 per cent. at least shall be paid into the company's treasury, and thus enable the company to carry out its contract with Nicaragua by paying the whole amount in stock. The difference is that in one case you require a partial payment in cash and in the other that in one case you require a partial payment in cash and in the other the stock can liquidate the indebtedness.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Can the company discharge that obligation under the concession by payment in the shape of certificates of stock, or does the concession require it to be paid in

Mr. CLARDY. The concession requires it to be paid in stock, but the House amendment requires that no certificates of stock shall be issued until 10 per cent. of it shall be paid in money.

Mr. SPINOLA. As I understand it, before any stock can be issued 6 per cent must be paid in cash, which would be on a hundred millions of capital $6,000,000, and it would require the payment of $600,000 of this to Nicaragua to secure the concession.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Could they not obviate that by issuing stock receipts until the money is paid in?

Mr. CLARDY. But no certificate can be issued unless 10 per cent. is paid. The debt to Nicaragua is due on December 1 of this year, and the stock must be paid by that time to meet that obligation.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Issue your stock to them.
Mr. CLARDY. You can not issue stock under your amendment. Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. They can if they pay 10 per cent. of it in cash.

Mr. CLARDY. If the incorporators will pay as a bonus to the Nicaraguan Government $600,000 to be paid back into the company's treasury, they can carry out the contract. But who wants to impose that burden or hardship upon them?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Am I correct in understanding that the amendment of the Senate will enable the company, instead of pay-the amendment of the Senate will enable the company, instead of paying to Nicaragua stock for which cash had been received, and which represented cash, to pay only water? Is that correct?

Mr. CLARDY. That is not correct; but if the House amendment were adopted there might hereafter be some complaint of watered stock. There is another clause in the amendment which goes further and declares that no payment on account of the capital of said company shall be made except in money and this I fear wight received the declares that no payment on account of the capital of said company shall be made except in money, and this, I fear, might prevent the company from availing itself of the concession at all. It has been decided in Missouri and in other States, and it is the law, that the lands acquired by a railroad company by virtue of the right of eminent domain constitute a part of the capital of such railway company. It might, I apprehend, be held that the lands mentioned in the concession, after they shall have been surveyed and allotted to the company, constitute part of the canal company's capital. They are not money, and I apprehend there is some doubt whether the company could accept any part of the concessionary rights from the Governments of cept any part of the concessionary rights from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. It may be that the clause is susceptible of some other construction, but it is fairly susceptible of the one I give it.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the gentleman this question: Does not the Government of Nicaragua concede to this company somewhere about one million acres of land?

Mr. CLARDY. It does.
Mr. SCOTT. Does it not give to it also the exclusive right to build this canal under this charter, and is not this 6 per cent. which this canal company is to pay to Nicaragua the consideration of value for which the million acres of land, and the franchise that they get from Nicaragua, and the right of going through there are given, and in the place of this being water, as some gentleman said on my right, does it not simply take the place of money? Are not the million acres of land and the franchise which are purchased or which the company proposes to pay for well worth the amount they are going to pay for them?

Mr. CLARDY. Yes, sir; that is well stated. The next clause of the amendment offered by my friend from Minnesota prohibits the assignment of any certificates of stock until the shares are fully paid for. We are told in the law-books that dominion over a thing implies the right to dispose of it at pleasure, and the right to dispose of corporate stock or of any other species of property is incident of common right to the ownership of it. Who can be injuriously affected if the owners of stock partially paid for are allowed to dispose of it? Certainly not the stockholders, the corporation, or the creditors of the latter. The stock proper never passes out of the custody of the corporation, but remains in the possession and under the control of the company, and when stock is purchased a certificate is issued, which is evidence of the ownership of the stock; and when a purchaser wishes to dispose of the stock he assigns such certificate, in writing on the back of it, accompanying it with the power of attorney authorizing the transfer on the books of the company. When the originate up and a new certificate issued. When the original certificate is presented it is

If at the time of the assignment the assignee is insolvent, or if there has been any fraud or collusion between the assignee and the assignor, the latter does not escape his liability to pay the unpaid balance on the stock, but he is answerable individually for whatever remains unpaid, and the stock may, at the suit of a creditor of the corporaanpaid, and the stock may, at the suit of a creditor of the corpora-tion, be sequestered in a court of equity, constituting as it does a trust fund for the payment of the corporation's debts. Is there any reason why a man who has twenty shares of stock, upon which he has paid 75, 50, 25, or even 10 per cent., should not be permitted to sell ten of his shares in order that he may meet the demand of the corporation for the payment of the other ten?

I would like to inquire, too, if it would be just or fair or proper for us to give to the corporation representing the strong stockholders the power to confiscate the stock of the weaker ones because they might be unable to meet the demands made by the corporation upon them?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Where is any such authority given? Mr. CLARDY. That is an authority which belongs as an incident to all corporations.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That authority would exist under your amendment just as much as it does here, would it not?

Mr. CLARDY. Yes, sir; but under our amendment the owner of the stock, if unable to meet the demands of the company, could sell it; under yours he can not.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Why not? Mr. CLARDY. This amendment prohi Mr. CLARDY. This amendment prohibits the transfer of stock until it is fully paid for. Now, I say that by this provision prohibiting an assignment you put it in the power of the corporation, when the stock has not been fully paid for, to make demands upon the stockholders, and in the event of the failure of any of them to meet those demands, the stock of those who can not respond may be sold. It is in that way that you give the superior advantage to the corporation and to the strong stockholders. I wish the Clerk to read now the fourth amendment as agreed to by the committee of conference.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Is not your argument based on the idea that the subscriber subscribes knowing that he will not be able to pay for his stock, and would not this amendment prevent subscriptions of parties who knew they would not be able to pay?

Mr. CLARDY. I do not know about that, but I do know that no one can tell what a day may bring forth, and that men who are able to meet their obligations to-day may not be able to meet them to-morrow. I say, therefore, that it would be an extraordinary thing to deny to the holders of this stock the right to dispose of it at pleasure.

Mr. HEARD. If this amendment should remain in the bill, and if the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota should obtain, then if a man who subscribed for the stock and paid upon it, say, 50 cents on the dollar, or any other sum, should die before paying the balance, would not his administrator be obliged to pay up the stock in full before he could dispose of it?

Mr. CLARDY. Of course he would, and if he could not pay it up in full he could not get the benefit of it.

Mr. SCOTT. Under this amendment if I should subscribe for a thousand shares of that stock, and should pay $50,000 upon it, and should become insolvent after I had paid that money, my $50,000 would be forfeited and would be valueless to my creditors, because under this amendment there is absolutely no power to transfer the stock to anybody until it is full paid; and that would be so even though other parties might be willing to pay $75,000 for my stock.

Mr. CHIPMAN. You would not get the benefit of it, nor your heirs

Mr. SCOTT. No. I will repeat that again, Mr. Speaker. I say that if I had subscribed for $100,000 of this stock and had paid $50,-000 upon it, and subsequently had become bankrupt and made an assignment, then, although that stock might have appreciated in value to $75,000, yet not one dollar of it could go to the benefit of my creditors to relieve me from my liabilities, because, under the provision as adopted in the House, it could not be assigned legally to any one. Would any sane man subscribe for the stock or invest his money in it with such a condition as that attached to it?

Mr. CLARDY. No; of course nobody would buy such stock. Mr. Speaker, I ask now to have read amendment No. 4 as the conference committee propose to modify it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all the words proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof:

"SEO.3. That no certificates for stock, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the par value thereof shall be fully paid for in money, and such money deposited in the treasury of said company; and there shall be at least $1,000,000 in money paid on said subscriptions into the treasury of said company within one year from the passage of this act; and said company is hereby prohibited from returning or repaying any part of the money so paid. No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders, or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation, Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject the charter to forfeiture."

Mr. SPINOLA. That I understond is the amendment agreed upon?

Mr. SPINOLA. That, I understand, is the amendment agreed upon? Mr. CLARDY. That is the amendment agreed upon.

Mr. PEEL. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me to make a motion now to take a recess until 7.30 this evening, when there is to be a session under the special order.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the motion of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is to take a recess until 7.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is to take a recess until 7.30 p. m. under the special order.

Mr. PAYSON. That is all right.

Mr. CLARDY. I do not yield the floor, Mr. Speaker, but will resume it to-morrow. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that he has twenty-eight minutes of his time remaining.

of his time remaining.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. If the House should now take a recess in accordance with the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas, will the evening session be devoted to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

JOHN R. BROWN.

Mr. GEAR. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2724) for the relief of John R. Brown be recommitted with the accompanying report to that committee.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas that the House take a recess—

Mr. SPINOLA. The gentleman, as I understand, yields the floor for a moment-

ra moment— [Cries of "Regular order!"]
The SPEAKER protempore. The regular order is demanded, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Peel, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. DOCKERY as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 4, 1889. Hon, A. M. Dockery is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at this JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker

Hon, John B. Clark, Clerk of the House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order under which the House meets this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That on Monday next when the House takes a recess and Wednesday the House take a recess at 5 o'clock p.m. until 7.30 p.m. (on each of said evenings the House shall adjourn not later than 10.30 p.m.) for the consideration of business reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RIGHT OF WAY TO ST. LOUIS AND SAN FRANCISCO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes, and to ask that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and the conference requested by the Senate agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Senate will be non-concurred in and the conference requested granted.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to have these amendments read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 25, 1888.

In the Senate of the United States, September 25, 1888.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 6512) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes, do pass with the following amendments:

Page 3, line 2, strike out "granted" and insert "provided for."

Page 3, strike out lines 3 to 21 inclusive; and after line 21 insert:

"Sec. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein anthorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken."

In section 3, line 10, after the word "referces," strike out "to be appointed by the President" and insert "one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company," so as to read:

"In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referces, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said ra

Page 8, strike out lines 20 and 21, and after line 21 insert:
"Sec. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof."

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to inquire whether in this bill, either as passed by the House or as amended by the Senate, there is any provision requiring the consent of the Indians to this right of way.

Mr. PEEL. There is not. In that respect the bill is like all the other bills providing for a right of way through the Indian country. I presume the gentleman understands that we simply ask a non-concurrence in these amendments and a conference with the Senate.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand that; but while it is true that the Government of the United States or a State government possesses the right of eminent domain and may determine questions in regard to the condemnation of land, yet as to the Indian reservations, it is provided in all the treaties, as I understand, that these roads shall not be built through those reservations without the consent of the Indians. If this bill contains nothing requiring such consent to this right of way, I think the conference committee ought to be instructed to see that such a provision is inserted.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend from Mississippi that there never has been a bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs since I have been a member of the House providing for the consent of the Indians to a right of way through that country, because it proceeds upon a different theory. There is nothing but the treaties of 1866 which would seem to warrant that idea, but the theory upon which Congress proceeded in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and in this Congress is that the right of eminent domain resided in Congress. There is a clause paying them so much for the land, and if they are not satis fied with the award that is made, they can object to the damages awarded them, which are to be assessed by a board of arbitration, and they can go to the court just as any citizen owning lands would have the right to go under similar circumstances.

It gives them an opportunity to get full value for all the damages growing out of this right of way, and that is all that any citizen could receive through whose lands the right of way is granted; and I do not see, therefore, why Congress should hesitate to apply as rigid a rule here as it would where commerce is facilitated by a right of way over the lands of individuals in a State. I have never known a bill to pass through Congress with such a clause as that suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, and I hope at this late hour it will not be the theory upon which we are to act. It will simply be the cause of a great deal of trouble without resulting in any good.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to ask the gentleman how many miles this road runs through the Territory?

Mr. PEEL. I am not able to answer exactly that question. I will state, however, that it contemplates leaving a point called Rogers, in my own county, 6 miles east of the county seat of Benton County, passes through the western border of the country and into the Terri-Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is it as much as 200 miles?

Mr. PEEL. I think not; but I am not positive as to the distance.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The reason I ask is that I notice this bill makes a grant to this company of a strip 200 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length every 10 miles for station-houses, etc. I would like to know the reason that has been done?

Mr. PEEL. It has been considered, in the judgment of the committee, no more than is really necessary, because the other provisions in the bill specify that none of this land can be used for other than railroad purposes; and therefore it can only be used for station-houses, side-tracks, etc. It is the exact amount, I think, which has been granted in every right-of-way bill which has been passed in the last three Congresses, and besides that the company has to pay for the land that they get.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It only gives the right of way for station-houses and for outlets.

Mr. PEEL. That is all.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And not to be used for any other pur-

Mr. PEEL. That is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It amounts to this, that under the guise of an extra amount of land to be used for depot purposes they get a strip of land 200 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length in addition to the 100 feet granted for the right of way.

Mr. PEEL. No, not in addition to it. The right of way is 100 feet except at these points, distant from each other 10 miles, for station purposes. This width is increased to 300 feet for a distance of 3,000 feet at these points.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Do I understand the 100 feet right-ofway proper is included in the 200 feet?

Mr. PEEL. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And only 200 feet wide? Mr. PEEL. That is all. Mr. HOOKER. For how great a distance?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. More than half a mile.

Mr. PEEL. Two hundred feet in width for 3,000 feet in length where the stations are to be established.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Senate will be non-concurred in and a conference committee agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. PEEL, Mr. HARE, and Mr. PERKINS as the conferees on the part of the House.

LEAVENWORTH AND RIO GRANDE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, is in the same condition as to the Senate amendments; and if there be no objection the same order will be made as in the preceding bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask for the reading of the amendments. The amendments of the Senate were read at length.

Mr. PEEL. I ask the House to non-concur in the amendments and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. HARE, and Mr. PERKINS as conferees on the part of the House.

SIOUX RESERVATION, DAKOTA.

Mr. PEEL. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. PEEL. Iask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill and proceed to consider it.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to that, and ask for the reading of the bill in full.

During the reading of the bill, Mr. HOLMES said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, no. It is being read, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of amendment, now, is it not? If this is the first reading of the bill, then I do not object, and hope that it may be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOKER. I think the bill had better be read.

Mr. HOOKER. I think the bill had better be read.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order for a gentleman to make any motion whatever when he is outside the bar of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has submitted no motion. The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Are we now proceeding in the House as in Committee of the Whole?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are not.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I suppose this bill should have its first consideration in committee.

eration in committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the House Calendar; but it is evident from the reading of its provisions that if the point of order is made that it shall receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, the point of order, if insisted upon, must be sustained.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOOKER. I think we had better have it considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the centleman from Arkansas to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole House

Mr. HOOKER. I object. Mr. PEEL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. ROGERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the

The CHARMAN. The House is in Committee of the whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The Clerk read the first section.

Mr. CUTCHEON. As the first six sections seem simply to fix the boundary of the reservation, I think that they may be considered as

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection general debate will be considered as closed, and the bill will be read for amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I was simply going to ask unanimous consent that the first six sections, which define the boundaries, be considered as read.

Mr. MORRILL. I have an amendment to offer.
Mr. HOOKER. I think the gentleman in charge of this bill ought to explain it.

Mr. PEEL. I was about to explain some of the features of the bill. It is well remembered, I presume, by the members of the committee that during the last session of this Congress a bill for the same purpose as this was passed by both Houses, and received the approval of the President, but failed to receive the approval of the Indians.

The material difference between that bill and the one under consideration is the point that I will speak of now. The other bill provided that for the lands to be taken under the homestead law the settler was to pay 50 cents an acre in addition to the fees of the office. That sum went to the funds of the Indians. This bill requires that for all lands taken under the homestead law in the first three years after the lands are open to settlement the settlers shall pay, in addition to the fees, $1.25 an acre. For all taken in the next two years thereafter, after the three years, 75 cents an acre, and for all from five years up to ten years at 50 cents an acre; and at the end of ten years, all that are not then taken the Government accepts at 50 cents an acre. So that there can be none of the land, which is said to be 11,000,000 acres, left upon the hands of the Indians. That was one of the material objections they made to the other bill; that under it the best of the lands would be taken at 50 cents an acre and the bad lands left unsold. From the best estimate that can be made, the sale of these lands will produce between eight and eleven million dollars.

The other bill also required the expense of the sale and survey to ome out of the proceeds of the land. Under this bill the Government pays that. So that under this bill they get the entire proceeds of the sale of every acre that is sold. As I have stated, if after ten years any is left the Government takes it at 50 cents per acre; so that they get it

Mr. PAYSON. Does this require the consent of the Indians?

Mr. PATSON. Does this require the consens of the Mr. PEEL. It does not.
Mr. PATSON. The other bill did.
Mr. PEEL. This brings the matter pretty well up to the demand made by the Indians. Last year they conferred with the Land Commissioner, and afterwards there were about sixty chiefs who were brought to Washington to confer with the Secretary of the Interior. The understanding was when they came here they would not ask more than 50 cents an acre, and by that means receive about five or six million dollars, but when they came here a portion of them demanded $1.25. This bill came as near up to their wishes in that respect as we felt warranted in going. I am free to say that I think it makes but little difference to the Government whether we pay a dollar or a dollar and a half an acre, or whether we pay ten or twenty millions. We have already expended over $30,000,000 since the treaty of 1868, in twenty years, for the purpose of making them self-sustaining, but there is not an Indian out of the 23,000 who is not drawing rations from the Government.

Therefore, under the policy heretofore pursued there is no telling how Therefore, under the policy heretofore pursued there is no telling how much money it will take. In fact, in my judgment, under the old theory it will never be accomplished, or at least it will take $40,000,-000 under any policy that can be adopted to make them self-sustaining, put them upon their feet, and make them part and parcel of the community. Therefore I do not think the amount of the consideration is a material question. If any gentlemen desire to make it greater I will not object, so far as I am concerned, or feel that the Government has lost anything.

Now, in regard to the submission clause, the committee have given

Now, in regard to the submission clause, the committee have given in the report their reason for leaving that clause out. The twelfth clause of the treaty of 1868 requires that none of these lands shall be ceded unless three-fourths of the male adults assent to it. It fixes no age, but says "male adults." From the report of the commission that went out there, and from the best information that we could obtain, we found that inclosed of archaettriant that we could obtain, we found that instead of submitting the matter to the Indians we would really be submitting it to "powers behind the throne," to powers much greater than the Indians themselves.

According to the report of the commission, they never could get to the rank and file of the Indians. Certain chiefs who hold position amongst them got between the members of the commission and the rank and file, so that the great body of the Indians could not be reached, and no measure will reach them until the chiefs are settled with according to the old rule of adjusting these matters, because they will hold the Indians off and keep them down and not let them even consider the matter. One reason that has operated against this proposition, as we have been told—I have heard this denied and I do not astion, as we have been told—I have heard this defiled and I do not assert it as a fact—one of the reasons, as we have been told, is that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has a large amount of land acquired under a railroad grant, which land is now opened up for sale, and, as a matter of course, as business men they want to get all they can for their lands, and they know that if this bill should become a law and should open up 11,000,000 of acres in Southern Dakota, in a more favorable location than that of the railroad lands, then their lands would be kent out of the market for several years to come. Whether would be kept out of the market for several years to come. Whether that is a fact or not I do not know, but we have been so informed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman permit a question at this point?

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir. Mr. CUTCHEON. Did the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or any other party appear before the committee, by attorney or otherwise, to oppose this bill?

Mr. PEEL. They did not. I only state that as an impression which we obtained, I think, from the commission who went out there. But there is another railroad there, I believe, which ends at Pierre. Under this bill if the grant which they have obtained from the Indians is ratified they will have to extend their road to the Black Hills. As I understand it, that company does not now want to extend its line to the Black Hills, because it makes connection with another railroad that reaches the Hills through Nebraska, and so it gets the trade anyway. But if this bill shall pass they will be compelled to extend the line within twelve months. Therefore, of course, they are not in favor of this bill or of any measure opening up this reservation.

But the greatest obstacle is found in certain squaw-men and certain chiefs who own large herds of cattle and are reaping large fortunes by raising those cattle on the common property. As a matter of course they do not want this bill to pass or to have the reservation opened, because that will destroy their monopoly, and by force of circumstances they are able to control the Indians. For these reasons we do not believe that any bill that can be prepared will receive the sanction of three-fourths of the rank and file of the Indians, unless resort is had to bribery of the men who control them. If that is true, then the question presented seriously to our committee is this: Dealing with these people as the wards of the country—and the Supreme Court in three or four different decisions has given them that status—what is the duty of the guardian who has in charge the property of his ward?

I understand the rule to be that the guardian has the right to enlarge or increase the estate of the ward, but not to diminish it. Now, if our treaty with these wards contains a clause the execution of which would be to their detriment, shall we insist on doing them this damage? In our report we state our belief that where the execution of a clause of a treaty with these people would operate to their benefit we ought to adhere to it; but if such a course would be injurious to these uneducated and almost savage people who find it impossible to comprehend their own condition and the future that awaits them—if they are controlled or influenced by others, and are not acting under their own free will, and we find that carrying out that clause literally would continue these people in a state of savagery the question is should a continue these people in a state of savagery, the question is, should a government like ours adhere to the execution of such a provision? Or do we not take a more proper view of the question when we look to their interests?

Are we simply to dicker with them and seek to continue them in their present condition, or are we to try to improve their condition, looking towards individualizing them and making them citizens, so that the Indian question will disappear from the governmental machinery of this country, the Indians becoming citizens like the rest of our people? When the Government finds itself in such a position as this I understand it to be our policy to treat the property of these wards of the nation as the property of a ward would be treated by a guardian or by a court having control of its administration—to treat it in such a manner as will conduce to the best interests of the ward. a manner as will conduce to the best interests of the ward.

These are the main points of difference. They are practically all the differences which it is worth talking about. The other bill proposed to set apart a million dollars as a fund, out of which to start improvements, to organize schools, etc. This bill sets apart $2,000,000, which sum is to be refunded out of the sale of the lands.

Now, I simply want to make this proposition—and I do it in all sincerity and candor. I know we are here to-night without a quorum. If any gentleman has any serious objection to any part of this bill and amendments are desired, all I ask is that if after proper consideration and discussion of such amendments for a reasonable time gentlemen are not willing to be governed by the sentiment of those who are present here this evening, they will consent that the measure be passed over till to morrow, to be acted on by a full House, when a vote can be taken fairly and squarely; because, Mr. Chairman, if the judgment of this House is not in accord with that of the committee, we are ready to yield gracefully and accept its judgment instead of our own.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I see that the order under which we meet tonight provides also for a session on Wednesday night. Was it the purpose of the chairman of the committee to complete the consideration of this bill to-night?

Mr. PEEL. If possible we would like to do so, as there are several other bills which the committee desire to have considered after getting through with this measure. This bill is of very great importance to that whole western country. This large body of waste land now cuts off the entire commerce between that western country and Eastern Dakota, Missouri, Kansas, etc. No one, I presume, who knows anything about this matter believes that this large tract of waste land is of any value to the Indians at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice that on pages 25 and 26 of this bill it is provided that these three islands in the Missouri River shall be donated to the towns of Chamberlain, Pierre, and Niobrara—to be used, I be-lieve, as public parks. If I remember correctly the eastern line of the Sioux reservation is on the eastern side of the river-

Mr. PEEL. I understand so.
Mr. HOLMAN. So that all the islands are inside the Sioux reservation. Now, I do not notice in this bill any provision for compensating the Indians for those islands. Is there any?

Mr. PEEL. This bill, I will say to the gentleman, is in that respect exactly like the bill which was passed before. There is provision for the payment of the Indians for the improvements.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice that. If these islands are small and of little consequence, it is of course hardly necessary to take this matter into account; but one of them, I believe, is—

Mr. PEEL. I do not know exactly the size of those islands; but I will say to my friend that when we reach that part of the bill, if he desires to offer an amendment-

Mr. HOLMAN. My object was simply to inquire—
Mr. NELSON. In a report which I made to a former Congress there was a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs giving approximately the area of these islands. As this letter is very short I will read it:

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs,

Washington, March 19, 1886.

Sir: In reply to your informal request for information as to the area of certain islands in the Missouri and Niobrara Rivers belonging to the Great Sioux reservation, Dakota, namely, American Island, Farm Island, and Niobrara Island, I have to say that the first named, American Island, has an area of 545.88 acres; the second, Farm Island, is estimated to be 3 miles in length by from one-quarter to three-quarters of a mile in width.

I can give you no information in respect to the last named, Niobrara Island. It has never been surveyed, nor has Farm Island.

Very respectfully,

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

Niobrara Island is not a large island—perhaps 400 or 500 acres. Mr. HOOKER. We are informed by the gentleman from Arkansas Mr. HOOKER. We are informed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that this bill has been introduced in consequence of the failure of the bill of the last session of Congress. That bill provided for a commission in conformity with the treaty of 1868, made by a commission constituted on the part of the United States of Nathaniel G. Taylor, William T. Sherman, William S. Harney, John B. Sanborn, S. F. Tappan, C. C. Augur, and Alfred H. Terry, and of certain chiefs and headmen of the different tribes of Sioux Indians on the other part.

That bill at the last session of Congress provided for a commission

That bill at the last session of Congress provided for a commission, and that commission went to Dakota to treat with these Sioux Indians in order to get their consent. The treaty provided that the consent of the Indians should be obtained.

What, Mr. Chairman, is the changed condition of affairs which makes it necessary now to pass a bill without a provision requiring the consent of these Indians? It may be said this is done in order to obtain the consent of the Indians. They certainly failed to obtain it under the bill of the last session of Congress. What are the conditions at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress which did not exist at the first session? That bill received the sanction of the Committee on Indian Affairs in both Houses of Congress from the fact it contained that provision in conformity to the treaty with these Indians. Is there any reason why we should now have a bill introduced here which proposes

I ask again, Mr. Chairman, what is the changed condition of affairs which makes this necessary? Nothing apparently. It is a fact notorious that the commission was appointed to obtain the consent of the Indians in conformity to the treaty we made with these Indians twenty years ago, that they should retain possession of what remained to them of their immense territory, that it should never be taken away from them except under the form prescribed in that treaty of 1868. Now, them except under the form prescribed in that treaty of 1868. Now, the bill of the last session of Congress complied with that provision of the treaty and required as a prerequisite the consent of the Indians themselves. A commission was sent out, and it failed to obtain the consent of the Indians. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Peel], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, says that it failed because a certain chief stood in advance of the Indians and would not allow the commission to obtain their consent. We understand these Indians transact all their business through their chiefs, that their chiefs speak for them, that they assume to know the sentiment of the Indians better than anybody else.

better than anybody else.

Certainly it comes with bad grace from a government which conceded this question of ownership to ask that that stipulation of the treaty should be departed from; that now, driven by stress of weather, being unable to obtain the consent of the Indians by means of a commission, you propose to do it without their consent. I say that is in violation of the treaty, and I can see no reason why the bill should be introduced again in the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, when as late as the first session of this Congress a bill introduced from this same Committee on Indian Affairs conceded it to be necessary to get the consent of the Indians before we could make any acquisition of territory sent of the Indians before we could make any acquisition of territory from them.

That commission failed, and another resort is necessary by the Gov-That commission failed, and another resort is necessary by the Government to obtain the consent of those Indians. A large number of the chiefs of the various Sioux tribes were brought to the city of Washington at heavy expense to consult with the Secretary of the Interior. My honorable friend says it would make no difference to him whether you paid a few millions for this. It is well known that the Secretary of the Interior treated with these Indians, but was unable to make any agreement with them. They wanted a certain price for their lands. The original bill provided an amount which I do not now remember. What was it? Fifty cents an acre.

Mr. HOOKER. It provided a price of 50 cents an acre. That was the amount provided in the original bill. I thought so, but did not recollect it exactly. The Indians declined to take that. The commission failed to persuade them to give their consent to it. The delegation brought here, after conference with the officers of the Government, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs again failed to make any arrangement with them. It was understood they disagreed mainly on the price offered. The Indians insisted on the price offered in the first bill

That commission failed, and now we have introduced a bill here which proposes a violation in so many words, an absolute disregard of the very treaty which General Sherman and others in 1868 made with these Indians. I send to the Clerk's desk for the purpose of having read the twelfth article of that treaty to see what it was they agreed to with these Indians.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 12. No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described which may be held in common shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying and interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his rights to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in Article 6 of this treaty.

Mr. HOOKER. Now turn to Article 6 and see what it says. The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 6. If any individual belonging to said tribes of Indians, or legally incorporated with them, being the head of a family, shall desire to commence farming, he shall have the privilege to select, in the presence and with the assistance of the agent then in charge, a tract of land within said reservation, not exceeding 320 acres in extent, which tract, when so selected, certified, and recorded in the "land-book," as herein directed, shall cease to be held in common, but the same may be occupied and held in the exclusive possession of the person selecting it, and of his family, so long as he or they may continue to cultivate it.

Any person ever elections record over the high continue to cultivate it.

mon, but the same may be occupied and held in the exclusive possession of the person selecting it, and of his family, so long as he or they may continue to cultivate it.

Any person over eighteen years of age, not being the head of a family, may, in like manner, select and cause to be certified to him or her, for purposes of cultivation, a quantity of land not exceeding 80 acres in extent, and thereupon be entitled to the exclusive possession of the same as above directed.

For each tract of land so selected, a certificate, containing a description thereof and the name of the person selecting it, with a certificate indorsed thereon that the same has been recorded, shall be delivered to the party entitled to it by the agent, after the same shall have been recorded by him in a book, to be kept in his office, subject to inspection, which said book shall be known as the "Sloux Land-Book."

The President may, at any time, order a survey of the reservation, and, when so surveyed, Congress shall provide for protecting the rights of said settlers in their improvements, and may fix the character of the title held by each. The United States may pass such laws on the subject of alienation and descent of property between the Indians and their descendants as may be thought proper.

And it is further stipulated that any male Indians, over eighteen years of age, of any band or tribe that is or shall hereafter become a party to this treaty, who now is or who shall hereafter become a resident or occupant of any reservation or Territory not included in the tract of country designated and described in this treaty for the permanent home of the Indians, which is not mineral land, nor reserved by the United States for special purposes other than Indian occupation, and who shall have made improvements thereon of the value of $200 or more, shall be entitled to receive from the United States a patent for 160 acres of land including his said improvements thereon of the tract of othe legal subdivisions of the surveys of the public lands.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, by the provisions of the twelfth section of the treaty just read by the Clerk, that it requires the assent of three-fourths of the adult Sioux Indians before these lands can be taken. I presume the intelligent chairman of the committee, and the committee itself, understood that any bill which was introduced in the Congress of the United States which would expect to receive the approbation of both branches of Congress and the approval of the Executive should contain provisions in conformity to approval of the Executive should contain provisions in contentity to the treaty, and that it could not possibly succeed unless that provision was respected in the treaty by which these Indians were to hold the land not at the option of the Government alone, but in their own right, and by a title of which they could not be divested except by their own consent.

I say I presume it was in compliance with the provisions of the treaty and in respect thereto that the bill of the last session of Congress was introduced and passed, but failing to obtain the assent of the Indians this new proposition to take their lands without their consent is brought forward, and my chief objection to the bill is the sweeping provision of section 21, which provides—provision of section 21, which provides—

That all the lands in the Great Sioux reservation, outside of the separate reservations herein described, are hereby restored to the public domain, except American Island, Farm Island, and Niobrara Island, and shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead law (except section 2301 thereof) and under the law relating to town sites: Provided, That each settler, under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead acts, shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $1.25 per acre for all lands disposed of within the first three years after the taking effect of this act, and the sum of 75 cents per acre for all lands disposed of within the next two years following thereafter, and 50 cents per acre for the residue of the lands then undisposed of, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said sums, etc.

So that this section of the bill proposes an absolute violation of the treaty of 1868, and yet it requires the settler to pay for these lands the same amount that you would not pay the Indians for the lands when they were here to treat with you recently and made an offer of sale, as I am informed, at a certain price which the Government declined.

Now, the honorable chairman of the committee says that the question of a few dollars or a few million dollars paid by the Government for the land is a matter of little moment. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of very material moment when you come to consider the question of keeping the faith of the Government of the United States as expressed by the plain and solemn terms of this treaty with the Indians.

But surely, sir, if we are to have any regard at all for the compact entered into by the Government, and which your intelligent commission, with General Sherman at its head, succeeded in negotiating, as a great acquisition on the part of the Government; if we are, I say, to pay any respect to the plighted faith with the Indians under our pledges with them, we must get the consent of the Indians themselves before undertaking to get possession of their lands, and which they hold by the very terms of the treaty of 1868. That fact this committee knew at the first session of this Congress, or else they would not have provided for it in their bill framed at that session. What change, then, I ask again, what change has there been in the condition of affairs which makes it possible to do in this second session of the Fiftieth Congress that which the good faith we owed to the Indians under our treaty stipulations prohibited us from doing in the first session of this Congress? And why bring in arbitrary legislation now, which, in the last session of Congress, you did not think you could enact under your compacts and treaties with these tribes?

There may be difficulties about obtaining the assent of the Indians; but the chief difficulty seemed to be the fact that the Indians by some means or other have become apprised of the value of their lands and put a stipulated value upon them which the Government was unwilling to grant. The Government declined to take the lands at the price they affixed to them; but now it is proposed, in the face of the report of the two commissioners sent into the Territory to treat with the Indians at the agencies and endeavor to negotiate respecting their rights, to take more arbitrary steps and fix this price upon the land without their consent. You failed to negotiate with them by the commission, although they were, as we find by reference to the report of the committee, "blanket Indians," without the claim of civilization which enlightens the balance of the world, although they seem at least to un-derstand what their interests are sufficiently well to decline an inade-quate compensation for the lands which the Government of the United States wanted to obtain.

If now the amount of payment to be given for the lands is, as we are told, a mere bagatelle, and amounts to nothing, why not obtain the consent of the Indians if the lands are as valuable to the United States and desirable for settlement as we are led to suppose them to be? Let us pay the Indians for them the price which they fix upon them, which price, I understand, they have expressed their willingness to take, and that is the price which you have proposed to charge the actual settlers for them after divesting the Indian title.

Mr. Chairman, I say therefore that this bill is directly in the teeth of the treaty, directly in the face of the solemn provisions of the agreement made with the Indians, and that the committee well understood at the first session of this Congress, or else they would not have made provision as they did in the then pending bill.

These constitute, in my opinion, insuperable objections to the bill in its present shape

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will submit a few brief observations to the committee on this question. There was a treaty with these same Sioux Indians in the fall of 1876 by a distinguished commission, of which George W. Manypenny, of Ohio, and Bishop Whip-ple, of Minnesota, were members. Under that treaty they relinquished a portion of the lands embraced in this reservation by the treaty of 1868. I do not know, but it occurs to me that there may be something in the agreement of 1876 bearing upon this question, and that the Indians at that time may have consented to some extent to waive the rights they possessed under the terms of the treaty of 1868

In 1875 a commission was sent in pursuance of the act of Congress to treat with the Indians, and Mr. Allison, of Iowa, a member of the Senate then, as he is now, was chairman of the commission. They endeavored to get the consent of the Sioux to the relinquishment of the Black Hills territory then recently discovered to be rich in gold. They then assumed about the same position as the body of chiefs who so recently appeared here at the capital, and could not agree upon terms and war ensued, a desolating war, in 1876, which cost the Government millions of money and many valuable lives, and that was supplemented by this agreement of the Indians of 1876, which seems to be left out of the account altogether; and it is well that this body, that this committee and this Congress should understand the terms of that agreement of 1876, which I do not recall, to know to what extent it varied the provisions of the treaty of 1868.

I recollect one of the provisions of the treaty of 1868, and if I am not mistaken it is contained in the sixteenth section of that treaty, in which the Government at that time transferred to these Indians titles to the lands lying west of the Missouri River clear to the Black Hills and gave them the right to roam over all the lands west of that clear to the Big Horn Mountains. It was provided in that treaty that the roads then in use that were traversed to the mountains of Montana should be closed and that three military posts located out there—I think at Fetterman, Smith, and some other post—should be abandoned and dismantled, and they were. It remained in that condition until gold was discovered in the Black Hills and the miners poured in there in such a way that they could not be kept out. Then we endeavored to make terms with the Indians and they would not consent to the proposed terms. This was followed by the war of 1876, which was followed lowed by the treaty of 1876, a treaty which has not been referred to here to-night. The facts pertaining to that treaty, I have no doubt, are well known to the committee, and I have no doubt they have inquired into it. It would be of interest to know if that treaty has been taken into consideration in this matter, and therefore I ask the question.

Mr. PEEL. I will say to my friend from California that when we reach the amendments to be offered as to submitting it to the Indians we can answer all of these questions better. There are some reasons which could be given, but, as I said before, I am perfectly willing, if this committee should so determine, to settle this question in full House when an amendment is offered to submit this question of consent to the Indians. If the majority of the House wants it done, all

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the chairman of the committee please inform us whether the treaty of 1876 had a bearing upon this matter of

I do not know that it has. I understand that in treating for the Black Hills the Government took the signatures of two hundred and forty of the chiefs as representing the balance of the people. The Government accepted it and has been using it ever since that treaty was made. I do not know that it has any particular bearing upon this except as a precedent.

Mr. GIFFORD. One of the reasons why it is proposed to pass this bill and open this land without the consent of the Indians is this: The conditions of the treaty of 1868 have been disregarded, broken, and violated by both the contracting parties from that date to this. The condition of the treaty provided for the maintenance of these Indians for four years. The Government has maintained them for about twenty years. It provided for the establishment of two agencies. ernment has established six agencies. It provided that the Indians should not go upon the war-path; that they should not scalp whites. All the conditions of that treaty have been violated. They were not to rob the stages, nor to attack whites in any manner; but as a matter of fact, and a historical fact, there were bands of these Indians during the whole period from the making of this treaty until the Black Hills treaty was made, and I think up to 1880 or 1881, continually on the war-path, violating the conditions of this treaty.

The Government, upon the other hand, was continually extending the terms of this treaty by issuing rations to these Indians and by establishing agencies among them and providing them with clothes This treaty of 1876 which was referred to does not continue the twelfth article of the treaty of 1868 except by inference. The treaty of 1876 was based upon the signatures, as was said by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], of two hundred and forty of these Indians, and was at that time regarded by both Houses of Congress and by the President of the United States as binding and obligatory upon both the contracting parties. The Government then regarded this matter of treaty-making with the Indians—I mean this matter of securing three-fourths of the signatures of these Indians—as a farce. It is a farce. The only persons who are treated with or considered at all in making these treaties are a few of the chiefs and a few of the squaw-men. If the same means had been adopted by this commission that had been adopted theretofore in securing the consent of these Indians there would have been no trouble in it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What was the good old way?

Mr. McKENNA. What was the old way?

Mr. McKENNA. What was the old way?
Mr. GIFFORD. By giving them a few trinkets.
Mr. PAYSON. The "ordinary modern methods."
Mr. GIFFORD. No; the method that has prevailed ever since the

Mr. GIFFORD. No; the method that has prevaled or in the first landing at Plymouth Rock.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Since the landing of Columbus.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Was itnot the same as prevailed in dealing with the Indians in Mississippi and Arkansas?

Mr. GIFFORD. The proposition in this bill is based on the idea that it is better to deal justly with the Indians without their consent. than to deal with them unjustly with their consent. Gentlemen who are to-day insisting upon conformity to the twelfth article of the treaty of 1868 were willing in the past to give these Indians only 50 cents an acre if they would give their consent to these terms and to that consideration. The proposition now is to treat these Indians precisely as the gentleman from Arkansas described as relates to the Government and give them a fair price. I think by dealing justly with them we will secure their title to the land.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to see, Mr. Chairman, whether we can not agree that amendments offered may be voted upon here to-night, and then, if there is any disposition to demand a vote upon them in a full House, can we not agree that the vote may be taken to-morrow?

Mr. PEEL. I will say to my colleague that that proposition has already been made.

Mr. PERKINS. But it has not been acted upon.

Mr. PEEL. No; it has not been acted upon, but I thought that when we got to the amendments we might come to an agreement.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been read, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered and voted upon here, and that then if anybody desires to insist on a vote upon them in a full House, we agree now that the bill go over, and that a vote be had upon the amendments in the House to-morrow, with thirty minutes' debate.

Mr. HOOKER. Thirty minutes upon each side.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, thirty minutes upon each side. The reason I make that request is that if we can not come to some understanding of this kind, I do not see the propriety of spending the evening in considering this bill when we might occupy the time with something

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can make no agreement that will bind the House, but it can, by unanimous consent, recommend that that course be taken in the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HOOKER. I think, Mr. Chairman, we had better go on and consider the bill in the regular way. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but for a few moments. I agree fully with the chairman that this is one of the most important measures that have come before this Congress, or before any Congress of which I have been a member. It is proposed here to open up this great reservation, to restore to the public domain 11,000,000 acres of land. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] asks the question, what are the changed conditions between the time when the treaty of 1868 was made and the present

Mr. HOOKER. No; between the first session of this Congress and the present time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will consider both points together. The changed condition between the making of the treaty of 1868, or even the making of the treaty of 1876, and the present time is this, that within that limited period we have witnessed the miracle of the birth, the growth, the maturity of a magnificent commonwealth right around this Indian reservation, and that this Indian reservation lies directly in the path of the march of empire from the East to the West. I take up this bill and I find it provided in the first six sections of it that a certain part of this Great Sioux reservation is to be set apart for a permanent reservation. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better strike out the word permanent" from each one of these sections. It does not mean anything. There is not any such thing as a permanent Indian reservation upon this continent.

Mr. PERKINS. There should not be, any more.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is not, there never was, and there never will be; the white race propose to take possession of this land; it does not make any difference whether we call it the Sioux reservation of Dakota, or Oklahoma in the Indian Territory. The avidity of the white race for land is absolutely insatiable. We made a treaty in 1868 by which we gave to the Sioux Indians, the great tribe of the North, all that vast domain described by the gentleman from California, and guarantied it to them, agreed never to take it from them unless with their free consent; yet in 1876, by the signatures of two hundred and forty of their so-called headmen, we took a vast empire away from them. Why? Simply because the white men had discovered that there were rich gold mines in the Black Hills and they wanted them. They wanted them, and they did not wait for any treaty or for any they went there and took the land, and then General Sherman and his colleagues made such an agreement as they could—the only agreement that they could.

But thousands upon thousands of whites were already there. were there by the right of might, not by the right of law, and there they remained; and a poor, miserable apology for an agreement was patched up and called a treaty, and the Indians drew out and the whites have remained there ever since. Now, here is this great reservation which stands in the path of empire, and I say to you, gentlemen, that it is utterly futile to suppose that these twenty-eight thousand or thirty-two thousand Indians are going to hold possession of that reservation. The white man has laid his rapacious eye upon it, and the white man is going to have it.

Mr. CANNON. And is not the gentleman glad of it?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am simply talking now about what is going to be, not about what ought to be. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. What objection have you to the black man going out there?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have not any, if he can get a good homestead

Mr. PETERS. Instead of the white man's rapacity, is it not Chris-

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is not any doubt that we ought to have the consent of these people; but these Sioux Indians have now got their eyes open. They understand the value of 160 acres of land in the market in Dakota almost as well as a white man does, and they want to get all they can for their land. There is a good deal of the white man in the Indian.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In some of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. They want to get the best price possible for their lands.

Mr. NELSON. Who is it that has helped to make that land valuable?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am just going to talk about that. Twenty-one years ago when the treaty of 1868 was made that whole territory was one vast wilderness and desert. Dakota was then beyond the border of civilization; it was away beyond the frontier, but to-day there is one of the most intelligent, thriving, progressive, go-ahead communities on the American continent right around this reservation. That is the changed condition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is, shall we apply to this case the old maxim, "Let him take who can," or shall we abide by the treaty? That is about the only question there is in this case. For my part I want to see this reservation opened up, not less for the sake of the Indian than for the sake of the white man. I believe that the interest dian than for the sake of the white man. I believe that the interest of civilization, the Christianization of the American Indian, demands that these great compact masses of ignorance and barbarism should be crushed to pieces. I want to see railroads go through that reservation; I want to see school-houses built there to which white children shall go; I want the people there to hear in the morning the school-bell, which shall summon the children of the neighborhood just as we hear ti in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota; I want to see these lands taken in severalty. But I want first to ascertain whether there is not some method of accomplishing this result conformably to our treaties? Have we exhausted all reasonable and honorable means to accomplish this object in accordance with our treaty obligations?

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me a remark?

Mr. CUTCHEON. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I can conceive of but one method to get the consent of the Indians. If we would put into this bill or into some other bill a large corruption fund for the purpose of bribing the leading chiefs, giving them a large bonus, we should no doubt secure a formal approval of this treaty

Mr. CUTCHEON. Very likely.
Mr. NELSON. That is the only way.
Mr. PERKINS. That is the only barrier now; and it was the only barrier to success last summer.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That shows the truth of what I have said, that I do not complain that this bill does not give the Indians.

I do not know but that it gives them too much—too much for their own good.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] asked a little while ago, what has made this land so valuable? Now, we must all candidly admit that it is not the red man; it is the white man; it is the men who have gone from the great Northwest—from Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Michigan, Wisconsin—who have gone there and built homes; it is they who have given new value to this land.

The great question that stands in my way in regard to the support.

The great question that stands in my way in regard to the support of this measure is the question raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker]. It is not the question whether the Indian is getting money enough per acre for the land, but it is the question of the honor of the Government of the United States.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman from Michigan will allow me a minute, I want to make a proposition. If the Committee of the Whole is not willing to allow a vote on this matter in the House after submitting the question to reasonable debate there is no use in consuming further time upon this bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. So far as I am concerned I have never yet made factious opposition to any bill during the six years I have been a member of this House, and I do not intend to do so in this case. I am willing to abide by the decision of the majority of the House, but I want it to be the decision of the House. So far as I am concerned I shall be content with that; but I wanted to present clearly on the mind of this Committee of the Whole—

Mr. HOOKER (to Mr. PEEL). I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will be permitted to conclude his remarks, because we are all interested in knowing what result he is coming to.

Mr. PEEL. I was going to ask my friend from Michigan whether he would yield to allow me to make the proposition I have indicated.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will finish in a moment what I have to say.

The gentleman from Mississippi desires to know to what result I am coming. It is simply this: This bill attempts to do a right thing in a wrong way. It attempts to do that which I most earnestly desire to see done—that is to secure the opening up of this great reservation, to let in civilization through and around these Indian tribes; but it seems to me it attempts to do this in a wrong way, a way opposite to that which was proposed in the last session of this Congress. That is the way I feel about it. Such being my sentiment, I do not propose to offer any factious opposition to this bill; but I wanted to call the attention of this committee to the situation and to invoke its candid consideration of the question whether or not, before taking this land by force, we ought not to make one more attempt to secure the consent of the Indians according to the agreement which we made.

Now I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Af-

Mr. PEEL. I want to make a proposition to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] and to all members who are present here to-night. I do this in all candor. I do it in justice to other members of the committee who are interested in other bills which they desire to Mr. PEEL. have considered. If gentlemen who desire to have this question submitted to a vote of the Indians will agree that this amendment (after being voted upon here to-night or not, as gentlemen may prefer) shall go over till to-morrow to be voted upon in a full House after thirty or fifteen minutes' debate on each side—if such an understanding can be reached, there may be some reason in going on with this bill now. I hope gentlemen who are in favor of submitting this matter to the Indians will be as frank as I am and will say whether they assent to this proposition or not.

Mr. Chairman, I will submit it to the committee. I move the amendment which will be offered for submitting this bill back to the Indians for their consent be voted on after debate, say, of twenty or thirty minutes on each side in a full House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know whether he understands just what the gentleman from Arkansas proposes. He will state it and if he is not correct the gentleman from Arkansas can correct him. It is that this bill shall be reported back to the House with amendments agreed upon to be voted on to-morrow in a full House. Is there objection?

Mr. HOOKER. I regard this as a bill of very great importance. is one which has been sprung on us for the first time this evening. But few members have read it, and that is the reason why I called for the reading of the bill, because I wanted the members who are present to understand just exactly what it is. Several of them told me they did not understand it. It is an important measure, which should be con-sidered well and carefully and deliberated upon. With my present views I should be inclined to object to it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Do you object? Mr. HOOKER. I do.

Mr. PEEL. Are we to understand that my friend is not willing to have these amendments voted on in a full House?

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, yes; when they get there in the proper course of procedure I am ready to have a vote on them.

Mr. PEEL. We understand your conscience is very tender.

Mr. HOOKER. It is very necessary on such important matters we should proceed in accordance with the rules.

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman will yield to me, I think I might persuade the gentleman from Mississippi to withdraw his objection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let the gentleman from Minnesota

Mr. NELSON. If I could be allowed to make a statement, I think he could be persuaded to withdraw his objection.

Mr. PEEL. I ask leave to withdraw the bill.

There was no objection.

ONEIDA RESERVATION, WISCONSIN.

I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9909) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians upon the Oneida reservation, in Wisconsin, and granting patents thereto, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read a first time for information, Mr. HUDD. I ask the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with, and the Clerk proceed to read it by sections for amend-

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause lands to be allotted to those who are entitled to allotment under the act of February 8, 1887, of the Oneida Indians residing upon the tract of land near Green Bay, in the State of Wisconsin, reserved for said Indians by the second article of the treaty between the United States and first Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians, concluded at Washington February 3, 1838, as follows:

To each head of a family, 90 acres.

To each single person over eighteen years of age, and each orphan under eighteen, 44 acres.

To each single person under eighteen years, 24 acres.

SEC. 2. That all allotments made under the provisions of this act shall be according to the legal surveys, and in such manner as to embrace the improvements of the Indians receiving the allotment. When the improvements of two or more Indians have been made on the same legal subdivision of land, timbas they shall otherwise agree, a provisional line may be run, dividing said lands between them, and the amount to which each is entitled shall be equalized in the assignment of the remainder of the land to which they are entitled under

Sec. 3. That the allotments provided for in this act shall be made under the supervision of the agent in charge of the Indians located upon the said Oneida reservation, or other person duly authorized by the Department of the Interior under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and shall be made so as to secure, as far as practicable, an equal division of the agricultural lands embraced in the reservation.

Sec. 4. That upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause certificates to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which certificates shall be of legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs, according to the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian or his heirs aforesaid, in fee discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever, and no contract by any such Indian allottee or any lease, conveyance, or mortgage of the fee or lesser estate in and to such lands prior to the time fixed in this section for the issuance of a patent to such allottee shall be valid.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman to add the following words: "But the time may be extended to twenty-five years, in the discretion of the President of the United States."

Mr. HUDD. If the gentleman thinks that is necessary I will accept it as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the time usually provided, and I think it should be adopted in this case.

Mr. HUDD. This is a special case. These Indians have lived for forty years near my city of Green Bay, in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see these divisions of 90 acres and 40 acres divide the entire tract up among these Indians,
Mr. HUDD. There are only 63,000 acres in the reservation alto-

Mr. HOLMAN. Have these lands been surveyed on the basis of 90 and 40 acre subdivisions?

Mr. HUDD. Yes, the survey has been made upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to extend the time beyond fifteen years, for five years longer.

Mr. HUDD. My amendment proposes to make the time fifteen years, and I think that is long enough. However, as I have already stated, I have no objection to accept the modification of the gentleman from Indiana to leave it to the discretion of the President to extend the period if it shall be found necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. These Indians are not highly civilized.

Mr. HUDD. Does the gentleman insist upon his amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not.

Mr. HUDD. Let the vote, then, be taken on my amendment increasing the period from five to fifteen years.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any Indian to whom a certificate has been issued, as provided for in the preceding section, and who shall appear in open court in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin, and make the same proof and take the same oath of allegiance as is provided by law for the naturalization of aliens, and shall also make proof to the satisfaction of said court that he is of legal age and sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs, shall thereupon cease to be a member of said tribe of Oneida Indians, and shall become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. HUDD. I move, in line 4, to add after the word "Wisconsin" the words "or any State circuit court for Brown or Outagamie Counties, in said State of Wisconsin."

I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the object of the amendment is to allow them to go before the State as well as the United States courts to take out their naturalization papers, in order to avoid the expense of travel.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. PEEL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 9676) for the relief of certain Sisseton and Wahpeton Sieux Indians who served in the armies of the United States against their own people when at war with the United States, and of their families, descendants, and legal representatives, and of certain other Indians of said bands who served as soldiers in the armies of the United States during the civil war, from the operation of certain acts of Congress passed to punish the hostile Indians, and yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill, and that it be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Minnesota please tell us what this bill is about?

Mr. NELSON. I can do that very briefly. The report is quite lengthy, but I can explain in a very few words the purpose of the bill.

There were many of the Sioux Indians, indeed most of those in Dakota, who had large annuities due to them from the Government,

I think amounting in the aggregate to a million and a half of dollars and upwards. In 1862 there was an Indian outbreak in Minnesota, as you all probably know, and the Indians committed extensive depredations upon the whites right in the midst of the late war. The outbreak was finally suppressed, and after it was suppressed Congress went to work and confiscated all of the annuities due to the whole of these Indians. I can not give the exact amount of the annuities, but, as I have said, the sum was quite large. The Government, however, confiscated the annuities belonging to all of these different bands of Sioux Indians. Among them were certain bands known as the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands, and of these bands of Indians there were certain Indian scouts, and part of these aided us in Minnesota against their own people in the suppression of the outbreak, and a part of them were in the Army of the Union down South.

The annuity confiscated included the share of these Indians as well as those who were actually engaged in the outbreak, and the object of this bill is to restore to that portion of the Sioux Indians who were in our Army either as scouts aiding us against their own people, or in the Army of the Union during the war down South—to restore to them the share of the annuities to which they were properly entitled. That is the whole object of the bill, and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is about the only bill that I know of involving an appropriation for annuities due to the Indians in which there is no attorney. Two of the leading men of these bands, Chief Renville and Sam Johnson, came here during the last session of Congress and went before the Indian Office, and there is a voluminous report from the Department, embodied in the report of the committee, setting forth in detail their just dues and making a computation which the committee adopted in framing this bill as the amount belonging to these Indians.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. You say there were no attorneys employed in the case?

Mr. NELSON. None whatever.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. This money, then, goes directly to the

Mr. NELSON. Yes, directly to the Indians. I know not a single person nor do I believe the committee knows of a single person acting as the agent or attorney of these Indians in this connection. As I said, two of them came to this city, presented their claim before the Department in person, their account was stated by the Department, was set forth in a communication addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, is embodied in the report of the committee, and affords the data on which the bill is framed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the general debate will be considered as closed and the bill be read by sections for amendment and debate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I would ask the gentleman from Minnesota in charge of this bill by what process of calculation he arrives at the conclusion which seems to be embodied in section 2 of the bill, in lines 6 and 7 and following lines, where the amount to which they are entitled is specified, and the bill goes on to provide:

The number of Indians who enlisted as scouts and soldiers in the United States Army and their families shall be considered as one-fourth of the whole number of Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians; and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $342,-738.37, etc.

By what means do you arrive at that result?

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the gentleman that this bill just as it reads was prepared at the Indian Office. In their report, if we had time to read it, the whole matter is set forth exactly in detail, how that calculation is made, how the result is reached, and I can give no better explanation of it than that. It is sufficient to say that the Indian Office has an account of the annuities due to these bands, and they know from the records in the office what proportion of adults were in our employ as scouts, and they have estimated in the usual manner the number of women and children who go with the adults, and in that manner reached the conclusion embodied in the bill. It is their computation and not that of the committee. My friend and colleague [Mr. RICE] is entirely familiar with all the facts of the case, he being one of the older settlers in Minnesota. For myself, I am a mere "carpet-bagger," having been there only since 1871. But my friend and colleague [Mr. RICE] can tell you all about the Indian out-

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask the gentleman if in the computation any interest is included?

Mr. NELSON. No, sir; I think not. Simply the annuities, the back annuities for the number of years specified, and I think no interest is figured in that calculation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole amount, as appears by a communication embodied in the report, is $305,978.37.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the amount covered by the bill is $342,738.37.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have in my hand the statement of the Commismissioner of Indian Affairs as embodied in the report, and to avoid mistake as to the amount I would like to call attention to one or two paragraphs of this report.

Mr. NELSON. On what page?

Mr. HOLMAN.

On page 6 of the report.

LD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call at-Mr. MACDONALD. tention to a matter which will probably better come in now than after-I wish to obtain the attention of my colleague [Mr. Nelson] and ask him why the Medawakanton band have not been included in

Mr. NELSON. We have not included any full band.

Mr. MACDONALD. I mean the scouts and soldiers belonging to that band as well as to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians.

Mr. NELSON. I was not aware of the fact that they have not been provided for. If any of that band were in the condition of the scouts and soldiers of these other bands, and entitled to any share, it has not been computed. So they have not been taken into consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD. They ought to be added.

Mr. MACDONALD. They ought to be added.
Mr. NELSON. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the last two paragraphs of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to have these paragraphs read.

Mr. MACDONALD. I call my colleague's attention to the further fact that that band was included in the treaty he has mentioned. act of confiscation, on account of the outbreak, applies and cuts them out, as well as the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians.

Mr. NELSON. It may be that they are entitled to some relief.
Mr. MACDONALD. I know they are. I was there myself.
Mr. RICE. They are included in the life.

Mr. RICE. They are included in the bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not see that they are. They are not included in the title.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the three paragraphs which I have marked in the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It would be impossible at this late day to separate their accounts, but I think he following proposition will satisfy those for whose benefit legislation is the following proposition will satisfy those for whose benefit legislation is sought.

Let us agree to class all these bands as hostile at the time of the outbreak, concede that their lands and funds were justly confiscated, but those who were in the service in the Army as scouts, as appears from the records of the War Department, should be classed as our friends, and should be exempted from the act of confiscation. If we multiply the amount of their annuities ($73,600) by the number of years that have clapsed (twenty-five), we have the gross sum of $1.840,000. From this subtract the amount which has been appropriated for the whole number after the confiscation act, amounting to $816,088.52, which leaves $1,223,913.48. The scouts and their families constitute one-fourth of those who would have received this, and their share, therefore, would be $305,978.37.

I recommend that a bill be passed appropriating this sum of money to be paid to those whose names appear on the rolls of the Army as scouts, their families and descendants, or their legal representatives; and that these bands be relieved from the stigma which has been unjustly put upon them as being hostile because a few of their young men joined the hostiles, and that they shall be so far restored to their rights under the treaties and agreements which were abrogated that they shall receive during the remaining thirteen years during which they are entitled to it the full one-fourth of the amount of their annuities.

Mr. PEEL. I would say to the gentlemen who are interested in

Mr. PEEL. I would say to the gentlemen who are interested in this bill, as there is some complication arising, that I will ask to withdraw it so as to permit members who are interested to look into it by Wednesday night, when we may all know it better. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw this bill? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMI INDIANS.

Mr. PERKINS. I will call up the bill (H. R. 11634) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to the United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory.

Mr. PEEL. This bill passed during the last session of Congress, but did not get to the President in time to be signed.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that it be read as amended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to dispense with its first reading for information, and that it be read as amended by the com-Without objection, general debate will be considered as closed.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make an inquiry about this bill. I understand that it passed both Houses and went to the President at the

Mr. PERKINS. It was passed at the last session.

Mr. KILGORE. Do you know what day it went to the President? Mr. PERKINS. I do not. Perhaps the gentleman from Arkansas knows. It was within the last three or four days; and the President had not time to give it consideration.

Mr. KILGORE. I think you are

I think you are mistaken about that. .

Mr. PERKINS.

That is my information.

I had charge of the Committee on Enrolled Bills Mr. KILGORE. at that time. The bill passed, if I am not mistaken, a day or two before Congress adjourned. It went to the President on the 18th or 19th of October, I think. Congress adjourned on the 20th. Now, I have pretty direct information—very direct information, in fact—that he examined this bill and expressed himself as not being satisfied with it.

Mr. PERKINS. I know it went through towards the close of the session.

Mr. KILGORE. My understanding was that there was objection to it.

Mr. PERKINS. The land is in the Indian Territory, the proceeds all go to the Indians, and it is just what the Indians themselves have requested and sent a delegation here to ask for.

Mr. KILGORE. Is there any difference between this bill and that which was passed at the last session?

Mr. PERKINS. It is substantially as it was passed at the last session of Congress. Mr. Peel, chairman of the committee, during the vacation visited these Indians personally on the reservation, and he vacation visited these Indians personally on the reservation, and he found that they desired this legislation.

Mr. KILGORE. It would be unfortunate to go through and then have to be vetoed.

Mr. PEEL. I do not think there is any danger of that.

Mr. KILGORE. I think it is the same that there was objection to.

Mr. PEEL. I have never heard of any such objection. Mr. PERKINS. I have not heard of objection.

Mr. KILGORE. It is the same bill, I think, that there was objection to.

Mr. PEEL. I know it is the same substantially as that which passed during the last session, but I have never heard of such objection to it. Was there a bill to allot lands in severalty to the Mr. KILGORE.

Seneca Indians?

Mr. PERKINS. There was a bill of that character pending.
Mr. KILGORE. Did it pass last session? One or the other of these bills was objected to.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman must be mistaken as to this bill, because the Indians themselves were here asking for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendments offered by the committee will be considered as adopted.

The amendments offered by the committee were agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Dockery having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ROGERS reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration various bills, and had ordered him to report the same back with sundry recommendations.

LANDS OF BLACK BOB INDIANS.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of lands allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. PERKINS. They are quite long.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They can not be read in the time remaining this evening.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this bill relates to the land of the few Black Bob Indians in the State of Kansas. There is a controversy between certain men who have bought the lands from the Indians which this bill is intended to settle. As we passed the bill in the House, it provided for the appraisement and sale of the lands, but I understand that the parties have since come together and agreed to have the controversy settled by the circuit court of the United States. The bill as amended in the Senate makes that provision, and is, I am told, satisfactory to the par-

And then, on motion of Mr. PEEL (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

The bill (H. R. 10614) organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to let the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why so?

Mr. PLATT. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Territories. It is a bill for the establishment of a Territorial government over that portion of the public domain described, and I understand such bills have always been referred in the Senate to the Committee on Territories, as also in the House of Representatives, if it is permissible to speak of what has been done in the other House at past sessions. I presume there is no impropriety in saying that the CONGRES-SIONAL RECORD shows that this bill was reported in the other House from the Committee on Territories. If a bill for the organization of a Territory does not go properly to the Committee on Territories, I can not see what is the use of having a Committee on Territories.

Mr. DAWES. I was in hopes the Senator would see that the whole matter for consideration in this bill so affected the Indians that it would be better that the bill should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The title of the bill, it is true, is a bill to organize a Territory, but the real substance of the bill and everything that it pertains to is the treatment of the Indians in that Territory and their relations to the General Government.

With the exception of the little strip called "No Man's Land," 30 miles wide and 200 long, all the rest of the Territory, every particle of it, is now held by the Indians under different titles, more or less exclusive, a fee, it may be, as to some of it, and a qualified title as to other portions of it. The relation of the Indians in that Territory to the United States has been a difficult question for many years. It has occupied the attention of the Senate for every year since I have been a member of it.

My first service that had anything to do with the Indians, all unsought and unexpected, was when the Senate ordered a committee, of which I was a member, to go down into that Territory for the very purpose of ascertaining what was the present condition and what ought to be in the future proper legislation in relation to those Indians. Every matter pertaining to the territory to be embraced in this bill except No Man's Land from that day to this has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Except two that were referred in 1878 to the Committee on Territories, all the bills for the erection of a Territory in this Indian country have been referred to the Indian Committee. The Senator from Connecticut shakes his head. I do not know that I am absolutely correct. I supposed that I was until the Senator shook his head. I shall surrender my memory to his at any

Mr. PLATT. I am not aware that any bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma has ever been referred to the Indian Committee. I think it has not been. I know that in 1882 a bill introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. Rollins, organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, was referred to the Committee on Territories, because that was since I came into the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I believe I have here on my desk every paper that has been referred since I came into the Senate, so far as the diligence of the man in charge of the document-room has been able to produce

The Senator understands very well that it is from no lack of courtesy to his committee or of confidence in the ability of the committee to consider this question that I find myself compelled to oppose the reference of the bill to his committee. It is rather an ungracious thing to do to oppose the reference of a bill to a standing committee of the Senate. It is only because the whole subject-matter so intimately concerns the future of the Indian and the proper relations of the Government to the Indians in that Territory that I am compelled to oppose the reference to the Committee on Territories and to ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The latter committee has no desire to gather to itself any new work, I can assure the Senator. It has had, as I have said, this matter before it from the beginning. Ever since the idea of establishing a Territorial government in that Territory has been broached it has been commissioned by the Senate in various ways to consider the matter. I have now before me all the petitions that have been introduced in the Fiftieth Congress, so far as I know, upon the subject, and they have been referred to this committee. This committee has been considering them in connection with this proposed measure. It has, under the direction of the Senate, visited the Territory for the purpose of considering the proper legislation in reference to a Territorial government down there, and whether it should include this proposed boundary line or take the entire territory into one Territorial government.

There was a bill, which I have here before me, referred in the Fortyninth Congress to the Committee on Indian Affairs, "to provide for the organization of all that part of the territory of the United States known as the Indian Territory and the Public Land Strip into a Territory to be known as the Territory of Oklahoma," etc.

Mr. PLATT. What bill is that?

Mr. DAWES. That is Senate bill No. 717 of the Forty-ninth Con-A bill was referred in the same Congress to open to homestead settlement a certain portion of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, which looked to the same result. As long ago as 1884 the Indian Committee were commissioned by the Senate to investigate and report concerning the title by which Oklahoma was held by the Indians and what right white people had to go and settle there, and a member of the committee made to the Senate on the 22d of January of that year a very elaborate report upon the subject. It is true that in 1878 two or three bills for the very purpose of organizing a Territory among the Indian tribes were referred to the Committee on Territories without any action on the part of that committee, so far as I know.

My friend shows me a bill introduced by Mr. Rollins, of New Hamp shire, in 1882. Mr. Rollins, of New Hampshire, introduced three bills for the purpose of erecting a Territory there, each one of which on his motion was referred without question to the Committee on Territories, which took no action in the matter, so far as I know. With the exception of the bills introduced by Mr. Rollins, I am not able to find any which was committed to the Committee on Territories. All the other matters, beginning with the examination into that question by the Committee on Indian Affairs in 1884 down to the present time, have been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I have no desire, sir, to take away from the Committee on Territories anything that justly belongs to them. If the Indian question were eliminated from this bill it would be simply a question of writing a bill out upon white paper. There would be no question involved for consideration by the Senate if it were not for the relation in which the Indian stands to this Territory and to us; and that is why the Commit-tee on Indian Affairs ought to consider this question. Eliminate that from this measure and nobody would be troubling himself a great while about the passage of a bill erecting a Territorial government there.

But, as I have said, the whole of this Territory has been committed to the Indians, a large share of it under a patent, and those Indians have a qualified agreement with the United States upon what terms they would sell it to the United States for the use of other friendly Indians. Some of them have a portion of it by a treaty title more or less exclusive in which we have covenanted that they shall have the exclusive use of it. What kind of a title that may be it is not necessary for us to discuss. Some of them have it by a statute title, and some of them have it by a mere executive order; but every foot of the Territory, excepting No Man's Land, is under such a holding as that by these Indians.

If that holding could be settled properly, as I have said, there would be a Territorial government erected there as soon as it could be written out on white paper; but the only difficulties involved and to be considered by a committee are Indian questions; and that is only why I suggest to the Senate that the bill should be considered by the Indian Committee. All the labor it has expended or that it is expending at this moment in considering these questions will be utilized if the bill

On its face there are considerations which properly go to the Committee on Territories, but underneath it, and the real question, is a question which ought to be considered by the Committee on Indian question which ought to be considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Therefore I did hope that the Senator from Connecticut himself would see his way clear to let the bill pass to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I hope that the Senator will do so.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, during my term of service in the Senate I have had the honor of serving both upon the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Territories, but I am not now a member of either of those committees. I can not therefore be suspected of any personal feeling in regard to the reference of this bill.

When the Senator from Massachusetts says that the overruling question in regard to this bill is as to the effect it will have upon the rights of the Indians. I rather think, with great respect that he overstates that of the Indians, I rather think, with great respect, that he overstates that question. The great point to be determined after all is whether a Territorial government shall be established in what is known as Oklahoma. That Territorial government, as a matter of course, is preliminary to the creation of a State and its admission into the Union, because under the autonomy of our Government the holding of any considerable portion of the public domain in the shape of a Territory for an indefinite time is not to be at all supposed hereafter to exist.

It is a question affecting the white people of the whole United States and of every State in the Union whether this Territorial government shall be established. It is an open secret that year after year for the last ten years the authority of the United States has been invoked to prevent lawless incursions into this territory. It is equally well known that this territory has been used as a harbor for lawless persons and for debtors escaping the payment of their just liabilities. The people of Missouri, Texas, Arkansas, and Kansas are vitally interested in this question. I therefore think, with great respect, that my friend from Massachusetts overstates the Indian part of the question when he says that that should override or be considered of paramount importance.

As to any precedent created by the reference of bills upon this subject-matter heretofore, the records of the Senate will show that bills have been referred upon this question to both the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Territories; but an examination of this bill even superficially will show that it is a bill to organize a Territorial government, and it should go to the Committee on Territories. If that committee has not jurisdiction—and I say this with the greatest respect and the greatest confidence in the personnel of the Committee on Indian Affairs—if the Committee on Territories has not jurisdiction to consider this question, what sort of question was that committee organized to consider? Here is a plain proposition to organize a Territorial government, and the Committee on Territories, as its name implies, as the very nature of its organization shows, was created a committee of the Senate for the purpose of considering that identical question in every instance.

As a friend of this bill I have one single thing to say, and this is of more importance to me than any question of reference. Yesterday I was assured by the chairman of the Committee on Territories and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs-for I saw them boththat if this bill was referred to either committee it would receive immediate consideration and be brought back to the Senate with some sort of a report upon it. Without anticipating what that report will be, my anxiety in this whole matter is to secure action at this session It is a matter of the greatest importance to the people of the Western States, those who are contiguous to this territory, and all I want is the assurance from the chairman of the Committee on Territories or the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as the Senate may choose to settle this matter between those committees, that there will be immediate consideration of the bill and an immediate report of the bill back to the Senate for its action.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate in this matter. Personally, of course, I would not care to have the consideration of a question which seems to have engendered some difference of opinion, but I have a little feeling that it is scarcely decorous to take from the Territorial Committee a bill providing for the organization of a new Territory. I think I may say without any fear of being contradicted that it has never been done in the history of this Government, either in the Senate or in the other House; that no Territory has ever been organized except upon a bill referred to the Committee on Territories. As I remarked, and as was very pertinently remarked by the Senator from Missouri, if bills to organize Territories are not to go to the Committee on Territories why should there be any Territorial Committee at all?

I have remarked before in the Senate that it seems to me the Committee on Territories had been, by the practice of the Senate, shorn of a good deal of the jurisdiction it ought to have. Questions affecting the public lands are claimed by the Public Lands Committee. Questions relating to courts in the Territories are claimed by the Judiciary Questions relating to Indians are claimed, and have been Committee largely conceded, to the Indian Committee; and now it is claimed that when a bill comes to organize a Territory that shall be taken away from the Territorial Committee.

I confess to some degree of astonishment that this suggestion should have been made. It is true that the question of what shall be done, in case a Territory is organized, with the claims of the Indians over some portion of the land of that Territory is a matter which enters into the consideration of this bill; but there is quite a portion of the Territory, and so far as the rights of people already there are concerned, the most important part of the Territory, in which there is no Indian question at all. The Public Land Strip, as it is called, or No Man's Land, is 150 miles long by 15 miles wide, an unorganized portion of the territory of the United States which has been largely entered upon; which has flourishing, large towns, and, I think, some with city governments. But whether that be so or not, every Territory that has been organized in the United States has been organized with Indians in it. When the Territory of Dakota, which we are talking about so much now, was organized as a Territory a very large proportion of that immense area was covered by Indian reservations, and to-day there is an Indian reservation in it larger than a good many States.

I can not understand the objection which is made to my motion. It might just as well be put in another form, and that is to abolish the Committee on Territories.

With regard to the Indian question there, I might retort that if the Indian Committee has had this matter under consideration since 1878 and been diligently considering it, and nothing has come of it, it might possibly be a question for the Senate whether it was not worth while to let some other committee see what it could do with the Indian question. But I do not wish to discuss this matter in that spirit. I am on the Indian Committee with my friend, the chairman of that committee, who makes this objection. There ought to be comity be-tween committees, and I think there is, and there will be; and in those matters in which the members of the Territorial Committee are not instructed by experience or by investigation as to what it is best to do with the Indians, we shall very cheerfully sit at the feet of the Indian Committee and gather knowledge from them.

As I said in the beginning, it seems to me that every consideration of propriety and the due order of business in the Senate requires that this bill should go to the Territorial Committee. Mr DAWES Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut claims good deal of forbearance in not retorting upon the Committee on Indian Affairs that they had that matter under consideration since 1884 and had done nothing about it. He will find some other committee had it. That is not the reason he did not retort. It is because he handed me a few minutes before a bill referred to the Committee on Territories in 1882, and they have not done anything about it, and so he thought he would not retort. I presume that is the reason he did not retort on me.

But the Senator ought not to put this on the question of courtesy to his committee. He knows very well that I would not be guilty of standing by and urging anything upon the Senate that was possibly a discourtesy to any committee, certainly any committee the relations to which on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs were so pleasant and agreeable as they are to the committee over which he presides. He knows that; he must know, I think, that this does not arise from any desire to have the Senate take a course that could possibly be so construed. It is because the Committee on Indian Affairs really think that although the name of this bill is such as would entitle it to go to his committee, the real substance and purpose of the bill is a disposi-tion of the Indians in that Territory. That is the purpose of it, and it is how best to deal with treaties, with statute titles, with titles under agreements, and the future policy of the Government towards those Indians; and because it is really that alone, the committee are of the feeling and the belief that they should consider it.

As I have said before, if it were not for that question there would be nothing troubling either branch of Congress with regard to this matter, but that is the only reason. It is not any desire to gather under the control of that committee anything that does not belong to it, or take anything away from the Committee on Territories, and I regret that the Senator should insist on being sensitive about it. I am here solely for what I think is the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to ask the Senate to let them consider questions that pertain to the Indians, and if there is any other question about this Territory of Oklahoma I do not know what it is.

The Senator talks about a little strip of land, just like the handle to a dipper, 15 miles wide and 150 long, stuck onto these 62,000 square miles, as a matter that ought to control the reference of a bill that shall dispose of the 62,000 square miles and let the tail carry the rest. I do not so consider it. If the Senate shall so consider it, I shall, I hope, feel differently for it from what I am afraid the Senator from Connecticut feels in his talk, but I insist upon it that he shall not put me in the attitude of trying to trench upon his committee, and I trust if he will not forbear any suggestions that the Committee on Indian Affairs have been so derelict that the Committee on Territories should have had it a good while before, that committee may take it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion is the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to refer the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that there might be a very reasonable doubt as to which of these committees this bill should go. In fact, I think it might be appropriate to refer it to either one. On general principles, without having closely scrutinized all the provisions of the bill, I should think it ought to go to the Committee on Territories; and yet there are doubtless many provisions in it which ought to be considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Whichever committee it may go to, I hope they will take very early and favorable action in reporting it back to the Senate. Under the circumstances I shall vote to refer it to the Committee on Territories without any disrespect to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CHACE. For information I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Territories how many white inhabitants there are rightfully settled within Oklahoma which it is proposed to set up as a Territory?

There are supposed to be none upon that portion of it over which Indians claim title or right, but there are railroads running through it. In the No Man's Land or Strip I suppose there are thirty or forty thousand—the Senator from Missouri knows perhaps better than I—perhaps fifty thousand.

Mr. CHACE. There are about 2,200 square miles in that strip.

Mr. PLATT. That has been pretty well settled upon. There are large towns that have 10,000 population in them.

Mr. VEST. In addition to that there are leases. Mr. PLATT. I was going to speak of them.

Mr. VEST. And there is what is called the Cherokee Outlet.
Mr. PLATT. Let me answer the question fully. The Cherokee Outlet has been leased to cattle-men by the Cherokee Indians, so that all over that there are more or less men engaged in herding cattle. In addition, there are two railroads running through the lands there from which white people have been kept off, and at the stations upon these roads there are white persons in the employ of the railroad companies who are necessarily employed in doing the business of the railroad companies; but upon the lands generally, in that portion of the territory which is called familiarly Oklahoma, there are no settlers.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, I do not get any new information in regard to this subject from the Senator from Connecticut. He reports the case to be as I supposed it was. As I understand, the principle has been well settled that there is no justifiable reason for setting up a Terbeen well settled that there is no justifiable reason for setting up a Territorial government unless there are white people within the location proposed to be established as a Territory, for whose benefit the government is to be established. The evidence is patent upon the face of this whole case that this is a well-laid scheme to encroach upon and rob the Indians of their rights in this territory. Those are rich and fertile lands, well adapted, undoubtedly, to grazing, and many people look with longing eyes upon the property which belongs to the Indians. Much of it, I understand, is held by treaty in such a manner that it can not be encroached upon in this way, even, without breaking that it can not be encroached upon in this way, even, without breaking solemn obligations of the Government of the United States towards the

I have no interest as a member of either of these committees, for I am not a member of either of them, and in that respect I believe I am able to maintain somewhat a judicial frame of mind in regard to this question; but it seems to me that the question which should rule the reference should be as to what rights are to be affected by the enactment of this bill into a law. By the admission of the chairman of the Committee on Territories white men have no rights there. He says railroads have been built through this land. Those railroads were allowed to be built because it was claimed that they wished to approach some other territory, some other part of the country. The rights of the Indians were to a certain extent infringed, and this is only another illustration of the danger of taking a wrong step.

I hold that the only real rights involved in this case are the rights The question for the Senate to settle is, will you take away from the Committee on Indian Affairs the consideration of a question which involves their rights, and their rights alone, and give it to the Committee on Territories, who have by the rules of the Senate no fair title to the consideration of this question? This claim that No Man's Land rises to the dignity of a Territory is too fallacious, it seems to me, to deserve consideration. Is the whole question here about a little strip of land?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is larger than the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. CHACE. Not larger in the number of its inhabitants nor in the interests involved; and not only so, but I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the State of Rhode Island had rights in the compact under the Constitution of the United States before the State of Missouri was dreamed of; and in all the elements of civilization, of intelligence, of enterprise, and of everything which goes to make a great commonwealth, she stands to-day in advance of that benighted State. [Laughter.] enighted State. [Laughter.] Mr. COCKRELL. I am glad the Senator thinks so, but he is the only man in the country who does

Mr. CHACE. The Senator should remember that good merchandise very often comes in small packages.

Mr. COCKRELL. Precious small when they come from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, this rises to the dignity of a great moral question. I hope that Senators will approach it in that light. I know well that the chairman of the Committee on Territories does not propose to do a wrong thing in this matter, but I hope also, inasmuch as he has in time past avowed himself the friend of fair dealing with the Indians, that he will see that the Indian Committee has the real claim to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island before he takes his seat whether he is ready to take the position as a friend of the Indian that the condition of Indian residents in that Territory will not be improved if they take their lands in severalty and have a Territorial organization. It does not necessarily follow because the population of this Territory is confined to Indians that those steps in their civilization and progress should not be taken.

Mr. CHACE. The best answer I can make to that question is by asking a question of the Senator. Would he attempt to form the Indians into a Territorial government before they have become civilized?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the two could very well go hand in hand. I see no objection to either proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is in perfect conformity with the cus toms of the Senate in many important cases to refer matters of this kind to two of its committees. Many cases have been referred to the Judiciary Committee which have come from other committees; and when some special constitutional or legal question has been disclosed, they have been reported back and referred to another committee.

By one of the standing rules every question which involves the expenditure of money first comes from the committee specially interested and then goes to the Committee on Contingent Expenses by another standing rule. A great variety of matters are referred to standing committees of the Senate, and amendments to appropriation bills coming from committees then go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, it seems to me clear that this is primarily an Indian question, a question of the public faith, of the civilization of the Indians and their rights. The policy to be pursued with reference to them under our system of legislation for the Indians has to be submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. When they report, if the bill or the legislation they should propose or the action or non-action they should advise relates to something which requires the additional experience of the Committee on Territories for a further consideration, it will be entirely proper for the Senate to refer it to that committee also when the bill comes in; but the thing which ought to be done in the first instance, it seems to me, is to refer this question, which involves the rights and interests of the Indians, to the committee which is the special guardian of those rights and interests.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] puts the case exactly wrong. If the subject should go to two committees at all, it seems to me that it should first go to the Committee on Territories. The proposition before the Senate is a bill to organize a Territorial government, and it seems to me that if the Committee on Territories, as has been said over and over again, has any right to existence at all, it ought to have the control of the question of forming that Territorial government in such manner in the first instance as its judgment may dictate. If the bill should be referred to the Committee on Territories and should come back here with a favorable recommendation for a Territorial government, if the rights of the people of that Territory, whether they be Indians or white men, are not properly cared for it will be entirely proper for the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to say that that committee should have something to say about it.

But this discussion seems to run upon the idea that if the bill is referred to the Committee on Territories we are therefore going to report a bill organizing a Territorial government and probably disregard the rights of the Indians entirely. So far as I am concerned, as one of the humble members of the Committee on Territories, if the bill should go to it, I should give the bill proper consideration so far as I might be able to do so, taking into view the exact facts with relation to the Indians and everybody else in the Territory. I think it is not fair to assume that the Committee on Territories is going to report a Territorial organization without regard to whether under all the laws and facts and treaties that exist it ought to do so.

I must suppose that the Committee on Territories will investigate the subject, and if after investigation all the facts would seem to warrant a Territorial government for this Territory I should be in favor of it; if not, I should not be. But it does seem to me that in the first instance the bill should go to the Committee on Territories, which its title would indicate should have control of it. I hope it will be so or-

Mr. BUTLER. I am a little surprised, Mr. President, that there should be a proposition here to take this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Whilst I have the greatest confidence in the members of that committee, and the greatest respect for their judgment, I am not prepared to admit that the Committee on Territories is not equally well qualified to deal with all the questions which will arise in considering this or any other bill which proposes to organize a Territorial government. As the chairman of that committee very properly said, there has not been a Territory organized, certainly within the last twenty-five or thirty years, in this country where there was not a very large number of Indians, and the Senate must recall the fact that when the proposition was made to organize a Territorial government for Alaska I heard no question about the propriety of that proposition being sent to the Committee on Territories, when perhaps there were not over three hundred white men in the whole Territory, the entire population consisting of Indians. I heard no suggestion then that the members of that committee in considing the propriety of making a Territorial government did not have entire regard to the rights and interests of the Indians as well as of the few white people who were And I think it is not assuming too much now to say on behalf of that committee that when this committee comes before it it will of course have regard to the rights of the Indians and the whites and all the other kinds and characters of population within the proposed limits.

I shall not now in this preliminary discussion express any opinion as to the wisdom or unwisdom of organizing a Territorial government over the land covered by this Oklahoma bill; but I will say this much—I shall never consent in any form to injustice and wrong being done to the Indians within the limits of the proposed Territory. They have rights under this Government by treaty and otherwise that, I think, we can not safely violate and deprive them of. It requires the assent of two parties to make an agreement of this kind, and until I am satisfied that the Indians themselves who are living under treaty stipulations with this Government assent cordially and willingly of their own free will to this change, I shall never give my consent to it.

That, however, is perhaps aside from what I rose to say. I think the Committee on Territories can settle this matter as well as the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is purely and simply a question as to whether or not we shall organize and form a Territorial government out of certain of the lands within the jurisdiction of this Government. The Committee on Territories have always had jurisdiction of that subject, and I can see no good reason now why it should be taken away from them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, whatever grave doubts honest, conservative men may have in regard to the sincerity of death-bed repentance and the motives which inspire it, I confess I am always glad to see repentance come even at so late an hour, and I am only astonished that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Chack] and the good people of Rhode Island did not at an earlier day realize some pangs of conscience upon the Indian question, when history, if I am not mistaken, informs us that remorselessly and murderously every foot of Rhode Island soil, however small the feet may be, was obtained by murder and robbery of the Indians who inhabited it.

Mr. President, it seems to be the delight of Rhode Islanders ever since they robbed and murdered and drove the Indians from that sparse little piece of land to try to make the country and the world believe that everybody else was trying to follow in their footsteps, and in like manner as they had done to rob and cheat and swindle Indians.

If the manner as they had done to for and cheat and swindle Indians. I do not pretend to compare Missouri with Rhode Island. I would be ashamed to represent a State and a people that I would place upon an equality under such circumstances. The Senator can talk of benighted Missouri just as much as he pleases. It is no slur considering the source from which it comes. The people of Missouri have a regard for the Indians. They did not obtain title to their soil by robbing and driving the Indians from it. It was obtained by legitimate purchase. They are not trying now to rob the Indians in the Indian Territory. No man in Missouri wants to see any injustice done to They are not trying now to rob the Indians in the Indian Territory. No man in Missouri wants to see any injustice done to a solitary Indian in the Indian Territory. We want to see the rights of these Indians preserved and protected and defended. We are not seeking to drive them by murder and force from their homes as they were driven from Rhode Island. We are seeking to do them exact justice, and we think this bill does it.

I prefer that the bill should go to the Committee on Territories, because it is for the organization of a Territorial government there; and while there are questions which might belong justly to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the preponderance of the rights and duties involved in the consideration of this bill belongs to the Committee on Territories. For that reason, and, as I said, without any reflection upon or disrespect to the Committee on Indian Affairs, I shall vote to refer the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, I am sorry that the little playful allusion I made to the State of Missouri has disturbed my friend, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], so much, and I am especially sorry—because I really have a personal regard for the Senator—I am especially sorry that it should have induced him to make such a sad mistake, as he seems to have made, in regard to the history of the treatment of the Indians by the colonists who settled up what is now the State of Rhode Island, and by that little Commonwealth ever since.

Never was a greater mistake made than the one by the Senator when he made those statements in regard to the Indians having been murdered, wronged, and driven out of Rhode Island and despoiled of their land. It is one of the glories of that little Commonwealth that she possesses what she does possess, having acquired the title from the In-dians by purchase, and that neither the colony of Rhode Island nor the State of Rhode Island ever made any war upon any Indian, nor was there ever any murder of any Indian by the people of Rhode Island. What warfare was made upon the Indians on the territory of Rhode Island was by incursions from other States and against the earnest remonstrance of Roger Williams and his compatriots.

Mr. COCKRELL. From Massachusetts, was it?

Mr. CHACE. Roger Williams purchased the land from the Indians, and when Miantonomah, the great chief of the Narragansetts, found that by the settlement of the lands and improvements by the whites they had increased in value they were dissatisfied, and Roger Williams paid a second time for those lands. Ay, he paid a third time for those lands, until the chief was entirely satisfied, Roger Williams dealing with him not upon the principles of ordinary commercial transactions, but upon that Christian doctrine that a man should have what was his right without regard to the might or the law in the case. Nor was there ever without regard to the might or the law in the case. Nor was there ever any trouble, any disagreement, any robbing or bloodshed between the Indians and the people of Rhode Island. The Narragansett Indians have been cared for through all these years, every right guarded and respected, until finally their lands were divided amongst them in severalty and they made citizens of the State; and they number amongst them many very useful members of the Commonwealth.

When the Senator makes the charge he makes against the people of Rhode Island he betrays an ignorance of the facts in the case that is most astonishing to me.

most astonishing to me.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it is entirely obvious that every foot of land in the United States not embraced in the District of Columbia must be included sooner or later within the boundaries of some State, and until that is done our political system will not be complete. It is therefore a duty of the Government of the United States with all reasonable diligence to seek to include within its civil jurisdiction every foot of land in the United States not now included in some governmental organization. The United States in recognizing the title of the Cherokee Indians, the Creeks, the Seminoles, and the Choctaws and Chickasaws, has never surrendered two very important rights and pow-The one is the right of eminent domain, which the Senate and the House have frequently exercised in granting railroads the privileges of going through these respective Indian nations, and the other is the right of supreme political control.

These Indians, from the time that we first declared our independence of Great Britain and spread our borders around so as to include the different tribes, have always been members of the American population in that sense that they are subject to the political control of the United States Government. That right has not been surrendered and can not be surrendered unless we choose to admit some independent sovereignty to exist within the limits of the United States.

In pursuance of this obvious necessity and this high purpose of government, this purpose of perfecting and completing our own political system, the House of Representatives has sent a bill here which contains a provision for the organization of a Territorial government. We resort of course to this form of legislation as the initial proceeding for the purpose of ripening communities and peoples into that shape where they will be qualified for statehood.

The first section of this bill contains a provision for the establishment of a Territorial government over No Man's Land absolutely and without qualification, because we find no intervening rights or privileges of occupancy to interrupt the full and unobstructed exercise of our political and civil authority within No Man's Land, just as we would in any other part of the unoccupied territory of the United States. That far this bill is without question as to the jurisdictional power of Congress there to establish civil government; and it makes no difference whether the area of territory within those limits is large or small. It may be that the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] wants to establish another Rhode Island out West for his own convenience. I do not know how that may be. It may be that after awhile we shall be bound to establish another Rhode Island, so far as the limits of the territory are concerned, in the West in order to include No Man's Land within the civil power and government of the United States and to give it, if you please, statehood. Still that is an unreasonable expectation and one that I do not want to promote in any sense.

But now look at the question in the view that I take of it, if that be correct, and it is in regard to the extension of the civil polity of the United States by the powers of Government over these Indian countries. If this bill had gone on and included all of the five civilized tribes within its purview, I can not discern any reason why the Government of the United States should be obstructed in the slightest degree in the exercise of that power even over these civilized tribes; for you may search the patents and the treaties and whatever else there is in the engagements of the United States Government with these five tribes in vain to find that there is in any of them an exclusion either of the right of eminent domain or of the right of civil government on the part of the United States.

Mr. COKE. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that I think the title was reserved to the Government, the ultimate fee in the land.

Mr. MORGAN. The Government not only reserved the ultimate fee in the lands, but it made a provision that in the event that the Indians should abandon these lands they should revert to the Govern-The original disposal of them was on those terms and condi-If it had become the policy of the United States Government to banish these tribes, as they have done frequently, to some other distant territory, the ultimate fee would then have come to the United It would have been a question not of legal power and legal right, but a question of conscience how far and where and under what circumstances we would exert this supreme political power over land within the domain of the United States.

So I insist that if this bill had gone to the extent even of including within the political domain of the United States, within the jurisdiction of Congress so far as it saw proper to exercise it, all the five civilized tribes, there would have been no violation of treaty, or of patent, or of anything else in that exercise of power.

This bill provides, as I have observed, in respect of No Man's Land that that shall be a Territorial government and therein shall be established all the forms of a Territorial government, including the appointment of a governor and the creation of a legislative tribunal and the establishment of judicial courts and all else. Then it proceeds to provide that this Territorial government shall expand and include the country known as Oklahoma, which has a distinct geographical boundary line, as fast as the consent of the Indians shall be obtained thereto by the relinquishment on their part of their remaining interest in the lands in Oklahoma. That is making a concession to the Indians in that part of the country, to their rights of whatever kind or character they may be, that is extremely liberal. It is the recognition on their part of such a title of occupancy, such a right of possession as that we will not intrude a civil government over them, no matter how necessary that civil government may be, until they have agreed with us through commissioners to be appointed on either hand that they will cede what remaining interest they have got in the lands to the United States Government.

I say that is a very liberal concession, and it is particularly liberal in view of the fact that the United States by an engagement with the Cherokees and with the Creeks and the Seminoles have already acquired an interest in those lands of a very positive character, an interest at least connected with the exercise of its governmental power in its own way to the extent of carrying into that territory friendly Indians—not Indians that the other tribes may approve of, but friendly Indians, friendly to the United States, and of course friendly to the other Indians, not at war with them. We paid for that different prices. My present recollection is that we paid the Creeks and Seminoles about 30 cents an acre for all of that outlying area, and we have paid the Cherokees perhaps 47 cents an acre

In regard to the Cherokees, however, there is an unfortunate want of accuracy in the situation that they hold to us in respect of their outlet lands, as they are called. We claim, and I think justly, too, that we have advanced to them whatever the sum is—47 cents an acre, I think, is about the amount of it—to cover the whole area of the outlet. let. The remaining part of whatever sum we think would be due to-them in the event that we should settle friendly Indians upon it is a matter left for future adjustment between the United States and the Cherokee tribe of Indians.

Then, after that arrangement had been perfected, we advanced $300,-000 and paid the money to the Cherokee Nation in respect of these out-000 and paid the money to the Cherokee Nation in respect of these outlet lands. There the misfortune was still greater that the application of that particular sum of $300,000 was not definitely made in the agreement with the Cherokee Indians. They contend on their part that that was to be a final payment for the lands upon which various fragmentary tribes had been settled within this domain, and that the price would go up, I think, to about a dollar and a quarter an acre, and would be paid and satisfied from the $300,000. There is the dispute, there is the trouble, and the difficulty which has to be settled in some way or other, possibly by adjudication—I do not know how, exactly—between the Cherokee Nation and the people of the United States as to the application of the $300,000. tion of the $300,000.

But, sir, it is true that the United States Government by actual pur-

But, sir, it is true that the United States Government by actual purchase from the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Seminoles has acquired the right to control that part of the country, even as to the ownership of the title, to the extent of locating other friendly Indians thereupon; how many or how few, there is nothing said about. We can take every Indian in the United States who is at peace with the Government of the United States and carry him to that territory under the contract with these three tribes and locate him there and they can not say a word, except that they can say this: "You have paid us but 30 or 40 cents an acre for this land and it is really worth a great deal more than that, and you cucht to pay us the balance." Suppose we 30 or 40 cents an acre for this land and it is really worth a great deal more than that, and you ought to pay us the balance." Suppose we say, "Yes, we ought to pay you, and we will." What is the primary question in this bill? What is the great leading question in it? The establishment of a Territorial government. What is the next question? After you have established it there, will you expand it over the territory of these tribes? That is the second question. The bill provides that the Territorial government shall not expand its invisdiction so as to include these disputed lands until an expand its jurisdiction so as to include these disputed lands until an agreement has been arrived at with the Indians. Non constat that we could very easily have passed this bill, perhaps not with justice and equity, but with a due degree of forbearance, so as to have included all these lands within the Territorial government without any respect to the question of the extinguishment ultimately of the Indian title. But that evidently is a secondary question.

The great first question in this matter is, shall we establish a Territorial government there? I say that we are obliged to do it. How can we leave a Territory like that a place of resort for thieves and vagabonds and marauders of all kinds, right in the heart of that wonderful country lying between Texas and Kansas? How can we content ourselves to defer the organization and establishment of a fair, just, civil government in that Territory to the minor consideration of the settlement of the question of the remaining title between these three tribes and the United States Government?

I believe it may not be days, it may not be hours, until we shall have been notified of the extinguishment of the title of the Indians to some large bodies of this land, and perhaps before we get this bill passed the boundaries of this Territory will have expanded according to its own terms so as to include perhaps three or four times the area of No Man's Land, and the Senate will be behind the progress of the country and probably behind the progress of the executive department of this Government if it refuses to establish a Territorial government in that land.

Now, I suppose the object of the Senate in sending this bill or any other bill to a committee is to get an intelligent, thorough, and properly expeditious disposal of the question. That is what the Senate wants, and I am a little surprised that there should be any controversy between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], because they are both distinguished members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and could there consider this bill perhaps together as well as they could in the other committee. I have no preference in the world except that I should like as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs to get rid of the responsibility of the bill. I am not hunting up jobs and contracts in the Senate for the purpose of assuming responsibility. But let this bill go to either committee; it is perfectly obvious that it is a duty that the Senate of the United States owes to the country to act with promptness upon this question. There is no difficulty in it, no trouble or embarrassment that I can see in the establishment of this Territorial government, and that is the root of the matter, and that is the whole of it after all.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it the judgment of the Senator that as this is a

Mr. CULIOM. Is it the judgment of the Senator that as this is a proposition to form a Territorial government, it is proper that the Territorial Committee should first take jurisdiction of it?

Mr. MORGAN. I think so. It looks to me as if it ought to go there as a matter of regular order.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Alabama will allow me to say that I did not suppose when I was up that it was necessary that I should give any assurance that the hill would receive proposite consideration if give any assurance that the bill would receive prompt consideration if it came to the Territorial Committee; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has intimated to me that, as he suggested when he had the floor that he desired to be assured of that and I said nothing about it in my remarks, he would like to know how I felt upon that subject. It did not occur to me that it was necessary to say that the Committee on Territories would act and act as promptly as possible upon the subject. It certainly will do so.

Mr. MORGAN. If we pass this bill, which I think is a very just bill, and it seems to me it is a good one, and then establish an Indian court or a United States court at some point in the five civilized tribes with an extended jurisdiction, or even, if you please, with a limited jurisdiction which you may hereafter amend, we should do more to advance the Indians in that country, more to keep down broils and preserve the peace and contribute to their prosperity than we can do in any other way in the world.

in any other way in the world.

Matters are getting into a good deal of tangle out there. Their own local government is getting into a good deal of tangle under their communal system of laws and title by occupancy. Indians who are thrifty and powerful and energetic are acquiring very large areas of land, and there is great complaint amongst the commoner Indians, the poorer Indians, of the absorption of lands under the Indian laws by these prominent and aggressive men, and the sconer we get the Government of the United States in position there to exercise what ever of civil power we think is best for them, the better it will be for ever of civil power we think is best for them, the better it will be for those Indians.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I did not suppose it was in order on the question of reference to go into the merits of this bill. Almost anything is in order, I am aware, in debate here; but still, in regard to the propriety of the bill and its provisions, it never occurred to me that it was necessary to avow either my own opinion or that of the committee I represent, and I abstained from it. I am not going now to try to commend the proposition for reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs by any profession at this time in regard to the propriety of a Territorial government in the Indian Territory. If there are any Senators who have done more to bring about that than the Senators who compose the Committee on Indian Affairs, I have yet to learn who they are.

It is not necessary for me to put myself on record upon the question whether there ought not speedily to be a Territoral government over the whole of the Indian Territory. I have no doubt of the power of the General Government or of its duty to erect as speedily as possible a Territorial government over that whole Indian Territory.

The political control of that Territory is as necessary to this Government as the political control of Dakota or Wyoming or any other area in this country within the borders of the United States; and I had the idea that the Committee on Indian Affairs for the last ten years had been doing something to hasten the speedy coming of the time when there should be a Territorial government over the whole or some part that could be properly erected, and it is quite a departure from the question whether this bill should be considered by one committee or the other to bring in the question whether one committee or the other is the more friendly to the idea of erecting a Territorial government. If the Senator from Connecticut feels that he is called upon to announce to the Senate how favorable his committee is to the project, he is welcome to any such sort of argument as that. I am not here for that pur-I am on record.

Mr. PLATT. I have made no such announcement. I have not suggested what my ideas about the propriety of this bill were.

Mr. DAWES. I have observed the current of the debate and how largely the Senator from Connecticut and other Senators have contributed to it, and I am quite willing that Senators should at this late day undertake to say that they are more disposed to the idea of putting the Indians and all this Territory of theirs under the custody and care of the Government. I do not know of a Senator who does not suppose that the question of whether there shall be a Territorial government in one part of the territory of the United States quite as much as in another deserves consideration. As I said, if it were not for the Indian question it would be like writing this bill out on a sheet of white paper and everybody would have made up his mind as to the form and method of doing the thing, but because it applies solely and exclusively to the Indian—for in this large Territory there is no white man there lawfully—the whole question to be settled is an Indian question. That is the reason I felt it my duty to move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] knows what the Indian Committee and what members of the Indian Committee have been trying to do in reference to the court to which he alludes, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] a moment ago put to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] an inquiry which seemed to carry on its face an origin in the Committee on Territories, and that was whether the Senator from Rhode Island would be in favor of having the Indians in the Indian Territory take land in severalty and become citizens of the United States, and therefore proper persons to come under a Territorial organization, as if that was an argument that he would have a right to use from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. President, I do not went to conseque the time of the Committee.

Mr. President, I do not want to consume the time of the Senate. want the Senate to understand that solely for the purpose of seeing that the rights of the Indians were properly taken care of, and as that covered the whole of this bill except this little panhandle, I have urged that the Senator from Connecticut and his committee should let it be considered by the committee the action of which would affect the rights of the Indians more than any other. Therefore I call for the yeas and nays. If the Senate will let me have the yeas and nays on the motion then I shall not desire to trouble the Senate any more on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that on this motion the yeas and nays be entered on the Journal. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], in his anxiety to have this bill referred to his committee, ought not to let his zeal so far run away with him as to put me in any false position or do me any injustice. If the Senator had listened to what I said he must know that I did not, either directly or by insinuation or by reference, speak of the merits of this bill or of what I thought about it or what the Committee on Torritories would be likely to the committee of t about it or what the Committee on Territories would be likely to do about it, or in any way express my views upon the subject whatever. I am about as much amazed that he should rise and say that I had expressed my views of what ought to be done with this bill as I was that he should make his objection to my motion originally.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it is very manifest that whatever may be the form of this bill, the substance of it is an effort which has been made, as we know, for a great length of time and has culminated in this form to secure to the control of the white race in this country or of the white and the colored races, the citizens of this country, that is the citizens and the God-forsaken men who are also denominated citizens under the Constitution, the control of a large portion of the Indian Territory. It is an effort to take from the Indians that portion of the soil which comes under the general denomination of the soil of the United States, to take from the Indians a large part of that which by solemn treaty engagement has been given over to the occupancy and possession of the Indian tribes—there can be no doubt that that is the substance of this bill-and place that large section of territory which I suppose may be thirty or forty thousand square miles and these eight or ten thousand square miles which form No Man's Land, under a Territorial form of government like that of the other Territories of the

If a thing of that kind is to be done we start with a state of facts something like this: The Indians recognized by the legislative action, the executive action, the official action of the United States as treatymaking powers with whom we have contracts which we denominate treaties, and which we have no right to abrogate or to destroy without the consent of the other party—that we concede—and by virtue of these contracts and treaties they are in actual occupation and possession of certain lands, of a geographical surface outlined with certain boundaries, and within them, unless by their consent, they have absolute power of excluding any such action as is proposed when a certain part of the surface of the earth is organized into a Territory and placed under a separate, distinct, individual Territorial government. That, then, is the situation of the affair, and here is a proposition that the Committee on Territories shall take primary and original jurisdiction of a bill which undertakes to do that thing.

Mr. President, it does not occur to me that in the jurisdiction which has been effected by the Senate in the parceling out among its committees its aggregate jurisdiction of legislative action, this power, this right of initiation of action should belong to and should be controlled by the Committee on Territories. The Committee on Territories in its operations is confined, so far as its natural and proper legal jurisdiction is concerned, to Territories—territory of the United States, territory which is not incumbered by these outside and extraneous obligations to what is practically a foreign power, a treaty-making power. In order to establish a Territorial government, in other words, it must first have the territory, and the Committee on Territories has none except this little piece of land that projects westerly and lies south of Kansas, some 8,000 or 10,000 square miles, which I suppose nobody would dream of organizing into a Territory with a view to its ultimate erection into a State, unless there were coupled with it this other larger and substantial element of the whole scheme, to take nearly one-half the whole Territory from the Indians.

If these views of the nature of the transaction are correct, it seems to me that the bill should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs in the first instance, and perhaps wholly. There is no occasion for its going to any other committee at all, for two reasons. It naturally belongs There is where it should go in the first instance because it is substantially an Indian question which is to be decided, and it should be sent to that committee which maintains towards the Indians, so far as this body is concerned, what the Committee on Foreign Relations does to whatever concerns foreign powers. It is a part of their natural legal authority under any view of the question whatever.

But there is still another reason why it should go to that committee, as it seems to my mind. These questions have been under discussion for a long time in the newspapers, among the citizens of the country, and in the other end of the Capitol, but have not come before the Senand in the other end of the capton, but have not come being all each attended in the present moment. Now, here comes a bill passed by the other House which is to be disposed of in the ordinary routine of business and we are just entered upon the last month of the session. The Indians, whose rights are so largely concerned, have, so far as we are aware, never been heard, never had any privilege of appearing, so far as we know. There is no preparation whatever for the proper presentation of their cause to any committee of Congress. If that be so, anybody, any member of the Senate, it seems to me, will say that a much greater period of time is due for the proper preparation of their case, for its presentation, and for its hearing than remains during the present session; and if there is to be immediate action, if there is any committee of this body ready to consider it without formally hearing the rights and interests of the Indians, and ready to do them justice, it is the Committee on Indian dians, and ready to do them justice, it is the Committee on Indian Affairs; and if the Indians, being largely under the care, not to say the supervision, of this particular and appropriate committee, would naturally go to this committee with a view to the protection of their interests and before the consideration of this bill in the proper preparation of their case for its hearing and its discussion by the Senate, they naturally will go to consult with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I say, then, this bill should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs because it belongs to that committee any way under the circumstances as part of their original and primary jurisdiction; and further, if we are to act during the remainder of this short session we should send it to a committee as familiar as possible with the general principles from its previous training and investigation of the interests and rights of the Indians.

Besides, not believing that there should be any action at the present time, as the Indians are to make ready their case to be heard now or in the future, they should be put in contact with the committee that they are familiar with, which is their natural, their legal, their legislative adviser, especially in regard to this bill, with all its details so largely concerning their interests.

There are some other questions in relation to the organization of this land into a Territory which might well be considered, and which would require a great deal of time. There is all throughout the Southern States a vast, general, deep feeling, as we know, among the negro population. It comes to the surface. We hear of it from the colored people themselves, and many of the wisest of them desire that there be set apart somewhere a territory to which they can be invited, or at least to which they may go without restriction, there to organize a substantial negro community with a view to becoming a State.

They have that idea, and that sentiment is strongly reciprocated and with great vehemence avowed here on this floor by those who represent or who are supposed to represent the Southern States. glad to see this emigration take place, and if we are to organize anywhere a territory with a view to the emigration of the colored people of the South to any locality where they can be rid of their old surroundings and where their old surroundings can be rid of them, there is no territory remaining to us which we can properly consider with a view to that result except this same piece of the Indian Territory. New Mexico has been organized substantially under the auspices of white men. It would be hardly fair to those who have gone there and located themselves and their interests in that Territory to sever it with the view to the erection of a colored commonwealth in a part of New Mexico. What is true in regard to New Mexico is likewise true in reference to Arizona; and the northern portion of the country, it seems to be understood, is opposed to colored men. There is nowhere else that we can organize a territory for the colored race except here in the western portion of what is known as the Indian Territory. The colored population of the country would like to be heard unquestionably in that regard, and there should be suitable opportunity for that hearing. But the question of whether they are to go there is one that would peculiarly interest the Indians who now so largely reside in that locality.

So, then, Mr. President, in view of the race questions involved, of the industrial questions which are involved, and of the economic, social, civil, treaty, and contract relations and obligations that are involved, it seems to me that the Committee on Indian Affairs is the proper one to take original jurisdiction in the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Territories, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when Mr. REAGAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. REAGAN] is detained at home by sickness. He is paired as has been announced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Territory of Utah," on page 62, line 5, after the word "office-rent," to strike out "seven thousand" and insert "nine thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For the following expenses of the commission, namely, for traveling expenses, printing stationery, clerk-hire, and office-rent, $9,500: Provided, That out of this sum the commission is hereby authorized to pay the secretary of the Territory, who is its secretary and disbursing agent, a reasonable sum for such service, not exceeding $300, for the fiscal year 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," on page 64, line 9, after the word "Army," to insert "and one clerk of class 3, or stenographer, for the Commanding General of the Army;" in line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" in the same line, after the words "selected by," to strike out "him" and insert "them respectively;" and in line 18, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "three thousand four." so as to make the clause read: thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 2, at the end of the clause making appropriations for "Office of the Adjutant-General," to strike out the following proviso:

Out the following proviso:

Provided, That one clerk of class 4, two clerks of class 2, and six clerks of class 1 shall be employed for the sole purpose of completing, with the necessary detail from the existing force, the regimental registers of the volunteer forces of the several States during the late war. And not less than two hundred of the clerks in the office of the Adjutant-General shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications and soldiers' claims.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for "Office of the Surgeon-General," on page 68, line 10, after the word "each," to strike out "one assistant engineer" and insert "two assistant engineers;" in line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" and in line 16, after the words "five hundred and," to strike out "thirteen thousand six" and insert "fourteen thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

In the office of the Surgeon-General: One chief clerk, at $2,000; twenty-four clerks of class 4; thirty-two clerks of class 3; sixty-two clerks of class 2; one hundred and seventy-two clerks of class 1; eighty-nine clerks, at $1,000 each; one anatomist, at $1,000; two engineers, at $1,000 each; two assistant engineers, for night duty, at $900 each; two firemen; one skilled mechanic, $1,000; sixteen assistant messengers; one messenger-boy, at $300; six watchmen; two super-intendents of buildings, at $250 each; and sixteen laborers; in all, $514,500. And not less than two hundred and eighty of the clerks in the Surgeon-General's Office shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports carpeted the settlement of pension applications called for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the Signal Office until September 30, 1888, $600;" and in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of buildings for use of the War Department, as follows: For medical dispensary, Surgeon-General's Office, $1,000; for the Rebellion Record Office, $1,200; for the Signal Office until September 30, 1888, $600; in all, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," on page 75, line 4, after the word "For," to insert "the following employés, to be selected by reason of special aptitude for the work by employes, to be selected by reason of special aptitude for the work by the Secretary of the Navy, namely: Two clerks of class 4; one clerk of class 2;" in line 8, before the words "one clerk," to strike out "for;" in line 9, before the word "copyist," to strike out "and four" and insert "six;" in line 10, after the word "each," to insert "and one assistant messenger;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "six thousand two hundred and eighty" and insert "fifteen thousand and forty;" so as to make the clause read: the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Hydrographic Office," on page 77, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of building for printing-presses, draughtsmen, and engravers, storage of copper-plates and materials used in the construction and printing of charts, and for repairs and heating of the same, and for gas, water, and telephone rates, $4,500.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 5 I move to insert "s" after "building;" so as to read: "for rent of buildings for printing-presses," etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 77, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fourteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses of branch offices at Boston, New York, Philadelphia

Baltimore, Norfolk, Savannah, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Portland, Oregon, including furniture, fuel, lights, rent, and care of offices, car fare and ferriage in visiting merchant vessels, freight, express, telegrams, and other necessary expenses incurred in collecting the latest information for the Pilot Chart, and for other purposes for which the offices were established, $14,000.

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. The bill as passed by the House makes an appropriation of $12,000, and the Senate committee have increased that appropriation to $14,000. I find that the estimate of appropriation for this item is $20,000. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether it will be necessary that any of the branch offices shall be abolished on account of the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. It will not. The appropriation for the current year is $11,000. The House of Representatives increased it to $12,000, but there are two new offices, one at Portland, Oregon, and one at Savannah, Ga., and we increase the amount $2,000 so as to enable the Hydrographic Office to establish these two new places. The estimate, it is true, is $20,000, and they say they can economically use that sum, but they can maintain all these places very well with the appropriation we have provided, as I understand the case.

Mr. EUSTIS. Then I understand the Senator to state that it will not be necessary to abolish any of the branch offices on account of the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quite sure it will not.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 77, line 21, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one computer," and insert "two computers, at;" in line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" and in the same clause, on page 78, line 1, after the word "all," to strike out "nineteen thousand three" and insert "twenty thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval Observatory: For pay of three assistant astronomers, one at $2,000 and two at $1,800 each; one clerk of class 4; one instrument-maker, $1,500; two computers, at $1,200 each; four watchmen, including one for new Naval Observatory grounds; two skilled laborers, one at $1,000 and one at $720; and seven laborers; in all, $20,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 11, in the appropriations for the Naval Observatory, after the words "contingent expenses," to strike out "three thousand nine" and insert "four thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs of buildings, fixtures, and fences, fuel, gas, furniture, chemicals, stationery, freight, foreign postage, expressage, fertilizers, plants, and all contingent expenses, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 15, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in line 16, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" in line 17, after the word "two," to strike out "one stenographer" and insert "two stenographers;" in line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "nine" and insert "fifteen;" in line 19, after the word "one," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" in line 20, after the word "and," to strike out "one laborer" and insert "two laborers;" and in line 21, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty thousand three hundred and eighty" and insert "forty-five thousand two hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Provisions and Clothing: For chief clerk, $1,800; two clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; two stenographers, at $1,400 each; fifteen clerks of class 1; three clerks at $1,000 each; two copyists, one assistant messenger, and two laborers; in all, $45,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the reasons for increasing the clerical force in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing.

Mr. ALLISON. The reasons are set forth in a communication made to the committee by the Secretary of the Navy, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 17, 1889.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 17, 1889.

Sin: Since submitting the annual estimate for the clerical force of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, the Department has concluded to adopt a comprehensive system of accounts to be kept by double entry, which will show the final application of all moneys appropriated for and of all material belonging to the naval establishment. Under this plan there will be shown for each ship in the Navy her cost or present valuation, the cost of her outfit, her running expenses while in commission, and the cost of all repairs, under separate accounts, and for each navy-yard or station the cost or valuation of the real estate, the same for the machinery plant, and the cost of general maintenance. Thus every expenditure of money or supplies will be charged to the proper accounts. This is an entirely new system and is the final step in the reorganization of the Department's affairs which has been going on during the present administration. The proper establishment and carrying on of this system will require for the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing an increased clerical force, but the Department believes that the results to be obtained are ample justification for asking for the increased appropriation.

The Department regrets that it was unable to submit this revised estimate before the bill reached the Senate, but it has been prevented by various causes from taking earlier action. It is of great importance, however, to make proper provision for establishing with the beginning of the coming fiscal year a system which has been needed since the existence of the Navy Department.

A table is submitted herewith showing the force asked for, with the numbers of each grade of the classified service, and a summary giving in parallel columns the present and desired force.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Was the amendment as to the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been announced as agreed to.
Mr. CHANDLER. I did not hear. I thought I made the inquiry as soon as the Secretary finished reading the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator desires to have the vote taken, the announcement will be reconsidered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not desire it, but-

Mr. ALLISON. There will be no objection to having the matter informally opened.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish only to continue to make my suggestions upon this paragraph instead of addressing them to the paragraph concerning the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery which follows It appears that this new system which has been adopted by the Secretary of the Navy for keeping the accounts of the Navy Department requires a very large increase of force. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether anywhere, in this bill or elsewhere, there has been any reduction of the clerical force of the Department; in other words, whether under this new system, which requires an increased force, there is any reduction of force elsewhere, either clerical force or labor in the store-houses of the Depart-

As I understood the origin of this desire to have a new and improved method of keeping the Navy Department accounts, to which I take no exception, it was founded largely upon the desire for economy. I think it may be found set out in the reports of the Secretary of the Navy and in other communications that a reduced force in other bureaus and in various branches of the naval service would result from this increased force in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations inform me, if he can, where that reduction is, and whether this additional force is an addiional expense or not.

Mr. ALLISON. This is an additional force to that now provided for by law, amounting in the aggregate, I think, to about $15,000. I know of no corresponding reduction, unless it shall appear at the various navy-yards by a reduction of the clerical force there, which, I think, is not very likely. But the letter of the Secretary of the Navy clearly discloses a system of book-keeping and keeping of accounts which will be very accurate; and inasmuch as he stated that this was necessary in view of the reorganization which he had made, the committee did not feel like withholding the needed clerical force to carry out this reform, if it be a reform.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand the chairman of the committee to state that the idea of economy of reduction of expense in keeping the accounts did not enter into the purpose of the committee in consenting to this increase.

I also should like to ask the chairman of the committee, or if he does not recall the circumstance, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] who usually has charge of the naval appropriation bill, whether the naval appropriation act of last year did or did not contain a large increase, or a large appropriation of some $90,000 for the expenses of store-houses at the various navy-yards; and if so, whether that appropriation was or was not an absolute increase of expenditure without any reduction in any other department of the naval service growing out of that in-

Mr. HALE. There was some increase last year of the kind referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire in the store-house items, but it was not an entire increase to that amount.

I may say here that this feature of the new system of book-keeping and keeping accounts in the Navy Department and the consolidation of this bureau will, I think, result in economy, not simply economy in the number of clerks employed and the money paid for their compensation, but economy in the general business of the Navy Department. At a glance the Secretary of the Navy will be able to see under this system the exact condition of each navy-yard, what its supplies are, what its old material is on hand, what each vessel has cost, and what it is spending each year. In that way a very considerable economy will be introduced and advanced, and there will be a general saving to the Government, attended by an increase to a small amount of expense in the clerical force.

I have looked at this system somewhat and I think it is a good one. I think it is going to work well. It may take a few more men, but it will save money will save money.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now have before me the appropriation in the naval appropriation act of last year. Under the head of "Bureau of Provisions and Clothing" there was appropriated for labor and expenses of general store-houses, $90,000. I ask the Senator whether that was not an increase over the previous year of some $40,000 or $50,000?

Mr. HALE. That isit. Now the Senator is getting nearer to it. As I said when I was up before, there was an item of that kind, but it did not represent an increase to the extent of the appropriation. A portion of it was an increase, and it was a temporary increase. When all these officers have got to revolving in harmony under this new system the increase in expenditure even in the clerical force will not be very large.

Mr. CHANDLER. But I asked the Senator a question which I do not think he did me the honor to answer, and that was whether there was any reduction anywhere on account of the increase which has been made both in the clerical force and in reference to the force at the navy-yards in charge of general store-houses?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it will be impossible to state with precise numbers what the effect of all these changes may be. It is certainly of value to the Government to have an accurate system of accounts. That is the object of the amendment as I understand the Secretary of the Navy. In the general expenditures of the Navy an accurate and complete system of accounts will result in the end in producing economy. I think there can be no doubt about that, but how much I do not like to predict.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no doubt that within the next four years we shall have a more economical administration of the Navy Department, but whether the way to accomplish it is to begin by making these large additional appropriations is a matter about which I have some serious doubts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to,

if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Judge-Advocate-General, United States Navy," on page 80, line 17, after the words "twelve thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For stationery, furniture, newspapers, plans, drawings, drawing materials, horses and wagons to be used only for official purposes, freight, expressage, postage, and other absolutely necessary expenses of the Navy Department and its various bureaus and offices, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," on page 82, line 15, before the words "law clerks," to strike out "ten" and insert "thirteen;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Assistant Attorney-General: For one law clerk, at $2,750; one law clerk, at $2,500; one law clerk, at $2,250; thirteen law clerks, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class 3, one of whom shall act as stenographer; in all, $36,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 18, before the word "preparation," to strike out "The" and insert "For the;" so as to make the clause read:

For the preparation of the Official Register of the United States, 1899, including editing, proof-reading, and indexing, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," in the appropriations for "office of disbursing clerk," on page 102, line 15, before the word "laborers," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-two;" so as to read:

Twenty-two laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 21, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "office of disbursing clerk" of the Post-Office Department from $54,460 to $55,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department," on page 103, line 15, after the word "purchase," to strike out the word "of;" so as to make the

For purchase and keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness to be used only for official purposes, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Labor," on page 107, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert "and $200 additional while superintendent of the building;" so as to read:

Disbursing clerk, $1,800, and $200 additional while superintendent of the build-

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, on page 108, line 4, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Commissioner of Labor and the clerks and employés in his office from $84,540 to $84,740.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. EVARTS. I move an amendment in lines 8 and 9, on page 19, in the provision "For Botanic Garden: For assistants and laborers, under the direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress," an increase of the whole of $1,020, which is to be accomplished by reading, instead of "$11,073.75," "$12,093.75," and then "in all, $13,893.75."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, line 8, it is proposed to change the amount so as to read "$12,093.75," and in line 10 change the aggregate so as to read "$13,893.75."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands this amendment to be reported from the Library Committee?

Mr. EVARTS. From the Library Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And to have been referred one day before to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EVARTS. Yes, sir; it was so referred yesterday.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a modification of the amendment referred to the Committee on Appropriations yesterday by the Committee on I understand the object is to increase slightly the compensation of the assistant superintendents of the Botanic Garden, and also to increase somewhat the compensation of the laborers there. the compensation paid to these officers is wholly under the control of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, I do not feel at lib-erty to resist this amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 2, line 8, I move to strike out the words one thousand two hundred" and insert the words "one thousand four hundred and forty;" so as to put the pay of the telegraph operator appointed by the President of the Senate, the telegraph operator of the Senate, upon the same footing as the messenger to the Vice-President. It seems to me to be entirely just.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 8, after the word "operator," it is proposed to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "one thousand four hundred and forty;" so as to read:

Telegraph operator, $1,440.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not in proper form, nor does it come from any committee. If the Senator from Vermont says that he knows this to be a necessary expenditure, I do not know that I shall interpose a point of order; but it does seem to me that the amount that this telegraph operator now receives ought to be a proper compensation for his

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you take all the private telegraph operators in the United States together it probably is, but when you compare it with all the other service of the Senate clear down to its pages, it is entirely out of the proper proportion. To say that the telegraph operator of the Senate, who has to be a person who can be trusted with confidential messages, keep his own counsel, and all that, is to get only $1,200, while all the messengers of the Senate and the messenger of the Vice-President get $1,440, it appears to me is not in the least right, for the responsibility and the trust, and to get the right kind of a man for that place-and I believe we have the right one now-is very much greater than it is in regard to any other servant of the Senate who receives $1,440.

Mr. HARRIS. The pay proposed by the Senator from Vermont is certainly very moderate for the responsible duties that that officer per-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. This change requires a change of the total, which will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Five thousand one hundred dollars" I think it should be.

should be.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the total, in line 9, on page 2, by making it read "$5,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill, I move, on page 20, line 19, that the word "two" be stricken out and the word "three" inserted instead, giving three clerks instead of two of class 3 to the Civil Service Commission. That is in accordance with the estimates. My recollection is that this estimate has been made each year for two or three years, if not more. I make the motion because I have understood from a gentleman connected with the commission that it is absolutely necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. The estimates contemplate three other changes. I move to strike out the second word "two," in line 19, and insert "three" also. They want three new clerks of class 2.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations considered this entire clause very carefully, and, after looking over the whole field, decided that the clerical force of the Civil Service Commission was a sufficient force for its present needs. I was rather of opinion that they needed one or two more clerks myself, and therefore did not raise the point of order when the Senator from Connecticut made the motion for an additional clerk of class 3, but I hope no further force will be sug gested or proposed by the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a very touching appeal. I am glad the chairman of the committee was a little lenient when I made the first

Mr. EDMUNDS. He was in favor of that.

Mr. HAWLEY. He was in favor of that, but he is not in favor of all of it. I wish the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would consent to let the question be submitted to the Senate and let us have the vote of the jury on that particular case. The commission

Say:

Since the last year's estimates were submitted there has been an entire revision of the civil-service rules and of the classification of the departmental service which has resulted in bringing into the classified service and subject to examination a large number of places (not far from 3,000) not heretofore classified for examination. For filling many of these places, notably those in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Geological Survey, the Nautical Almanac Office, the Hydrographic Office, the Naval Observatory, and the technical Almanac Office, the Supervising Architect's Office, examinations of a very high grade and of the most technical character are required, demanding the most careful, pains-taking, and expert work on the part of the clerical and examining forces of the commission. During the last year the classified service has also been increased by the addition of eight post-offices to the classified is, and it is certain that there will be an equal or greater increase in this direction in the year to come. It is also probable that there will be an early enlargement of the classified service by the inclusion of the railway mail service and the Indian school service. But without this enlargement the additional clerks estimated for are absolutely required for the proper performance of the work now imposed upon the commission.

The short and the long of it is really to tell the truth about it that

The short and the long of it is really, to tell the truth about it, that if the Civil Service Commission is to be kept in existence at all, a reasonable and repeated request for additional clerical force should have some attention. I adhere, of course, to my motion.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. PLUMB. Should not the matter stand upon a rather more solid foundation than the request of persons interested? Should there not be something to show that the civil service of the United States will be benefited by this commission which will to a certain extent warrant the additional appropriation required? If I were going to defend the commission, I should want to do it not upon the basis of the enlargement of the force or that they had repeatedly requested it, because that is something which we are all pretty familiar with here, but upon the ground that the continuation of the commission had been greatly to the benefit of the civil service of the United States, and upon that subject I should like to hear the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. If I said "the request of the commission," that was a carelessness of expression. I meant the official recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, based of course upon the recommendation.

Secretary of the Treasury, based, of course, upon the recommendation of the commission. I should have said that the Secretary of the Treasury estimated that this was necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of that office. There are needed there three more clerks and another laborer. I do not at all admit that that involves any call upon me to discuss the wisdom or unwisdom of the Civil Service Commission or the success of their labors, because we are forbidden in an appropria-tion bill to change the existing law, and I am only proposing to pro-vide for clerks that are made necessary for work ordered by the existing law. I am under no obligation to go any further, but I should not object to doing so if there should be occasion for it.

In my judgment the Civil Service Commission has done a vast deal of good and is to be maintained, is to be perfected and enlarged. not admit that the law has been enforced in full or in good faith in some respects, for I know that there are most lamentable, and I may say outrageous, cases of evasion of the law, but from my observation on general principles based upon the general bent and tendency of that work, I say it has been a blessing to the Democratic side, and rather an unexpected blessing to them, that there have been 12,000 or 15,000 employes of the Government who were not directly subjected to removal and substitution at their request. I think it will be equally convenient to the Republicans during the next four years to have the increased number of 15,000 or 20,000 people, of whom the heads of Departments can say to applicants, "These people are beyond my reach by law." But whether that may be an individual opinion or not, I say I am standing by the existing law, and if it is not to be maintained, let us frankly avow that, that a Republican Senate will nullify that law. It is quite another thing to do it manfully by actual act of repeal. If we do not want it, let us repeal the law establishing the compear. If we do not want it, let us repear the law establishing the commission, but while it is upon the statute-book it is a simple matter of compliance with the ordinary rules of the Senate to furnish the force which is needed to carry out the law.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the Senator attaches far too much importance to the neglect of the committee, if I may so term it, to put on this additional force. It is not usual, I will say to him, to give to any Department of the Government everything which that Department asks for; and, unless I make a mistake about the importance of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, I will say that practically the Secretary of the Treasury transmits to Congress only the recom-mendations of heads of Departments which have been given to him by those heads, and the estimate is not in any proper sense an expression of the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask just there if it is not customary every year for the Secretary of the Treasury to revise and condense and reduce the sum total of the estimates?

Mr. PLUMB. I think not where it refers to estimates for clerical

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that it does, but I have always understood it to be the part of a wise Cabinet officer having charge of the estimates to keep them within a moderate limit. Mr. PLUMB. I am re-enforced in my opinion about the limitations which actually exist by the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the effect that when it comes to the expression of opinion on the part of the head of a Department concerning the clerical force of his Department the Secretary of the Treasury sends that down nem. con. But, Mr. President, I do not know that I would attach any more importance to this even if the Secretary recommended it. I do not say I do not attach some importance to it.

We have a law providing for a Bureau of Statistics.

ator say, because we do not give all the clerk-hire which the head of that bureau and the Secretary of the Treasury ask for, therefore we are under constraint to repeal the law establishing the Bureau of Sta-

Mr. HAWLEY. No, Mr. President, but by the Senator's own argument this is a very different case. He shifted the ground a few moments ago, and said that this depended upon the wisdom of having any Civil Service Commission at all.

Mr. PLUMB. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Bureau of Statistics was not in question. There is no argument about that. So when the Senator says they do not need another clerk, I feel pretty sure it is not because of any hostility to that bureau itself; but when my friend, the Senator from Kansas, asks me whether there is any good in having any of them in the Civil Service Commission, I rather doubt whether he thinks they ought to have one more clerk or not. I understand the Senator from Kansas would wipe the whole thing out.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator was never wider apart from the facts in his life than he is at this present moment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am very glad to hear it. Mr. PLUMB. I do not subscribe to that doctrine of civil-service reform which has been developed by a morbid desire to pattern after the British form and detail of government, and I do not believe in this precise kind of civil-service reform and would not adopt it if I were to have my choice of the kind of civil-service reform that I would have practiced, but I am not prepared to abolish this nor do I desire to limit its operations to the extent that I believe those operations are carried on usefully. But when I am asked to vote additional sums of public money for the purpose of enlarging the scope of a bureau of this Government, I am bound to inquire whether the management of that bureau is what it ought to be; not for the purpose of determining whether I want to abolish it, but whether I want to have the particu-lar bent and inclination and kind of operation carried on by that I think, if the Senator from Connecticut desires to discharge his I think, if the Senator from Connecticut desires to discharge his duty as a Senator on this floor, that he can not discharge it by saying he will vote for a particular appropriation for the sole and only reason that the Secretary of the Treasury estimates for it. He is, I think, bound on his oath to inquire whether or no the appropriation is proper to be made in any particular case. But, being challenged on the subject, he certainly should inquire whether the service requires it, whether the service as carried on with the existing force produces the results which it ought to produce; and I say myself that I do not believe it does. I believe that it has been rotten to the core, one-sided, grasping, avaricious in a certain way, which has not tended to benefit the other branches of the civil service of the Government to the extent that they ought to have been benefited by reason of this innovation; and I shall be glad to see it reorganized; I shall be glad to see it come under a different control; and I shall be glad to see it made more useful in the line of a truly non-partisan civil service reform for the Government. That is what I should like to see.

Mr. President, it has been made the shelter for the retention in office not of the best Republicans who were found in office by this Administration. I had hopes when the Democratic Administration came into power that it would remove a very large number of incompetents whom it found in office, persons who had come down from a former generation, persons whom Republican Administrations felt bound to provide for by sympathy, which ought to be disregarded in the public service; persons who had outlived their usefulness in the Departments and were incumbrances there. If the Democratic Administration had been whole-somely inclined, if it could have got away from the cant and hypocrisy of what has been called, and truly called, "snivel service reform," it would have removed a number of hundreds, if not a number of thousands of that class of persons from the public service, and replaced them with members of its own party or with useful people who might have been provided through the means of a proper civil service.

The vital power of this whole institution is the President of the United States. He makes the rules and regulations, he gives them scope and verge, and the system has not had that direction which it ought to have had, and it has not done for the civil service of the United States what it might have done, and what it was intended to do, and what I hope hereafter, under a wiser management, it may do.

But, before I consent to go on in this blind way any longer, I want to see if we can not, under a new administration, get some additional grip upon it that will make it conform more to that which is practical, and that which is useful, and that which is really in the best sense non-partisan.

Now, it happens that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury in this particular case is discredited, because, if this increase of force is necessary at all, it is necessary because of the fact that since the election, at a very suspicious moment, near the time when this Administration was about to make its exit from public life, there were added to the classified service and put under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission all the employés of the Post-Office Depart-If that service were left in the condition in which it was found by the Democratic Administration, no classification was necessary.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator means the postal railway service.
Mr. PLUMB. The postal railway service.
Mr. HAWLEY. He said "the Post-Office Department."
Mr. PLUMB. I have always supposed that was a part of the Post-Office Department. If it is not, let us call it something else.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that the Senator understood me.

The Senator said the clerks of the Post-Office Department were put under civil-service rules. They have been there before. I suppose he referred to the railway postal clerks.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is now doing the service of the Democratic Administration.

Mr. HAWLEY. Why, Mr. President, I am merely asking a question for information. Have not the clerks of the Post-Office Department been under civil-service rules

Mr. PLUMB. I have got three or four paragraphs beyond that. I am talking about something else now.

Mr. HAWLEY. We had not passed it at all.

Mr. PLUMB. I was saying that the Senator from Connecticut, in advocating the increase of the clerical force, following the recommendation of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, was making his contribution to the Democratic Administration's determination to embarrass the incoming Republican Administration. As I was proceeding to say, if that Administration, when it came in, had taken account of the railway postal service as it found it, and had carried on that service according to the manner in which it was carried on by its Republican predecessors, there would not have been the complaints, loud and long and well founded, which have filled this country from one end to the other during the past four years in regard to that service.

I can readily see how a Democratic Postmaster-General, contemplating the absolute inefficiency of that service to-day, might as a matter of despair have gone to the Civil Service Commission to make it better, but I am not going to give him credit for having done it from a motive of that kind. It was done for the purpose of embarrassing the Republican Administration, and the keeping in under some kind of arrangement a class of men who but for that would not be kept in at all, who are not knee-high in the qualifications proper for the useful administration of the postal service of the United States.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I have no idea of defending the Civil Service Commission or any action that has been taken for the enlargement of its duties; but it is due to truth to say that this Administration in extending the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission after the election, between November and now, simply followed the example set by the last Republican Administration, when Department after Department, among others the Agricultural Department, was placed within the civil-service law by the act of the late President Arthur in less than twenty days before the expiration of his term. Therefore there is nothing unusual in that act. It is in the ordinary course of affairs as determined upon by both Presidents, and not for political

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator finds a parallel in these two cases he is more acute than I. The Democratic Administration has had the benefit of the exercise of "offensive partisanship" of the most desperate character during three years and eight months of its Administration of the Post-Office Department, and coming to its death-bed, like the devil, it would be a monk. It might have with very great consistency and propriety, having had the benefit of that service, having run it in a manner which was entirely—I was going to say disgraceful—but inefficient to the last degree, it might have had the consistency and sense of propriety to have left that administration to be taken up by its Republican successor unembarrassed by the introduction of the operation of that branch into the classified service of the United States.

As I said, that has been done with the apparent purpose of preventing the incoming President from controlling that service for the benefit of the public by making proper removals of the incompetent persons who have been introduced into it during the past four years.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.
Mr. DANIEL. Do the civil-service rules prevent the making of re-

Mr. PLUMB. They do not; but at the same time, according to a custom which has arisen, and which has furnished a shelter for these incompetent people, removals are not made with the facility they otherwise would be, and from very proper considerations, and because there is not the certainty of the replacement of the person removed by a proper person to fill the place. A very important element in these matters, I may say to the Senator from Virginia, is that where a certain person ought to be removed because of his unfaithfulness or incompetency, if we have no control over the person to succeed him, we should hesitate a long time before taking the responsibility of removing him; and that is one of the embarrassments of the situation, and an embarrassment which the Democratic Administration to some extent has felt.

Mr. GORMAN. That is a failure of the law.
Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Maryland says that is a failure of the law. Very well; if that is a failure of the law, then I say to the Senator from Connecticut that before we extend the operations of a bad law we had better see if we can not amend the law.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator will allow me to ask if he can show us any way to disembarrass the incoming Administration by removing all the restrictions? I am in entire sympathy with his speech. I do not think the incoming Administration ought to be embarrassed, and I shall be most happy to support any amendment to the bill which will enable the incoming Administration to remove anybody and appoint anybody that they please to office. I should look upon it as a ray of light if he could show the way to do that thing.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is very kind indeed. He is nearly as kind as the Democratic Administration that is going out.

But I do not address myself to that question now or the amendment I simply say, for the purpose of what we are now considering, it is sufficient to assert, and it is not necessary to argue the question, that the Civil Service Commission has not performed in the matter of this class of persons introduced into the public service of the United States that which ought to be performed. I think it would have been a great deal better for the service, I think it would have left the outgoing Administration in a better condition before the country, if it had left the postal service under the legal conditions in which it was formerly, so that the new Administration coming in might have tried its hand at bettering that service. That service touches more people than any other portion of the public service; it is of more consequence. It is one in which they come to realize and see and appreciate the shortcomings more than they do anywhere else; and there is not a Senator on that side of the Chamber who can say that the postal service has been what it ought to have been during the past four years.

In saying that, I do not say there were not conditions under which the Democratic Administration assumed control of the Government and the men with whom it had to deal that made that failure to carry on properly this postal service to some extent mevitable. I am only speaking of facts. That being the fact, I do not want the Senator from Connecticut, I do not want anybody, to come in now and on the recommendation of the outgoing Secretary of the Treasury give effect to this extraordinary performance of the Democratic Administration, whereby the Republican Administration is to be hampered in its efforts to improve the postal service of the United States

The Senator can not find in that, I think, any hostility to an honest and fair civil service. He may find in it some evidence that I do not think very well of the people who have been managing that service. About that I do not particularly care. He may find in that some evidence that I do not think the law in all its features is precisely what it ought to be, and I will join hands with him or anybody else in putting the service on the best possible basis, and in eliminating from it what is called in the ordinary sense partisanship; in other words, in establishing that condition of things in which the best possible transaction of the public service shall be the first concern, to which all other things shall be subordinate, and in which the advantage to party, except as it grows out of a better management of the service, shall be left out of account. If there is any better definition of civil service than that, I do not know it

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator has frequently referred to the Senator from Connecticut, which was entirely unnecessary, in parts of his address, because I had also said previously that the law had been badly administered, that there were serious errors, not to use a stronger expression, in the administration of it by the Democratic

The Senator was so kind as to observe, in that soothing and gentle manner which characterizes him, that I was contributing with the Democratic party to the embarrassment of the new Administration. The Senator will observe, if he cares to be correct, that these appropriations and the amendment which I offered take no effect until the 1st of July next, when the new Administration will have been four months in power. I sincerely believe the new President will endeavor to execute the law fairly and fully. I surely hope that he will do so.

The Senator from Kansas need not have addressed to me his criticisms concerning the act of the present Administration in putting the railway postal clerks for the first time under the civil-service rules. I think it was a mistake. I think the Administration might have found out nearly four years ago that it was an appropriate place for that body of clerks. It did find out four years ago when it came into power that there was not a body of men in the civil service of the Government anywhere equal in diligence, in faithfulness, and in severity of examination also to the railway postal clerks of the United States. I think it was about the best body of servants we had. I think that so far as its final excellences go half has been shorn away by the consistent course of removal for party purposes.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to make a statement in the line of what he is saying?

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I was told by a man of very high character and with the very best means of knowledge of the subject, in regard to recent appointments in the railway mail service in the New England States, the region where I live, that on inquiry being put to the new incum-bents, for whom the old faithful Republicans have been turned out, what had been their occupation in life previously to their being called to that service, the answer in a very large number of cases was that they had been bar-tenders.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no doubt whatever that about 90 per cent. of the railway postal clerks in New England—others can speak for their own sections—have been changed, and to a large extent to the detriment of the service.

I did not attempt to justify the present Administration. I expressed my belief that it had committed errors; but that is not a practical con-

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me—
Mr. HAWLEY. I should rather the Senator would wait, but I will give way to him.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to one other misfortune, and that is the adoption of the rule by this Civil Service Commission-

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not hear the Senator. Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear what is going on. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will be in order.

Mr. DAWES. I say that under the rule adopted by the Civil Service Commission no one of these competent clerks in the railway mail service who have been removed can be restored, at any rate, under a year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, sir, I am frank to say that if I were to become President on the 4th of March I would right that postal railway service if I cleaned the whole of them out in a day. It ought to be righted, and I know man after man turned out of the service who ought to go back, veteran soldiers and accomplished railway clerks who were to go back, veteran soldiers and accomplished railway clerks who were turned out for the sake of some fourth-class ward committeeman, and I say I am not embarrassed by any technicalities of law as to the duty of the Chief Executive in that matter. I would put the service where it was four years ago, and better it, too, if I could. I would perfect it. For my part, coming in as President, I would not care one farthing about the late order of the President putting them under civil-service. ice rules. I have no doubt it was intended to a large extent to save men who ought not to be saved, and I would not permit them to be

But this has nothing to do with the question before the Senate.

The Senator from Kansas can not involve me by saying that I am trying to represent the Democratic Administration to the embarrassment of the new one. I am only arguing to give the new Administration additional strength to use their power for four years.

The Senator says I ought to inform myself about the real needs of the service before moving an amendment, and not move it simply because it is asked. I know two of the chief men of the four who have been there. I know one of the examiners very well, one of the commissioners, and the chief examiner, an old soldier from Connecticut. I know them well; I meet them frequently; I hear them talk; and, besides, my eyes are, in a measure, open to the general condition of the civil service anyhow. I did not make the motion simply because the suggestion was in the Book of Estimates. I made it because, whatever the defects of the present Administration, I wish the civil-service law to have a further full and fair trial, not in accordance with the letter, but in accordance with the spirit of it, demanding of every Cabinet officer and every chief of division and every man below a perfect service, whatever the rules are.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that I am not opposed to a proper civil service; I desire it; but I am absolutely and unqualifiedly opposed to the present system, because it excludes more competent men and women than it includes. After a man has arrived at an age when he is fit to enter the public service, and he has some specialty, such as accountant, copyist, or any other qualification which makes his services requisite and proper, he ought to be admitted for that reason and the Government ought to have the power to avail itself of his service just the same as a banker or a merchant has to obtain the best service. But where a general lot of conundrums, which it may or may not be necessary to know, probably not having any relation to the particular service, are put to the class, the best may be unable to answer and the poorest may accidentally hit upon it. The very best clerks and the very best persons qualified for the service under this system refuse to apply, because they say "I will have to go back to school again and learn geography to be an accountant in the Treasury Department; I would have to learn something about history to be a copyist in the Treasury Department or any one of the Departments." Consequently the great mass of men and women who have special fitness for the service are excluded, and I am opposed to a system that excludes the best-qualified persons.

It seems to me that the Departments here are business Departments, and they should be conducted on business principles. If a banker or a railroad man desires a person for a particular employment he will call upon him and question him as to the kind of work he is to perform and set him at work on trial. If he is efficient in that direction he is employed. The Government has no such means of selecting men fit for the purpose, but a day is set, everybody goes, and those who happen to answer the questions, either being previously posted as to the run of things by some friend or by accident, get certificates. Then four of them are selected and presented to the appointing officer, one of whom he takes. This system excludes those best qualified. It is a system that would be repudiated by any business man in the United States, and it tends to put men in office by influences that are unknown and for whose appointment nobody is responsible.

If there is to be a civil-service examination it ought to be conducted in the same way that a business examination would be conducted to obtain persons to fill business places. This whole system, it seems to me, is a fraud, a farce, and a delusion, and excludes from the public service as a rule those best qualified to fill the places. I am opposed to it, unless it is reduced to some rational business basis to ascertain the qualification for office, so that we can have in the public service men qualified to fill the places, and is not left to jugglery in the examinations.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to submit a conference report. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it. Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (8, 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And the commission is hereby authorized and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act; and, upon the request of the commission, it shall be the duty of any district attorney of the United States to whom the commission may apply to institute in the proper court and to prosecute, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and for the punishment of all violations thereof; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And the House agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And the House agree to the same.

That as to the amendments numbered 3 and 7 the committee of conference are unable to agree.

S. M. CULLOM, O. H. PLATT, ISHAM G. HARRIS, Managers on the part of the Senate. CHARLES F. CRISP, A. R. ANDERSON, CHAS. O'NEILL, Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. CÛLLOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments that are not agreed to, numbered 3 and 7, and ask for a further conference thereon

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was going to ask a question before the vote was taken upon concurring in the report. If I understood one of the amendments it provides that the commissioners shall institute proceedings themselves in their names. Did I understand it correctly?

Mr. CULLOM. No, not exactly so. It follows the law as it has been heretofore. Mr. SAULSBURY. There has been no change of the law in that Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the question may be fully understood the message of the House of Representatives will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 4, 1889. Resolved, That the House insists upon its amendments numbered 3 and 7 to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. Crise, Mr. Anderson of Iowa, and Mr. O'Nelle of Pennsylvania be the managers of the further conference on the part of the House,

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have those amendments read, for I desire to move that the Senate recede from one of the amend-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 2, after the word "act," add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to carry refined oils and other petroleum products, cotton-seed oil, and turpentine for any shipper, in tank or cylinder cars, who shall own, lease, or control the same in any manner, except upon the condition that said carrier shall charge the same rate for the transportation of said products in wooden packages or barrels, in car-load lots, as in said tank or cylinder cars, the said tank and cylinder and said wooden packages and barrels being carried free in each case.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the third amendment of the House, as I

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is amendment numbered 3.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to that amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will not be done. I think it would be the beginning of the breaking down of the act if we should commence system of special legislation in connection with this bill, such as is, I think, incorporated in the provision that has just been read.

I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio that the subject is all before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that commission has been the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that commission has been making decisions which I think practically reach the very thing the Senator, as I suppose, desires, but whenever we commence to legislate about one particular thing in a general act to regulate interstate commerce we shall have to extend the act to every other item of business that anybody is engaged in, so that I think it would result in breaking down the law in all probability.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can make a very brief statement which will show the ground upon which I base this motion.

By the present system of conducting the transportation of oil in tanks.

By the present system of conducting the transportation of oil in tanks in the cars of the Standard Oil Company, there is as complete a monopoly in the business of transporting oil and as total a destruction of the ordinary mode of transporting it in barrels as existed at any time before the passage of the act of which this is an amendment. The provision of the House amendment is in the line of the legislation in regard to interstate commerce. It declares that no discrimination shall be made in favor of transporting oil in oil-tanks furnished by a particular company. No other company in the country probably has the capacity or the ability to transport oil in that way except this company, and it is a discrimination against the smaller dealers, who are compelled from the necessity of the case to transport their oil in wooden barrels.

The whole purport of the House provision in the light of this ex-

The whole purport of the House provision in the light of this explanation is that no discrimination shall be made against those persons who are compelled by the necessities of their trade and business to transport oil in wooden barrels instead of iron tanks furnished by a particular company, because if that can not be so, and if the discrimination shall be made in favor of this great company which controls the great body of the business in oil, as a matter of course the smaller companies who are compelled to compete at this disadvantage will be driven out of the market, and there is then an absolute monopoly in the transportation of oil.

It must be remembered also that this same company has what are called pipe lines of transit by which it transports oil great distances by the simple flow of the oil by gravitation. No others without large capital can compete with them in this mode of transportation. To that extent they have now a very great advantage given to them by their enormous capital and by their combinations. But there are persons engaged in the production of oil, especially in my own State, men who in the ordinary course of business are compelled from the necessities of the case to put the oil in barrels, because, in the first place, they have not the capital to buy cars and equipment stock for railroads to be rented out on special contract, nor can they be expected to do it.

If no one can engage in the business of transporting oil except those who own their own tanks, as a matter of course it is as complete a monopoly, as I said a moment ago, as you could possibly imagine; and in this mode of conducting this business of transportation the great company that has the natural advantage and superiority in capital and strength is enabled to drive all others out of the business, and in the end will make its own prices in its own way. It is one of those com-binations, one of those advantages, which capital gives.

All that the House sought to correct by this provision is simply to provide that no higher rate shall be charged on oil transported in barrels than in tanks. It does seem to me that it is a just and proper provision in the very line of the measure which my friend from Illinois has fathered and carried through successfully.

If this provision is made, then as a matter of course the commissioners charged with the execution of the law will make regulations to see that no injustice is done. Without some such restriction you might as well simply put into your law a provision that but one company shall transact business in oil in this country, and that no other company shall transport it unless they are rich enough and strong enough to make special contracts with railroad companies, and to carry oil in expensive tanks and with the machinery furnished by the producers of the oil.

I have looked at it with care. I do not wish to interfere with this bill. I am in favor of the bill in all its parts, and I think this provision of the House is one of the most important and wide-reaching provisions of the bill, and it ought to be promptly agreed to. Nor do I think that the House will recede from it, because it was there debated and they understand it fully and know exactly where the shoe pinches.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the amendment of the House is practically the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in a case made before them between Mr. Rice and the Standard Oil Company. The object of the provision is to make it a penal offense if the decision of the commission is not complied with. There are provisions in the bill to which this is an amendment by which the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission can be enforced, and I understand that now practically there is no claim made that that decision has not been complied with.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not agree to it, then?
Mr. PLATT. I will come to that in a moment. Indeed, I happened by chance this morning to meet one of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who of himself said that the whole matter was working well, and that he thought in a short time under the operation of the law there would be no friction whatever in relation to the transportation of oil. My objection to the amendment is that stated by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and the chairman of the conference committee, that it is wrong in principle for us here in Congress to attempt to say what shall be a discrimination in regard to the methods of transporting any particular article of merchandise in any particular manner in railroad cars.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? He says that it is wrong in principle. Is it not in strict conformity with the principle on which the interstate-commerce act was framed?

Mr. PLATT. It is not. It is directly in opposition to that principle, the principle of the interstate-commerce act being that there shall be no discrimination in the transportation of products, that the question whether there has been discrimination shall be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission to decide, and that Congress is not to decide in a specific instance what is a discrimination. That is the principle of the act, and this provision of the House is an absolute departure from it, and I think is vicious.

I am aware that when any one says that the Standard Oil Company has been doing something there is immediately felt to be a disposition has been doing something there is immediately left to be a disposition to curb the operations of the Standard Oil Company. But this is a thing which reaches a good deal farther than the Standard Oil Company. The principle, if adopted in this amendment, will not stop here, but Congress will be appealed to year after year and month after month to declare that the method of transporting other articles and the charges which shall be put upon the different modes of transportation of other writeles are a discrimination and should replied the particles. articles are a discrimination and should subject the party to punishment if indulged in. So if we say it with regard to oil, we shall be obliged when some one comes and says that a railroad company is not carrying wheat in one way at the rate which it ought to carry it, or when it carries it in another way, to make a law which tells what shall be a discrimination in the charges and in the manner of the transportation of wheat; and so with regard to every other product.

If we want to get the advantage of the law, it has been my opinion that we should stand by the principle upon which it was enacted and leave to the commission the question whether discriminations existed, whether a charge put upon an article transported in one method was a whether a charge put upon an article transported in one method was a discrimination, considering that it was transported at another price by another method. If Congress is to deal with that it will have its hands full, and it will result, in my judgment, as suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and the chairman of the conference committee, in breaking down the law.

What the interstate-commerce law needs more than anything else, in my judgment, is to be let alone for the present until the commission has had a full opportunity to administer it, and to remedy by the administration of the law the evils which existed at the time the law was

I can think of numerous products where parties might come to Congress with the same propriety and ask that a law should be enacted providing that a product transported in one way should pay no more per pound, per bushel, per gallon, per barrel, or per hundred than when transported in another way, as, for instance, where people are engaged in the manufacture of charcoal iron. I speak of that because I have seen the immense cars in which they transport their charcoal, that might hold, I suppose, a thousand bushels of charcoal, owned by the parties who are making the charcoal iron. Some other man who is making charcoal iron in a small way, and who has no such cars, might with the same propriety come to Congress and say that he should be charged no more per bushel when he puts his charcoal into a common box-car than were the others charged who furnished these immense cars. Perhaps were the others charged who infinished these limited ears. Fernaps that is right, but if it be right, it is better to leave it to the commission to determine what is right, what is fair, what is equal, than in every instance where somebody feels that he has been discriminated against to pass an act of special legislation that as to that particular product the rates of transportation shall be thus and so, however it may be transported—that charcoal shall be transported for so much a bushel, that wheat shall be transported for so much a hundred, that oil shall be transported for so much a gallon, and that beef shall be transported for so much a hundred, whether dressed or alive. If Congress will let the commission alone it will, in my judgment, bring order out of the chaos which existed when the law was passed and satisfy the wishes of the country in regard to the transportation problem.

As I said before, if the Standard Oil Company has been doing anything wrong, I am the last man to justify it. If it has been oppressing anybody, I am the last man to justify it. But in our desire to do justice as against the Standard Oil Company, it would be folly to engage in an act of legislation which is purely special in its character and not general, and which would lead, as it seems to me, to more evils than it would to leave the matter even without adjustment and remedy.

But there is no occasion for it, because the complaint which existed when the amendment was proposed is, I understand from the commission itself, largely removed, and in the opinion of the commission will be entirely removed at no distant day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will yield to a motion to go into executive session in order to remove the injunction of secrecy

Several SENATORS. It is too late.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It is not too late. It will only take a few

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say only a few words more in regard to this matter. I have now the proposition before me, and if my friend will excuse me I wish now to make a statement.

I will state the grievance as I understand it. In Ohio, in West Virginia, and in some parts of Pennsylvania there are still some persons transporting oil either in its natural state or in the refined state, and they are compelled by necessity, as a matter of course, to transport it in barrels made in the neighborhood. I have not arraigned the Stand-ard Oil Company; they are only doing what business men may do when they get an advantage. They, however, have devised a new mode of transporting oil in tanks. They find it to their interest to make these tanks and furnish the equipment, the car with the great tanks which all Senators have seen. They carry their oil in these tanks. It is shown, I believe, at least the statement is made to me that it was shown in proof, that the weight of the tank is a great deal more than the weight of barrels containing the same quantity of oil; and yet they furnish to the railroads these tanks and the railroads carry the tanks back and forth, returning them free of cost.

Mr. PLATT. As much as the cars with

Mr. PLATT. As much as the cars with the barrels in them?
Mr. SHERMAN. I am not sure about that. At any rate the thing that contains the oil which is transported over the railroads weighs more pounds than the barrels that contain the same quantity. the discrimination is made so as practically to destroy the business of every person engaged in this industry, unless he can own the tanks together with the cars upon which they rest, and will furnish them to the railroad companies free of cost, and in return he gets free transportation for the railroad car going and coming, whether empty or full. That is the grievance complained of; but whether it be truly stated or not, the simple provision in the House bill, stricken out in the Senate without my knowledge or I should have called attention to it before, although I probably was not here—
Mr. PLATT. The bill was amended in the other House.
Mr. SHERMAN. They substitute their section for the Senate sec-

Mr. PLATT. It is an amendment made by the other House to our bill

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not printed here in italics. That is all I know about it. Let me read the provision. I think it contains as fair and proper a proposition as can be made:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry refined oils and other petroleum products, cotton-seed oil, and turpentine for any shipper, in tank or cylinder cars, who shall own, lease, or control the same in any manner, except upon the condition that said carrier shall charge the same rate for the transportation of said products in wooden packages or barrels, in car-load lots, as in said tank or cylinder cars, the said tank and cylinder and said wooden packages and barrels being carried free in each case,

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the Senator from Ohio tell me what he understands the last clause means, that "said tank and cylinder and said wooden packages and barrels" shall be carried free?

Mr. SHERMAN. It means, as I understand it, that the railroad companies do not charge for transporting these tank-cars either way, going or coming, while they do charge the small dealers who have to put their product in barrels. They charge them on the barrels in moving one way, and when the barrels are returned empty they are charged again. That is said to be the discrimination, and this provision simply declares that that discrimination shall not be made. It seems to me that it is exactly according to the spirit and object of the law. It is a wise provision, carefully inserted to meet the particular cases that actually occur and that are occurring every day. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will recede from its disagreement to the House amendment and let the provision stand as it appears in the print of the bill

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he knows whether that provision would be just or not?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only say that from my sense of justice it would be very just.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the Senator's judgment it is just, if they carry the cylinders free, that they should carry wooden packages and barrels

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. Why not?
Mr. HISCOCK. Do not the tanks take up a great deal more room?
Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.
Mr. HISCOCK. The iron tank weighs more than the barrel. It may take up the whole room; but empty barrels do not take up much

Mr. SHERMAN. But the iron tank is in the place of the car. It takes the place of the car.

Mr. PLATT. The iron tank with the oil in it does not weigh as much as the ordinary car with barrels containing the same amount of

Mr. HISCOCK. I think whatever is done should be done understandingly.

Mr. SHERMAN. This provision was carefully prepared with a view to make exact charges.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the first place, of course the tank is a car prac-

Mr. HISCOCK. In the first place, of course the tank is a car practically by itself.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it must have the same wheels.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly, but it answers as the box of the car. It is a whole car by itself. In the event of another car going back, it goes back partly loaded with barrels or entirely loaded with barrels, and without regard to their weight and without regard to the space they may take up. You compel the company, as I understand the provison to mean, to carry those packages free without knowing, as it seems to me, whether they can be carried as cheaply or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I know is from these printed statements. The statement is made that the iron tank in which the oil is contained weighs more than the barrel, and the iron tank is returned on cars, furnished, it is true, by the shipper.

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator a question? Is not that somewhat counterbalanced by the fact that they do not have to handle them, whereas they do have to handle barrels?

Mr. SHERMAN. They require the shipper in every case to loa! the cars

Mr. SPOONER. And unload them?
Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; that is the way. They deliver in carads. This oil is probably carried in car-loads, not in single tanks.
Mr. SPOONER. I understand that, but a car loaded with barrels has to be loaded and unloaded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand in both cases the shipper is required to load the cars. In one case they empty the car by a screen and in the other case they furnish the barrels and load the cars.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Senator if he thinks it would make any difference whether there may be an entire load or part of a load?

Mr. SHERMAN. This provision only applies to where there is a full load, a car-load. It does not apply to where they transport 2, 3, 4, or 5 barrels, but only where the shipment is by car-loads. There is no injustice in this provision.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask another questions.

tion? Is there not much greater risk to the carrier from fire where oil is carried in casks or barrels than when it is carried in tanks?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know how that is, but I take it as a matter of course that the person who sends this perishable property will take his own insurance.

Mr. SPOONER. But the railroad company, for instance, has a train of cars. One may be loaded with valuable freight of one kind, another with freight of another kind, and in that train there may be a care loaded with oil-barrels. Would not there be more danger in such a case?

Mr. SHERMAN. If a railroad company chooses to carry such a thing as oil in an ordinary merchant train, it is a great fool; that is all

I have to say. Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; I will yield.
Mr. BLAIR. I merely rise to ask the interference of the Chair. I believe the little snatches I get of the conversation going on among Senators are very interesting, and as they bear, I think, upon the bill, I should have been glad to hear what was being said. It was only with that view that I addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Business will not be resumed until the Senate is in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—
Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate adjourn.
Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to make a mo-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cul-LOM] is entitled to the floor, having been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the doors be closed and the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

Mr. CULLOM. I have the floor, I believe, under the decision of Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I thought my motion was privileged. I beg pardon if I was mistaken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if there is a disposition to debate this subject very long, I should be inclined to yield. If there is not, I should like to have it disposed of, so that we can go on with the appropriation bill. I want to say but a few words.

It is suggested that there is probably not a quorum in the Senate,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the absence of a quorum is suggested it becomes the duty of the Chair to order a roll-call.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield the floor to the Senator from Nebraska to move an adjournment.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the Senator allow me to give a notice? Mr. PADDOCK. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to give notice that on Thursday, if it will be convenient in the progress of the business of the Senate, at the close of the formal morning business I shall call up Calendar No. 714, being the bill (S. 1067) relating to imported liquors, in order to submit some remarks.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the doors be closed and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska had previously moved to adjourn, but yielded to the Senator from Iowa to give a notice. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PADDOCK. Not for that purpose. I think the Senate had better adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 6, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

SUNDAY-REST BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a memorial in behalf of the Sunday-rest bill. I have been asked to present it, and have sought an opportunity for several days to do so. It is quite short.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the memorial will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

A memorial on the Sunday-rest petition.

To the House of Representatives:

As the field secretary of the American Sabbath Union, officially constituted by action of the Methodist General Conference (North), the Presbyterian General Assemblies (North, South, and "United"), and the Reformed (Dutch) Church, I wish to put on record, in connection with the presentation of petitions from all parts of the country for a Sunday-rest law, several important facts that should influence your honorable body in their favor:

1. The forms of petition have varied somewhat, but are substantially like the following:

BILL, TOWN OF CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, STATE OF NUMBER OF PETITIONERS _____, F of ----, COUNTY OF

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, adult residents of the United States, twenty-one years of age or more, hereby earnestly petition your honorable body to pass a bill forbidding, in the nation's mail and military service, and in interstate commerce, and in the District of Columbia and the Territories, all Sunday traffic and work, except works of religion and works of real necessity and mercy, and such private work by those who observe another day as will neither interfere with the general rest nor with public worship.

Name (prefix Mr., Mrs., or Miss).

Occupation.

Duplicate for the Senate,

2. In the early stages of petitioning the petitions were single and addressed "To the Senate and House of Representatives," so that there are many thousands of names in the custody of the Senate of which we have no duplicates to present in the House, among them the letter of Cardinal Gibbons indorsing the bill, which is in the custody of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

It may be found on page 18 of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fiftieth Congress.

3. The petitions have not been set to the senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fiftieth Congress.

3. The petitions have not been pushed chiefly by ecclesiastical bodies but by ladies and laymen and labor organizations, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Knights of Labor having indorsed the petition, after extended discussions, both nationally and locally.

4. In gathering the petitions Mrs. J. C. Bateham and the Sabbath-observance department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have taken the leading part, ably seconded by Hon. E. P. Lord and the Illinois Sabbath Association, to whose efforts I have added my own, first as an individual, and more recently as an officer of the American Sabbath Union.

5. The petitions represent about seven millions of Protestants, besides the Catholic cardinal, whose indorsement at least precludes the opposition of his loyal followers, who also number seven millions.

6. Almost as significant as the monster petition is the fact that tens of thousands have written letters to Senators for copies of the recent hearing on the Sunday-rest bill, a demand greater than even the concurrent resolution for 32,600, which we trust you will pass, could supply.

7. The lack of any Sunday law at present in the District of Columbia is one of many reasons why the passage of a Sunday-rest law should be passed at this Respectfully.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 31, 1889.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Missouri, and the question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. CLARDY. I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mis-from Alabama off the floor at this time.

Mr. COBB withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting, instructive discussion. If it had taken place about sixty-five years ago I think perhaps it might have attracted the attention of the country to some extent. I must say if I was a judge sitting on this case to decide between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], who has just finished his remarks, and his colleague [Mr. OATES], who seems to be on the other side of the Constitution on this matter, I would be compelled to decide against both of them. [Laughter.] I would give a verdict against the defendant as well as against the plaintiff.

I thought that this question had been closed in this House as to

I thought that this question had been closed in this House as to whether or not Congress had the constitutional power to incorporate this company; but whether it has been closed in this House or not, in view of what we know, it is absolutely unnecessary to refer to the decisions of the Supreme Court rendered half a century ago, when staring us right in the face within the last year we have decision after decision that an act of this sort is constitutional and comes directly within the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States. the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States

I do not think this is a proper place to discuss propositions of law, because you can not get enough time to discuss them properly. I only want to call the attention of the House to the last case, where a decision was recommended some sixty-four years after the decision upon which my learned friend seems to have founded his argument.

Mr. COBB. Sixty-four years after the decision of the Supreme Court in the legal-tender cases, in which Chief-Justice Chase took the very ground which I have assumed?

Mr. RAYNER. The legal-tender cases have no possible bearing on the question. The question before the House is this: There is no use of our arguing powers of Congress under the Constitution of the United States. We are a Government of enumerated powers, and this Congress States. We are a Government of enumerated powers, and this Congress has no authority to pass a law for which it does not find authority in the Constitution of the United States. Is there any lawyer on this floor who does not understand that proposition? Any act we may pass that we can not trace to some provision of the Constitution of the United States is unconstitutional and void.

Why, my friend, what is the power of the States? I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, for instance, what is the power of the Legislature of Massachusetts? They can pass any statute that is not prohibited by the constitution of that State. Every State and every Commonwealth within this Union has the right to pass any law that is not interdicted by the constitution of the State in which the law is passed. What is the Government of the United States? We have no right to pass any law that is not authorized by the Constitution of the United States. That is a distinction that is necessary without referring to the legal-tender cases or any other cases. That is the well-defined distinction between the powers of a State and the powers of the General Government.

The power of the Government is a power derived from the Constitution, and when you legislate here you must trace every act you legislate upon to some provision which is contained in the Constitution of the United States. But when the Legislature of Vermont, for instance, incorporated this company it was not necessary for the Legislature of Vermont to look at its constitution to see whether the constitution of Vermont authorized it to incorporate this company. The question was, did the constitution of Vermont prohibit their incorporating this company, and if it did not prohibit it they had the right to incorporate it. This fundamental distinction is laid down in the case of Gibbons against Ogden, and subsequently in the case of McCullough vs. The State of Maryland, and repeatedly in subsequent cases. There is no use of going into an abstract constitutional proposition now, half a century after this question has been decided.

The proposition, Mr. Speaker, that I advance to the House is this: That under the Constitution of the United States Congress has the right to regulate commerce between the States, and that the building of a ship-canal through the Isthmus of Nicaragua and the incorporation of a company for that purpose is a regulation of commerce under the terms of the Constitution of the United States; and that the Supreme Court of the United States has virtually and substantially decided. Now, what is the case? I do not agree, I will say, in passing, with my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] at all, if I may judge of his position by inferences drawn from his interruptions during the course of the discussion of this question, that Congress has power not embodied in the Constitution.

I rather agree with the position taken by my friend from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] who has just taken his seat, that we have to derive all of our powers from the Constitution, and that all our powers are drawn from the Constitution and admitted by it. We have the right to pass all laws needful to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution, all laws needful to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution, but we have to derive all our powers from the Constitution. Do we derive this power from that instrument? When this question, Mr. Speaker, comes up before the Supreme Court of the United States, if it ever shall come, the court will ask the question, "Is the building of a canal as herein provided an act of commerce?" If so, Congress had the power under the Constitution. In a case decided about a year ago, the case of California vs. The Pacific Railroad Company, Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court, and that opinion, I assume, the court will still maintain and will most likely hold notwithstanding the able and learned discussion which we heard a few moments ago upon this question. learned discussion which we heard a few moments ago upon this question, the court holding that-Congress has authority in the exercise of its powers to regulate commerce be-tween the several States, to construct, or authorize individuals or corporations to construct, railroads across the States and Territories of the United States.

Now, there is in express terms the proposition that we maintain on this floor to-day. The Supreme Court has held, and, as I have said, notwithstanding the learned argument we have heard to-day they will still adhere no doubt to the decision, that Congress has the right to incorporate a company to build a railroad across any of the States and Territories of the United States. If, then, Congress has the right to do that under the clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce, it has a right to incorporate a company to dig a canal, for what is the difference between a canal and a railroad if a canal facilitates and expedites the commerce of the country just as a railroad does? Where is there anything in the Constitution of the railroad does? Where is there anything in the Constitution of the United States that draws a distinction in this regard between the building of a railroad and the building of a canal? If you can dig a canal through a republic of Central America that shortens the distance around the coast 2,500 miles, does not that expedite and facilitate commerce just as much as if you build a railroad that would shorten the distance around the South American coast 2,500 miles?

Where is the lawyer who will say that if a railroad shortens the dis-

Where is the lawyer who will say that if a railroad shortens the distance 2,500 miles and facilitates commerce to that extent it is constitutional to build the road, but if a canal shortens the distance 2,500 miles and also facilitates commerce it is not constitutional to dig it?

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Maryland will yield to me for a moment—

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. As the gentleman has referred to my position, I will give it in a few words.

The colonies when acknowledged to be independent had all powers of sovereignty to treat with other nations. When they formed the Constitution of the United States they parted with that power, which went somewhere. It went into the Government of the United States which was created by the Constitution; and my proposition is that while the Constitution is a limitation, or rather the United States is dependent upon a grant in the Constitution for any power it may exercise within the States or Territories, that when it comes to dealing with foreign nations, having all the power that vested in the colonies as independent nations, there is no limitation upon the power it may exercise in connection with such foreign questions and the transaction of its business with foreign nations, which power is dependent only upon the discretion of the Congress and of the Chief Executive. In other words, while the Constitution vests Congress with the power of making treaties and declaring war, there is no limitation in the Constitution as to when and how far it may declare war, or when it shall accept peace, or to what extent it may go in treaty stipulations. There is no limitation of power when dealing with foreign nations at all. The Constitution does not restrict this power, and it may do anything, in the discretion of Congress and the President, in dealing with for-

Mr. RAYNER. I think that is entirely immaterial, but I do not agree at all with my friend from Alabama. Neither Webster, nor Clay, nor Calhoun, nor Sumner, nor even Hamilton, representing the most advanced school of Federal thought, ever advanced such a doctrine as that.

But, Mr. Speaker, I come back to the original proposition, that Conress can exercise under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States the powers conferred by the Constitution in the manner I have suggested, and upon that all legislation regulating commerce is based. My friend from Alabama, I will say in passing, talks of "rules" as if the Constitution was a theoretical instrument authorizing Congress to make a system of abstract rules like the rules of arithmetic, and as if it did not deal with facts instead of abstractions. And when the gentleman was asked to point out the power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution which authorized the digging of dirt out of the harbor of Mobile, he said he would do so if he had time granted to him to show whence that authority was derived.

I hope the House will give him plenty of time to say what sort of a rule that is under which Congress is acting when it makes an appropriation to excavate the harbor of Mobile. Why, it is nothing less than what the Supreme Court has said gives you the power to pass the river and harbor bill, as a power derived from the Constitution. There is no difference between cutting a canal and opening an outlet from New York to the sea. There is not a particle of difference between clearing the harbor of Baltimore, so that ships from other cities and countries can come into the harbor, and digging a canal to let them into the city of Baltimore.

Mr. Speaker, it is conceded that the power to make an appropriation for the improvement of the several rivers and harbors is a power derived from the clause in the Constitution to regulate commerce. I do not intend to discuss this question, because it has passed into history. There is not a lawyer on this floor, who has not stopped reading law for twenty-five years, or who has not left off the reading of law as decided by the Supreme Court for the last twenty-five years, that will stand up before a court and say that Congress, in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce, has not the rightful authority to build a railroad or dig a canal, or to do anything else that will regulate, expedite, and facilitate commerce between the States or between this Government and foreign governments. The fact, Mr. Speaker, that this canal is to be built through a republic of Central America makes no difference. It makes no difference whether it is to be built through Italy or Russia, or any other foreign country, provided we had a cession from that country and the building would expedite commerce and foreign

The only question that we are to decide is, does it expedite com-merce? and I answer that it does, and it expedites commerce by lessening the distance by many thousands of miles round. I do not care to go into the different constructions of the Constitution discussed by the two gentlemen from Alabama. What I desire to discuss are the differences between the committees of conference. Let us see whether we have done full justice to the House. That is the point. I have reason to say to this House that as members of the conference committee we have tried to do full justice to the House, so as to maintain intact the substantial provisions of this bill.

Now, here is the proposition, and I will be brief if the House will give me its attention. If you do not want to give this company a charter, why, say so. If you do want to give it a charter, do not put a provision in this charter that will absolutely nullify it and prevent it from selling its stock in the markets of the world. Now, some of these amendments adopted were not matured. Of course in the hurry of the moment almost every amendment that was offered was accepted. You can not come to a conclusion upon matters of that sort without time to reflect upon them. But if the amendments of the Honse put upon this bill shall be adopted, no body of sensible business men would ever engage in this enterprise and no body of people would be able to raise capital with which it could be put into operation.

Now, let us see. There is a provision that places in blazing letters upon every certificate of stock that this Government shall not be responsible for the debts of the company that is issuing the stock.

Mr. COBB. Does not the gentleman suppose that this company will print in blazing capitals upon the face of their charter that it is granted by the United States, so that foreign people can understand that?

Mr. RAYNER. Now, suppose that every company incorporated in the State of Alabama should place upon the charter of the company that it is incorporated by the State of Alabama, is there a fool on the face of the earth that will hold that the State of Alabama is responsible for the stock or debts of the company because the company has placed that upon the face of its stock? And if there is such a man, let him do it and let him lose everything he has. I have not any sympathy for that class of people. We are not here proposing to protect shorn or unshorn lambs. We are here to legislate for intelligent people. You can not legislate to prevent a man being a fool of that sort. [Laughter.] It is impossible to legislate for the benefit of that class of people in this way.

Mr. COBB. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. RAYNER. Let me finish. What will be the effect of passing a charter of that kind, that nothing but money shall be received in payment of that stock?

Mr. COBB. You have asserted that everybody who buys the bonds or who buys the stock must take notice of the powers conferred in the charter, have you not?

Mr. RAYNER. I did not state that as a general proposition of law, because we are not discussing propositions of law. You can hold the company for this stock for all it is worth, and you know that the stock is valid and the company is liable.

Mr. COBB. You concede in this bill that the incorporators have to take notice of the power which is conferred by the charter?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

Mr. COBB. If they were part of it, then, how could it injure the company? That is the point I suggest.

Mr. RAYNER. It is not only unusual; it is more than unusual. I do not believe there is a single corporation in this country (and there are hundreds and thousands of them) that ever had printed upon its certificate of stock that the State which incorporated it should not be responsible for its debts. If there is any such certificate of stock extant I have never seen it or heard of it, and I do not believe the gentleman from Alabama has ever seen or heard of such a thing. Why should we do what has never been done before? It simply means that when this company goes into the markets of the world to sell its stock, people are to be intimidated from buying. They will look at the certificate of stock and they will say, "Well, if this Government of the United States is so very much afraid of its own company which it has incorporated, we will not have anything to do with it." Now, what is the object of this proposed charter? Is it to permit these people to sell their stock and build the canal, or is it to prevent them from doing it? This amendment was put in as one of a series of amendments intended to kill the bill; and it will kill the bill because no ments intended to kill the bill; and it will kill the bill, because no foreign capitalist will invest a dollar in an enterprise when he finds the certificate of the stock of the corporation containing a provision like this, that the Government of the United States shall not be responsible for the debts of the company.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another question to which I wish to direct attention. It is admitted on all hands that the Government is not in fact liable for the debts of this company. We all agree that even if there was not a word in this charter about the liability of the Government, the Government would not be liable for the company's debts. I do not think there is a dissenting voice in this House from the proposition that if there was not a word in the charter upon the subject, no man on this earth would or could hold that the Government of the United States was responsible for the debts or for the stock of this com-Yet, in order to be overcautious on that point, we have placed in the charter an express provision that the Government shall not assume any such responsibility. Now, on top of the proposition, universally conceded, that the Government is not liable at any rate, and on top of the proposition that you have expressly declared that the Government shall not be held liable, you want to plant another proposition, that the stock of the company must contain this provision on the body of the certificate. Such a condition can not possibly do any good. On the contrary, it will hamper these people in their attempts to go on with the work, and will kill the enterprise. If you do not want this canal, just put in such a provision as that and your object will be attained, because nobody on earth will be willing to go into the market with stock disfigured with such a provision.

There are one or two other points upon which I must touch briefly.

There are one or two other points upon which I must touch briefly The first amendment, the one on page 3, my friend from Alabama [Mr. Coeb] has not adverted to. I must confess that that is the provision which gave me, as a member of the conference committee and as a member of the general committee, the greatest amount of difficulty. I think it is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARDY. Do you mean the first amendment or the fourth?

Mr. RAYNER. I mean the amendment on page 3, which gives this

Mr. RAYNER. I mean the amendment on page 3, which gives this company the right to issue stock for property.

Mr. CLARDY. That is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. RAYNER. Yes; I believe so. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word to the House upon that proposition. If that amendment as it passed the House is to stand, this company can not go into existence at all. That is the end of it. So far as I am concerned, I know very little about this company. All I know about it is that I know personally two or three of the corporators, and know that they are among the most responsible men in the country. I know also that there are ten or fifteen millions of dollars represented by incorporators from my own State. from my own State.

Mr. HERBERT. Read the amendment to which you refer, so that the House may understand it.

Mr. RAYNER. I will do that in a minute, but first I want to say that if this amendment as it passed the House is to stand in the charteness of the same of the charteness of the same of t ter, the company can not go into existence at all. What is the amend-

Mr. COBB. Are you not aware of the fact that they proclaim that they are already in existence and that they propose to go to work under the Vermont charter?

Mr. RAYNER. A company can not work under two charters. Whenever this corporation accepts this charter that puts an end to the Vermont charter. Even if a company has a dozen charters it must do one of two things, either act under one of them or consolidate the whole. There is no such amphibious thing known as a corporation acting under two or more charters. If they accept this charter that is the end of the Vermont charter, unless, by some other law, they consolidate the Vermont charter with the charter that they are now seek-

Now, Mr. Speaker, this amendment originally provided that all the stock of this company should be paid for in money. I call particular attention to this because great stress will be laid upon it. The original provision was that all of this stock should be paid for in money, that the $200,000,000 of stock must be subscribed for and paid for, every dollar of it, in cash, and that the company should have no right to receive payment for its stock in any other manner. That is the provision of the amendment as it passed the House. I will read it:

It may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property, or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act; all shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities which the company may issue to raise the corporate capital shall be executed and issued at the principal office in the city of New York; and all such shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company treasury and used for corporate purposes.

Now, what does that mean? It simply means that this company can not build this canal or receive a dollar's worth of subscription to a share of its stock to be paid for in any other way but in cash.

Now I want to say—and if I am mistaken about this matter the gentleman from Alabama can correct me—that I have not been able to find in the legislation of a single State of this Union any law undertaking to require that a corporation shall only issue or sell its stock for money; that it shall not exchange stock for property. You can not build a railroad, you can not construct a canal, you can not conduct any private or public enterprise in which a large amount of money is required, as in this case, if you undertake to impose upon the company a requirement that it shall not take property in payment for its capital stock. Of course I am fully aware of the difficulties connected with the exercise of this power and of the great frauds to which it may give rise. I know very well that in some instances corporations have issued millions of dollars' worth of stock for absolutely nothing; have taken property absolutely valueless in payment for their stock. I know the difficulties which have been occasioned by transactions of that sort. I know that the courts have affirmed the proposition that when corporations do take property in payment for stock the property received must be substantially equivalent in value to the amount of stock issued.

Mr. CLARDY. That is what the amendment agreed on by the conference committee provides.

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, sir. The amendment provides that this cor-

May issue stock to the amount of the just value of such estate, property, and rights, and for work and labor done or materials provided in the execution of the work of constructing said ship-canal.

Now, it is said that this company ought to have no right to part with its stock in this way—that if it can not sell its stock for $200,000,000 in cash it ought not to have any charter. Who is going to take stock and pay for it in cash to that amount? Where is there any $200,000,000 to be put in cash into an enterprise of this sort? We might as well come down frankly to the fact. I tell you, gentlemen, it is an absolute impossibility for this company to procure $200,000,000, or anything like that, in money for its stock. thing like that, in money for its stock.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do not the incorporators say that they need only $60,000,000? Mr. CLARDY. No, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I say that is their statement as made before our committee; that is what their engineers say.

Mr. DUNHAM. That is correct.

Mr. RAYNER. I say that you can not raise even $60,000,000 to be invested in cash in this enterprise. You propose to say to this corporation, "Go to work, organize your company, and prosecute one of the greatest enterprises—

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me a suggestion in reply to that of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILson]?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, sir.
Mr. SCOTT. When the Panama Canal scheme was started the estimated cost of carrying out that project was $120,000,000. To-day there has been $250,000,000 expended in that work, and it is a conceded fact that it can not be finished for $250,000,000 more; so that no estimate which may be made in advance as to the cost of constructing a estimate which may be made in advance as to the cost of constructing a work like this is worth anything.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, I do not believe that this canal can be built for $60,000,000, and I do not believe anybody else whose opinion is worth anything will undertake to say so. If the engineers say it can be built for $60,000,000 you may rely upon it that it will take $200,000,000.

But suppose this work can be constructed for $60,000,000. That may not appear a very large sum to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Scott], but it is a great deal more meany than most of us have

Scort], but it is a great deal more money than most of us have. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLUMB. The gentleman will allow me to say that there are several estimates of the engineers, varying from $64,000,000 to $147,- 000,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes; those are the estimates.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, you can not get any such amount of money in the markets of the world; you can not get $150,000,000 for the construction of this canal. Who is going to put $150,000,000 into an enterprise of this sort? Where is the syndicate, American or foreign, that would advise its customers or clients to put $150,000,000 into an enterprise of this description? How are enterprises of this sort always carried on? How are your railroads built? How is a work of this magnitude always accomplished? You issue stock in payment for the work done. When men go to the directors proposing to dig this canal, the directors say, "How much of this canal will you undertake to dig; and how much stock will you take in payment for your work?" Only in that way can this canal be built. Of course those who undertake this enterprise must have some money; and this bill provides, I think, for a very large amount of money.

When the conference committee places in the body of this bill a provision that within a given time there must be $1,000,000 in the treasury of this company or the charter will be forfeited, I think it shows Congress intends that this charter shall be accepted and acted on in good faith; and I think it may be assumed that the people who receive this charter will go to work and carry out this enterprise because they put $1,000,000 into it; and when they thus risk $1,000,000, I think we may rely on their responsibility. But they can not sell two hundred millions of stock, nor one hundred and fifty millions of stock.

The trouble with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson] is, as I infer from the conversation I have had with him on the subject, that this act gives the right to this company to issue its stock for material and other property, and the moment you give the company the right to take property for stock you will enable that company to take property not worth the value of the stock. How are you going to prevent it? Who are the sufferers?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The people.
Mr. RAYNER. How?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You double the amount of stock issued, and, therefore, double the rates of toll to be collected on this canal. You swindle the honest stockholders who put their money in the stock.

Mr. RAYNER. I say the people are not defrauded. You can not defraud the people in that way. If a man invests in this company he can go to the books of the company and find out how much stock has been subscribed in money and how much stock has been subscribed in property. He has that right, and if he does not choose to take pains to do that, he can not, of course, expect the Congress of the United States to do it for him. We are not legislating for that class of people. There is not a corporation in this country to-day that is properly conducted but a man can go and examine the corporation books and find out how much stock has been issued for money and how much stock has been issued for property.

But suppose he does not do that. Suppose he goes on blindly under the belief that $200,000,000 of money have been paid into the treasury of the company, are we bound to protect him against such reckless negligence as that? Are we here to say to this company, "We will not let you issue your stock for property, because, forsooth, some one will go and buy that stock under the belief you have received money for it instead of property?" How can we protect the people against making investments of that sort?

making investments of that sort? Mr. ADAMS. Leave out of view the stock to be issued to the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica for the rights granted by them, leave out of view the stock of the grantees of the Menocal concession, and consider only the stock which, according to the substitute prepared by the conferees, can be issued for work and material furnished, I ask the gentleman from Maryland whether there will be any substantial injury inflicted on this corporation in requiring that labor and material be paid for in money out of that which is realized from and material be paid for in money out of that which is realized from the sale of the stock? If the stock be sold for cash and the cash paid to the contractors, is it not just as fair to them as if their work were paid for in stock? As to the other class of stock issued to the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica for the rights they have granted and to the concessionaries, I admit the force of the gentleman's argument. I think it is unnecessary that labor and material should be paid for in stock. The practice of building railways in that way is one of recent date. date.

Mr. RAYNER. Why, the construction of the canal is labor.

Mr. ADAMS. But I say, so far as the labor and material necessary for the construction of the canal can be paid for by the company selling stock for cash, and paying that cash to the contractors, that can be done as well as to pay stock for labor and material.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not think that is the practice. You can get contractors to build for part stock and part money. It is a great deal easier, I believe, to get contractors to contract for the construction of such work to be paid for part in stock and part in money. I believe it is easier to do that than to get them to contract to be paid all in money.

Mr. ADAMS. By selling the stock for cash, and paying out the money for material and labor, the people will see exactly just how much has been paid for the building of the canal.

Mr. RAYNER. Do you think the stock should be subscribed for, the whole of it, in money?

Mr. ADAMS. No, not the stock paid to the Central American Republics which have granted the rights to this company.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No one claims that.

Mr. RAYNER. I know that. Now, what other part ought to be paid for in money?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not include the stock paid to the republics which have granted rights to this company nor to the concessionaries, Mr. Menocal and his associates; I do not ask that these parties should be paid in money; I leave out of view the stock issued to them, but I do believe it is only right and proper that the remaining stock should be sold for cash, and the cash paid into the treasury of the company.

Mr. RAYNER. But suppose the whole stock is issued to these con-cessionaries; have you placed any limit in the charter as to that? How is it possible to do that? You can not provide so much for concession-ary rights and so much for the construction of the canal.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman is only stating one difficulty in the matter.

Mr. RAYNER. I am only saying that in my judgment in the present condition of the matter this company should be allowed to issue stock for material and labor. I do not believe the canal can be constructed without it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I say that it is unnecessary, and that you can build the canal without that provision.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not think so.

Mr. PETERS. If the gentleman from Maryland will permit me, one of the business objects of issuing the stock for labor to the contractors is that they may become financially interested in the project.

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly; and I ask if you can name any telegraph company that has ever been built by any contractor and paid for entirely in money? I do not know of one.

Mr. ADAMS. It would have been much better if it had been so. Mr. RAYNER. Undoubtedly; and many things would be much better if they were done, but such has not been the case heretofore. If you are in favor of adopting such a general system of legislation, and will bring it in here, I will stand by it. I am in favor of perfecting legislation which will have that effect, and will prevent a corporation from taking any subscription for its stock except in money. But I say it is not the case now, and it would be unusual to apply it here. It has not been done anywhere in the States except in Pennsylvania, where an act of the Legislature has restricted corporations to that extent. I do not know how it is in the State of my friend from Illinois, but I have examined pretty generally the legislation in the States on the subject, and I have not found a single code, excepting the one that I have mentioned, which prohibits corporations from issuing their stock in payment for material and labor.

Mr. ADAMS. Inasmuch as this is the first charter granted by the Government of the United States, would it not be a good plan to adopt a rule covering that principle?

Mr. RAYNER. In my opinion the canal can not be built in that way; and I take it the gentleman has no substantial ground for saying that it can be. You can get a contractor readily to build a road or part of Mr. ADAMS. What do they do with this stock?

Mr. RAYNER. They sell it, I presume.
Mr. ADAMS. Exactly; that is the answer I expected. It is not taken as an investment. They are not wealthy men who want to put their money in the stock to hold it. They want to realize upon it at once.

money in the stock to hold it. They want to realize upon it at once.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You do not get at the full length of the iniquity. They give it to the construction company; they have friends among them; they transfer the stock to them, and thus there is "a ring within a ring," which has the whole thing in its own hands.

Mr. ADAMS. That is often the case.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is just what this is made for.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question—if he is not getting away from the provisions of the bill and befogging the whole constitute the provision of the provision as to how railroads are built and question by entering into questions as to how railroads are built and how stocks are being watered, and thus losing sight of the provisions of the bill? I would like to get back to "hard-pan," as we say in the oil regions. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota absolutely prohibits the issuing of stock without its being fully paid for in money.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No, sir; it forbids the issue of the stock without the payment of 10 per cent.

Mr. RAYNER. And the balance of the stock in money.

Mr. SCOTT. It is exactly the same in principle as if it was all required in cash

Mr. RAYNER. Identically the same.
Mr. SCOTT. The canal company is prohibited by that amendment from carrying out this contract with the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Oh, not at all. Mr. SCOTT. Unquestionably it is.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Oh, no; I will show the gentleman in a few minutes, when I take the floor, where he is mistaken.

Mr. RAYNER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me to proceed for a few moments, I will finish this branch of the subject and then yield the floor. The amendment provided that before the issuance of any of the stock a certain amount of the subscription price must be paid in money, and when you look at the provision which required the cash payment of 10 per cent. it only permitted the issuance of stock, declaring that none should be issued until 10 per cent. of the subscription price was paid in cash; but the other 90 per cent. must be paid in money, and there is nothing here which permits the company to make a payment for labor or material or anything else by a dollar's worth of its stock. Every share of the stock must represent that much cash in the treasury of the company. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the 10 per cent. clause, and I wish to call his attention to the exact language of it:

No certificate for stock shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the same shall be fully paid in in money.

That means that no man can get his stock until he pays his 10 per cent. in cash. But how about the other 90 per cent.? The construction would be necessarily that that must also be paid in cash.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is it.
Mr. RAYNER. So that there is no authority to make a payment for labor, or for material, or for the concessionary rights, or for any other purpose whatever in the stock of the company, which can only be issued for cash. How, then, can this company pay for the concessionary rights from the republics of South America? How can it pay for anyrights from the republics of south America? How can't pay for anything unless there is $200,000,000, or whatever sum may be necessary for the purpose, in the treasury of the company? I say it is impracticable, and it is a defeat of the whole enterprise. If you can suggest some way, some practical plan of relieving the difficulty, I shall

Mr. ADAMS. If the gentleman will allow me, the amendment provided for the payment in the manner he has suggested, and I am inclined to think the position he takes is right. The bill provides that the company may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property; or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act, but does not provide for material or labor, etc. And then it provides further that stock is not to be issued except for cash. So that I am inclined to think that the gentleman is correct

Mr. RAYNER. The whole of it is to be issued; every dollar of it.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is correct.
Mr. RAYNER. The gentleman says that is correct, that this com-Mr. RAYNER. The gentleman says that is correct, that this company is bound under the charter that made it to get $100,000,000, which can not be withdrawn from its treasury. I say there is no such provision in the legislation of the States that I have examined; and while I will admit the fraud that it may give rise to, and while I will admit that the constructors or the people who build the canal may derive, perhaps, unusual profit from a transaction of that sort, I say that there is no way you can prevent them. If you want this canal that there is no way you can prevent them. If you want this canal to be built, and do not give them the right to take property and labor, the charter is not worth the paper upon which it is written, and there is not any public or private enterprise, either of a railroad or a canal, built and operated that was ever built without having the power to built and operated that was ever built without having the power to issue part of the stock for property. There have been within the last year a number of cases of this kind decided, and the gentleman from Minnesota will recognize the wisdom of these decisions, and the reasons for them. But what are these decisions? They hold that the property must be fairly worth the amount of stock taken in payment for it. That is the rule that the courts have adopted.

They hold that every transaction of that sort falls through, and in every case where the question comes up they will inquire as to whether the property being received is fairly and substantially worth the amount of stock that the party received for it.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman allow me just there? I said, I think, there was a provision in respect to issuing the stock for cash. Under section 3 of the House amendment no certificate of stock shall Under section 3 of the House amendment no certificate of stock shall be issued until 10 per cent, is paid in; but the conferees inserted the material words "except as otherwise provided in this act;" and now I find a provision in section 1 which certainly does seem to grant the right to issue stock for material and labor. I am in doubt whether the provisions in section 3, that the stock shall be paid in cash "except as otherwise provided in this act," taken in connection with amendment numbered 1, would not give the company the right to pay stock for material and labor. I am inclined to think that it ought to be changed, and at the same time I hope the contempany will allow me to say that and at the same time I hope the gentleman will allow me to say that I am heartily in favor of building the canal and in favor of incorporating this company, and I am in favor of the general principles of this bill; still I think that ought to be changed.

Mr. RAYNER. Then how can the company take property in payment of capital stock? What is the difference between taking a little tract of land along a canal in payment of stock and taking the labor and work upon the construction? That is worth more than all the

Mr. ADAMS. The difference is that in one case you are dealing between the company and two republics, and no harm to the stockholders can arise; in the other case you are possibly fostering a construction company or a Crédit Mobilier.

Mr. RAYNER. You have surely got the right to issue stock for property. In the payment of something for stock you can not draw the distinction between land and labor; you can not say to the company what property shall mean as applied to the building of the canal. There is capital in the labor of every man who performs labor, and their property is the element of their labor. You can not distinguish between property and labor. Labor becomes an element of capital, and I will also state to the gentleman from Illinois you have either to let them use property and labor in payment of its stock or it fails.

Mr. ADAMS. It appears on the face of the bill when it passed the House that this distinction was made. I read from the original House amendment:

Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or certificates issued under Article L of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal association.

The House amendment distinguished between certain stock, which u ght to be sold for cash, and another portion that may be issued for eal estate and concessionary rights.

eal estate and concessionary rights.

Mr. RAYNER. There is another point about this. Suppose the contractors do arrange to take their pay in stock and they get more stock than they would get money if they were paid in cash. Suppose a contractor says to the company, "I will do this work for a million dollars in cash," but when he comes to deal with them on the basis of payment in stock he does not say, "I will take a million dollars of your stock," but he says, "I want $5,000,000 of your stock." He takes the stock because he can sell it in the market for a million dollars, and thus get seemed money as he would have received if he had been paid in cash: as much money as he would have received if he had been paid in cash; and who is injured by such a transaction? Is it the man who buys the stock from the contractor? Is it not the duty of that man, before he buys the stock, to go and inquire what its value is and find out whether or not it represents tangible property?

Mr. ADAMS. The cash subscribers to the stock are injured by the issue of any stock for labor where, by any such transaction, the real cost of the construction of the canal is concealed from the subscribers.

Mr. RAYNER. But how is it concealed when the books show it? If the gentleman was right about the concealment I would admit the truth of his proposition, but when you require, in a subsequent provision of the charter, that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the right to require this company to make a full report of everything connected with it, how can anybody be injured by the concealment of facts in regard to the management of the company? How can there be concealment when they can go to the archives of the Interior Department and find out exactly its status at any time?

Mr. ADAMS. All I have to say in answer to that is that I have never built a railroad and have never been a member of a construction company; but I do know that for the last twenty years this whole country has been ringing with denunciation of the formation of construction companies within corporations for the purpose of concealing from the stockholders generally and from the public the price which certain members of the corporation have paid to certain other members of the corporation for constructing the work, whatever it might be.

Mr. RAYNER. I admit that; but it all comes back to the single proposition that you have got to let this company have the right to issue stock for labor or else the work can not go on. You have got to do one of two things. If you do the first, then they can go on and construct the canal. If you take the other alternative, then the company can not accept its charter and can not construct the work.

I know that frauds have been committed of the character suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, and I am utterly unwilling to lend my vote or my voice to any measure by which any intermediate agent known as a construction company or by any other name shall be en-abled to perpetrate such frauds upon the public. But when you once deny to this company the right to issue its stock for land and for labor and for concessionary rights, then you compel its subscribers to pay in $200,000,000 of cash, and when you insist upon that you practically decree that the canal shall not be built.

Mr. ADAMS. If you will prove that I will accept your horn of the dilemma. The canal ought to be built.

Mr. RAYNER. Does the gentleman believe that there is any two hundred millions of dollars going into this enterprise? Is there anybody here who believes that $200,000,000 in cash will be put into it?

Mr. ADAMS. The part of the stock which goes to the republics will not be paid for in money, and that part which goes to the holders of the concessionary rights will not be paid for in money, but the balance of it will be.

Mr. RAYNER. Where is the money to come from?

Mr. ADAMS. I think it is to come in part from the United States and in part from Europe.

Mr. RAYNER. From what part of the United States?
Mr. ADAMS. I will refer the gentleman for an answer to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Scott]. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the money that is obtained for Mr. RAYNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the money that is obtained for enterprises of this sort is generally obtained by syndicates who get the stock and sell it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] knows that they can not get any $200,000,000 of cash paid into the treasury of this company. In order to secure a guaranty of the good faith of these people we inserted a provision that they should put at least $1,000,000 of cash into the treasury themselves. There was a great deal of discussion over that, but we finally put in that provision.

Now, if they do not intend to go ahead with it they will not put in the million dellars and if they do not in a million dellars it will be a the million dollars, and if they do put in a million dollars it will be a guaranty of their good faith; and then after that, if a contractor gets his stock at 50 cents on the dollar and somebody subsequently buys it from him at a higher figure, I do not see that we are bound to guard against that or to interfere in any way. Suppose any gentleman here wishes to buy stock, does it make any difference to him how much the man from whom he buys it paid for the stock originally? Suppose you are going to buy a house, do you inquire how much the house cost originally, or what it is worth at the time you are going to buy it? What you want to know is what the house is really worth at the present time. Now my experience and observation have taught me that there has been a great deal of the kind of fraud which the gentleman from has been a great deal of the kind of fraud which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] refers to, perpetrated under charters worded just like this, but after all, as I have already said, it comes back to the single proposition that when an intelligent man is going to invest his money in an enterprise of this sort, it is his duty to go and see what the assets of the company are worth, and if he is going to buy a house it is his duty to go and look at the house and examine it and see what it is worth before he pays his money.

Mr. STEWART of Vermont I desire to ask the centleman a ques-

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is there any difficulty in providing that no intermediary, like a construction company, shall expend the money and build the canal under penalty of forfeiture of the charter?

Mr. RAYNER. I think not.

Mr. CLARDY. What was the inquiry of the gentleman from Ver-

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I asked the gentleman from Maryland whether in his opinion there was any difficulty in providing in this charter that no intermediary, like a construction company, should have the expenditure of the money or should construct this canal under penalty of forfeiture of the charter.

Mr. RAYNER. There is no difficulty about that.

A MEMBER. The report is not amendable.

Mr. RAYNER. There is only one more proposition to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and that relates to this last amendment, giving the Government of the United States the right to limit

Mr. ADAMS. Now, will the gentleman allow me a remark? Either there are several misprints in the Congressional Record or else there are material variations between the conference report and the statement of the House conferees. If the gentleman would like to have me point out those variations, I shall be glad to do so; and then I shall not interrupt him further.

Mr. RAYNER. I would be glad to have the gentleman point them out; I have not followed that matter myself.

Mr. ADAMS. I refer to amendments Nos. 11, 12, 13, and 14.

Mr. RAYNER. On what page?
Mr. ADAMS. The bottom of page 9 of the printed bill.
Mr. RAYNER. The gentleman refers, as I understand, to this lan-

Nothing in this act shall be held or construed in any manner to involve the United States in any pecuniary obligation.

Mr. ADAMS. Wait a moment. I want to settle the parliamentary status of these amendments. In the conference report it is stated that the Senate recedes; but the House conferees in their statement say that the House recedes. If the report is voted on as it stands, and this is mot a misprint, then on this point the Senate will recede.

Mr. CLARDY. I will answer the gentleman. There was a misprint, and I had the conference report and the accompanying statement reprinted in the next day's RECORD.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will ask as to amendment No. 12, whether the House recedes-

Mr. CLARDY. What amendment is that?
Mr. ADAMS. The amendment providing that—

Nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations, or that may be acquired through treaty stipulations, with respect to the rights of transportation of the citizens of the United States or their property over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace or war.

Mr. CLARDY. As to that amendment the House recedes.

Mr. ADAMS. Now, as to amendment 13. The conference report states that on that amendment the Senate recedes. That is the amendment in regard to which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] was about to speak-the amendment providing for the regulation of Mr. RAYNER. With the explanation I am about to give on that point I think the gentleman will be perfectly satisfied. In the concession of the Government of Nicaragua there is a provision-

Mr. ADAMS. Oh! On the merits I agree with the gentleman. Mr. RAYNER. There is a provision in regard to tolls, under which the Government of Nicaragua gets a certain percentage; and we have or right to break that agreement.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that; but if the conference report—
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] that he has but five minutes remain-

Mr. ADAMS. If the conference report is correctly printed, then on that amendment the Senate recedes.

Mr. CLARDY. No, the House recedes; that is a mistake; there has been a misprint.

Mr. RAYNER. I have suggested the answer to the proposition in regard to tolls, that we have made a contract with Nicaragua, and in that contract there is a provision in reference to tolls; and in pursuance of that contract the Government of Nicaragua is to receive a certain percentage of the tolls. After our Government has made a contract of that sort, of course it is not right for us to violate it and undertake to make a different provision in regard to the regulation of tolls. I think that is a clear legal proposition from which there is no

Mr. BLAND. What proportion Government of Nicaragua receive? What proportion or percentage of the tolls does the

Mr. RAYNER. I think 15 per cent.
Mr. BLAND. Oh, no; that is the concessionary limitation upon the extent of the tolls to be charged.

Mr. RAYNER. It makes no difference what the Government of Nicaragua gets; the right to fix the tolls is reserved.

Mr. CLARDY. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNEE] that the rates of toll are not only fixed in the concession, but they are fixed in a treaty between the United States and Nicaragua.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The rates of toll are not fixed in the concession.

Mr. CLARDY. They are fixed in the concession, the concession pursuing exactly the language of the treaty of 1867.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. In what section?

Mr. CLARDY. I am not speaking about the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am speaking of the concession.
Mr. CLARDY. I am talking about the treaty and concession.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am speaking of the concession. Mr. CLARDY. I can not tell the gentleman what is the exact provision of the concession; but I recollect that the concession pursues, as I have said, the language of the treaty in that regard. It does not make any difference whether the concession mentions it or not; the treaty fixes it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The concession does not fix the rates

Mr. CLARDY. I think the gentleman is mistaken. As I understand, after the lapse of ten years the tolls are not to exceed 15 per cent.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is right; that is to say, the profits to be divided among the corporators are not to exceed 15 per cent.

Mr. CLARDY. That is what I mean.

Mr. RAYNER. If the House will give me five or ten minutes more
I will conclude what I desire to say. The clause to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred is the only clause that has occasioned any difficulty in my mind in regard to this charter. The only amendment that the House conferees have receded from, and this is the only point on which I have had any difficulty, is the clause adverted to by the gentleman from Illinois, the clause relative to the right of this company to receive payment for its stock in property instead of money.

Now we are dealing with a difficult question. It is difficult to decide what is proper to be done. You are there to compel the company to take payment in money or permit them to take payment in property. If you do not permit them to take payment in property then I do not believe the canal will be built. If you give them that right it will be built. If you wish to have the benefits derived by commerce and the Government from the building of this canal I believe you will have to give them this right. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Maryland state what is the basis or reasoning upon which he makes the statement that this canal will not be built if the stock is not allowed to be issued for labor and material?

Mr. RAYNER. I say to the gentleman from Minnesota, with the utmost good faith, that when you require a body of responsible incorporators to place in the treasury of the company $1,000,000 in money and you provide in the charter if that money is not forthcoming then the charter shall be void, and they do put a million dollars in the treasury, I say the chances are that they are acting in good faith.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But you do not understand me. I ask what reason or basis you have for saying that in case we do not allow the corporation to issue stock for labor and materials this canal will

Mr. CLARDY. I wish to see whether we can agree to have the previous question ordered at half past 4 o'clock this evening.

Mr. SCOTT. I object. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I object, too. Mr. SCOTT. I object unless we know some of us who wish to speak five minutes can be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no five-minute debate on the pending proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope gentlemen will not object, as I wish this afternoon to bring up for consideration the Army appropriation bill, and unless this is disposed of within a reasonable time I shall be compelled to antagonize it.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to have a

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to have a vote on this to-day?

Mr. CLARDY. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I object. There are certain things which should be understood by the House and which have not yet been explained to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I state to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson] that I believe if we give these people this charter the canal will be built. I believe they are in earnest. I believe they will put a million into the treasury of this company. I believe the character of these men guaranties to the House they are acting in good faith. You are not dealing with a set of adventurers and speculators. You are dealing with some of the best and most responsible men in this country, so far as their names are disclosed in the act of incorporation. They propose to put a million into the treasury of the company. They obligate themselves not to draw a dollar out of the treasury of the comlars is not put in.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Where is that?

Mr. RAYNER. We put that into the charter.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Look for it.
Mr. MAISH. The gentleman has said more than once that these incorporators guaranty to put a million of dollars into the treasury; where is that to be found?

Mr. RAYNER. It is to be found in the conference report. We put it there.

Mr. MAISH. Where is it? Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I should like to hear the gentleman read it.

Mr. RAYNER. Here it is:

SEC. 3. That no certificates for stock, unless as otherwise provided in this act, shall be issued until 10 per cent. of the par value shall be fully paid for in money and the money deposited in the treasury of said company; and there shall be at least $1,000,000 of money paid on such subscriptions into said treasury of the company within one year from the passage of this act, and said company is prohibited from returning or repaying any part of the said money so paid.

No part of the continuous contin

No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time drawn or returned to the stockholders, or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Any violation of the provisions of this act shall subject this charter to forfeiture.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced agreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1320) granting a pension to Catherine M. Lee, and to the bill (S. 3052) granting an increase of pension to George W. Durfee.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 257) making an appropriation for the payment of the legal representatives of James B. Eads.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. CLARDY. I want to give notice now that at a quarter before 5 o'clock I shall demand the previous question upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not think that is right, and I shall feel inclined to exercise whatever power I may possess to prevent the ordering of the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, there were two amendments to this bill incorporated by a vote of the House that the conferees have receded from, which I hope the House will insist upon. One of these reads as

And nothing herein shall be construed to estop this Government from asserting at any time any rights or powers that may now exist by virtue of the laws of nations or that may be acquired through treaty stipulations, with respect to the rights of transportation of the citizens of the United States, or their property, over this canal or the country through which the same may be constructed, or to transport troops or munitions of war in time of peace or war.

The other amendment to which I have referred is in the following language:

Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, and to regulate the toll or tariff rates for the transportation of persons or property by this company or its assigns.

I consider, Mr. Speaker, in view of the many complications in which this question is involved by various treaties entered into by this Government and other governments, and especially the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, entered into in 1850 on the part of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, and also with respect to the alleged treaty existing between this Government and the Republic of Nicaragua, although, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied in my own mind that there is no existing treaty in force between this Government and that of Nicaragua upon this subject

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just there to ask whether the two amendments to which he has referred are in the bill as reported by the conference committee, or were they left out?

Mr. BLAND. They were left out. They were receded from by the committee.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the effect of this legislation upon these treaties and the policy this Government proposes to pursue in reference to this canal and the commerce upon it, it is very important, I think, that these amendments should be maintained in the bill. I have not up to this hour heard a discussion in this House of the importance of the question involved in this bill and of this proposition as it affects the relations between this Government and Great Britain. They have been wholly ignored, and yet if this bill passes and becomes a law without the amendments in question and that canal is constructed, we have a treaty with Great Britain which gives her the power and the right, in conjunction with the people of the United States and this Government, to protect that canal and send her armies and her fleets to that country for the purpose of protecting it, and thus interfering with the great Monroe doctrine that we have heard so much about here recently. I say that this question has been wholly ignored in all the discussions that have taken place, and the bill itself studiously ignores the question, because the incorporators want it understood, when the bill passes and they desire to negotiate the stock in the marts of London, and Paris, and Berlin, and in European countries conceally that the Paris, and Berlin, and in European countries generally, that the property invested in the canal will be under the protection not only of the United States Government, but of another Government, that of Great Britain, in conjunction and under treaty with the United States.

It makes the stock of the company more valuable. It will make it sell better. They will get a better price for it in these markets when they can go to England and say, "Here is a company authorized to build a great canal under a certain treaty by and with the Government of a great canal under a certain treaty by and with the covernment of Great Britain, of which that Government guaranties the neutrality of the property, and guaranties the safety of it from confiscation or inter-ference by any other power." As a matter of course, if that is done they can sell the bonds and securities under that treaty for more money and with less difficulty than if it is known simply as an American canal under the control of the American Government. Hence the incorporators, Mr. Speaker, are urging the bill through this Congress with that distinct understanding, and we are here giving countenance to what? To a treaty that has been objected to by Mr. Blaine, by Mr. Evarts, by Mr. Frelinghuysen, for they have written to the authorities of Great Britain and laid the question before them in which our Government objects to this Clayton and Bulwer treaty, and insist that it should no longer be held as obligatory or valid, while, on the contrary, the authorities of Great Britain are equally strenuous in holding it to be valid, and that we have no right to renounce it.

Now, what is that treaty? I will send to the desk and have read a portion of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in order that we may understand its terms and in what condition this bill will be if it passes.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman give the

Mr. BLAND. The date of the treaty is 1850; and I ask the Clerk to read Articles I and VIII of that treaty.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The United States of America and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, being desirous of consolidating the relations of amity which so happily subsist between them, by setting forth and fixing in a convention their views and intentions with reference to any means of communication by ship-canal which may be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Ocean, the President of the river San Juan de Nicaragua and either or both of the Lakes of Nicaragua or Managua, to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean, the President of the United States has conferred full powers on John M. Clayton, Secretary of State of the United States, and Her Britannic Majesty on the Right Honorable Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer, a member of Her Majesty's most honorable privy council, knight commander of the most honorable Order of the Bath, and envoy extractionary and minister plenipotentiary of Her Britannic Majesty to the United States, for the aforesaid purpose; and the said plenipotentiaries having exchanged their full powers, which were found to be in proper form, have agreed to the following articles:

ARZ. I. The Governments of the United States and Great Britain hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship-canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume, or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have to or with any state or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same; nor will the United States or Great Britain take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either may possess with any state or government through whose territory the said canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the citizens or subjects of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered on the same terms to the citizens or subjects of the other.

ART. VIII. The Governments of the United States and Great Britain having not only desired, in entering into this convention, to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish ageneral principle, they hereby agree to extend their protection, by treaty stipulations, to any other practicable communications, whether by canal or railway, across the 1sthmus which connects North and South America, and especially to the inter-occanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panama. In granting, however, their joint protection to any such canals or railways as are by this article specified, it is always understood by the United States and Great Britain that the parties constructing or owning the same shall impose no other charges or conditions of traffic thereupon than the aforesaid Governments shall approve of as just and equitable; and that the same canals or railways, being open to the citizens and subjects of the United States and Great Britain on equal terms, shall also be open on like terms to the citizens and subjects of every other state which is willing to grant thereto such protection as the United States and Great Britain engage to afford.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a substantial treaty, one that is recognized as being in binding force by the State Department, which binds this Government when this canal is constructed that it shall be under the protectorate of Great Britain in conjunction with the United States. In other words, that a great coast-line, I may say, of this country shall be open to the fleets of Great Britain for the protection of a canal that we are in Congress authorizing to be constructed.

And what are part of these regulations of this treaty? One of them is that the United States, in connection with Great Britain, will invite the whole of the countries of the world to join in this treaty in this joint protection of this canal on our coast.

And what further, sir? We are here agreeing that Great Britain, in connection with the Government of the United States, shall regulate the tolls of this canal. In other words, the last clause of this treaty provides in express terms that the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be the judges as to the reasonableness of the tolls to be charged upon this canal. Why are gentlemen ready to rush into that? Are they willing to pass this bill without any restraint or restriction; to enact a law to carry out a treaty by which foreign governments are to regulate the tolls of a corporation created by an act of Congress? And yet, sir, we are bound to do that under this bill in its present shape, or we are bound to repudiate this bill and the concessions we are making to this corporation, or to assert our rights as a nation, and to protect them if they should violate the treaty.

Now, the amendment that I proposed to this bill was merely that this Government itself in this bill and under this law shall reserve to itself the right to judge of the reasonableness of the tolls and the traffic on this canal. And yet, Mr. Speaker, we are told that by the concession of the Government of Nicaragua, made to these concessionaries, the Government of Nicaragua retains to itself the power to control the traffic in this canal within certain limits.

Mr. KERR. I will ask the gentleman if there is any portion of the treaty which would be still in force as far as this canal is concerned?

Mr. BLAND. That treaty has no reference to this particular bill, but it relates to this canal or any other canal that may be constructed across that Isthmus in any shape, manner, or form. And we are bound by this treaty of the United States with Great Britain.

Mr. SCOTT. Only as to Nicaragua.

Mr. BLAND. Why, Mr. Speaker, before I take my seat I will have read communications of Mr. Blaine, Mr. Frelinghuysen, and Mr. Evarts protesting against that treaty because of the fact that they say we are thus bound to Great Britain in case any canal is constructed across that Isthmus. There is no question about it. These communications have been made in our past history by the Secretaries of State I have named, and it has been insisted upon by Great Britain as being a substantial treaty. It is recognized to-day by our State Department as an existing treaty, and we are claiming certain rights under it in that territory now, or at least we are resisting certain rights that Great Britain claimed in the Mosquito kingdom and in British Honduras under this

And what further, Mr. Speaker? The claim was, sir, that under the treaty with the Government of Nicaragua in 1867 we have certain rights upon this Isthmus in connection with the construction of this canal; but the concession given to these incorporators, and that concession is ratified by this bill and made the basis of this bill, and the bill recites the concession itself-it recites the incorporators in the first section of it; it recites the concession which is the foundation of this corporation, and we recognize it in this bill-this concession itself in terms is violative of the very treaty that gentlemen claim we have with the Government of Nicaragua. One of the terms of this treaty of 1867 provides that this Government shall have the same rights and the same privileges in the commerce of this Isthmus and through this canal, if constructed, that the Government of Nicaragua has; that no more toll shall be exacted than from the Government of Nicaragua; and we pledge in that treaty our protection of this canal when com-

But here is this concession made to the corporators that we ratify; they give the people of Nicaragua and that government a rate of 50 per cent. less toll that may be charged to the Government of the United States or its citizens; and in that treaty, sir, we also provide that the Government of the United States shall have the protection of this canal and be under its supervision and control in that respect. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Nicaragua in the concession incorporated in this bill and made a part of it reserved to itself the right to make treaties with any nation on earth that it sees proper in regard to the protection of this canal and with regard to its traffic. I wish to incorporate these provisions with my remarks, as I have not time just now to read all of them; but I call the attention of the House to these essential differences between this concession itself and the supposed treaty existing between this Government and Nicaragua. But I claim we have no treaty with that government.

The treaty which was made in 1867 expired within fifteen years, and there has been no renewal of it. There was, I believe, an effort made to renew the treaty with regard to this canal with the Government of Nicaragua, sent to the Senate of the United States, but before it could be acted upon it was withdrawn by the present Executive; so that in truth and in fact we have now no treaty with that Government with reference to this canal. All the treaty that we have is this concessionary right given to these corporators, and that concessionary right reserves to the Government of Nicaragua the power to control within certain limits the traffic of the control. certain limits the traffic on the canal, and reserves to that Government the right to make such treaties as they see proper with the other nations of the world with reference to it. We are agreeing, therefore, in this bill to the propositions contained in the concessionary rights, because the concession is recited in the bill and made a part and parcel of it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is it true that Nicaragua under that concession could confer upon another nation equal rights in the matter of the use of the canal

Mr. BLAND. Why not?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am asking for information.

Mr. BLAND. Why, certainly. That is in the concessionary right, and we are ratifying it by this bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not.

Mr. BLAND. Well, neither am I, and I never intend to give my rote for the passage of a bill that will confer these powers upon Great Britain. When I offered my amendment providing that our Government should have control over the canal the House adopted it, but, strange to say, the conferees on the part of the House and of the Senate have agreed to leave it out; and in what condition does that leave us? It leaves us in this condition: Even if the treaty with Nicaragua were in force giving us the right to protect this canal, and to say what the toll may be, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we have abandoned that and handed it over to the Government of Great Britain.

Why, sir, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty Great Britain will step in and say, "So far as the Government of the United States is concerned, it is estopped from saying that we shall not exercise our own judgment as to the reasonableness of tolls over this canal;" and on the other hand the Nicaragua Government will say to the United States, "You are estopped, in so far as the Government of Nicaragua is concerned, from asserting any such right, because you have recognized the conces sion which gives to us the sole and exclusive right over that matter." In other words, we are leaving to Great Britain the power to regulate this matter and abandoning it, so far as we are concerned, to the Government of Nicaragua. I am not astonished, Mr. Speaker, that in a case of this kind the incorporators have undertaken to dodge that issue and to get this Government into the attitude in which they seek to put it. It was necessary for them to do that. Why?

Because the passage of this bill providing for the construction of this canal on these terms would enable them to say, "We can now look to the Government of the United States for the protection of our property down there after they have given us this charter, and at the same time under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we can look for protection to Great Britain in the enjoyment of our property in the canal, and in that way we can negotiate our securities both in Europe and in the United States." There is nothing in this bill to interfere with the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, nothing to prevent the Government of the United States from protecting our interests; and they are bound to do it, inasmuch as they have sent this corporation to Nicaragua clothed with all the rights of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has referred to the Menocal concession and to some provision in it which gives a power to the Republic of Nicaragua to grant certain rights to foreign governments. I have a copy of that concession before me, and I will thank the gentleman if he will indicate where that provision is to be

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will refer to Article VI of the concession he will find the following. I will begin at the middle of the section; I have not time to read it all:

The transit of foreign troops and vessels of war will be subjected to the restrictions relating to the same established by treaty between Nicaragua and other powers and by international law; but entrance into the canal will be prohibited to vessels of war of such powers as may be at war with Nicaragua or any other of the South American states. Nicaragua will endeavor to obtain-from the powers that are to guaranty the neutrality that in the treaties that shall be made for the purpose they shall guaranty also a zone parallel to the canal and also a maritime zone in both oceans, the dimensions of which will be determined in such treaties.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the provision the gentleman referred to?
Mr. BLAND. That is the provision. So that I say, Mr. Speaker, under this provision itself here is a power reserved by the Government of Nicaragua with reference to the entering of these ports by foreign governments and also with reference to the guaranty of the neutrality of this enterprise. I say that under this concession there is a reservation with respect to tolls.

Mr. ADAMS. What article is that?

Mr. BLAND. Article LII. This article provides that—

From the receipts of the enterprise the company shall take in the first place the necessary amount to cover all the expenses for maintenance, operation, and administrations all the sums necessary to secure the interest, which shall not exceed 6 per cent. and the amortization of the obligations and of the shares, and what remains shall form the net profits, of which at least 80 per cent. shall be divided among the shareholders, it being agreed that after the lapse of ten years after the completion of the canal the company shall not divide among the shareholders in payments of dividends, directly or indirectly, by issue of shares or otherwise, more than 15 per cent. annually, or in this proportion, from dues collected from the aforesaid canal; and where it shall appear that these dues yield a greater profit they shall be reduced to the fixed limit of 15 per cent. per annum.

Under that concession, taken in connection with the amendment which has been under discussion, providing that this company may issue stock in exchange for property or labor, the value of which will be fixed absolutely by this company, room will be given for watering this stock without limit; and there is given to the Government of Nicaragua—and this canal will be the Government of Nicaragua if it is ever gua—and this canal will be the Government of Nicaragua if it is ever built—the power to charge toll not exceeding 15 per cent. on this enormous amount of watered stock that may be issued by this company. Yet we are expected to sit quietly here and see this bill pass in this shape and say that this Government will not interfere. What right shall we have to interfere hereafter? We are not only incorporating a company to do a certain piece of work, but we are authorizing that company to proceed to do that week under certain condition. pany to proceed to do that work under certain conditions, restrictions, and limitations, and this is one of them.

Mr. ADAMS. Is Article LII, to which the gentlemen refers, a part of the treaty, or is it mentioned in the treaty of 1867?

Mr. BLAND. It is a part of the concession.

Mr. ADAMS. I am aware of that; but is it also in the treaty?

There is a treaty of 1867 which has some reference, I Mr. BLAND. think, to fixing the limit at 15 per cent. But I am discussing now the limits under the bill in its present state.

Mr. ADAMS. I so understand; but I notice by the language as I glance it over that the 15 per cent. referred to seems to be 15 per cent. of the actual cost of the canal. I may be wrong about that.

Mr. BLAND. The actual cost of the canal will be arrived at by the amount of stock issued to pay for it; and under this bill there is absolutely no limit to the extent to which that stock may be watered. So that this 15 per cent., instead of being 15 per cent. of the actual, honest cost of constructing the canal, may be 50 per cent. or 100 per cent. That matter is left to the discretion and the supposed honesty of these

But, as I said before, Mr. Speaker, while we abandon the right to interfere with the regulation of the tolls of that canal we concede that right to Great Britain in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read an extract from a communication which Mr. Blaine, when Secretary of State, addressed to Mr. Lowell, at that time our minister in Great Britain, with reference to this Clayton-Bulwer treaty. As I said before, Mr. Evarts, Mr. Blaine, and Mr. Fre-linghuysen have all endeavored to obtain the consent of the British Government to the modification of that treaty, or else put us in a po-sition to renounce it entirely, because they have claimed that this canal ought to be under the absolute control of this Government. The Clerk read as follows:

It consequently becomes evident that the one conclusive mode of preserving any Isthmus canal from the possible distraction and destruction of war is to place it under the control of that government least likely to be engaged in war, and able, in any and every event, to enforce the guardianship which she shall assume.

For self-protection to her own interests, therefore, the United States in the first instance asserts her right to control the Isthmus transit. And, secondly, she offers by such control that absolute neutralization of the canal as respects European powers which can in no other way be certainly attained and lastingly assured.

Another consideration of the canal as respects.

Another consideration forcibly suggests the necessity of modifying the convention under discussion. At the time it was agreed to, Great Britain and the United States were the only nations prominent in the commerce of Central and South America. Since that time other leading nations have greatly enlarged their commercial connections with that country, and are to-day contending for supremacy in the trade of those shores. Within the past four years, indeed, the number of French and German vessels landing on the two coasts of Central America far exceeds the number of British vessels.

While, therefore, Great Britain and the United States may agree to do nothing, and, according to the present convention, each remains bound to the other in common helplessness, a third power, or a fourth, or a combination of many may step in and give direction to the project which the Clayton-Bulwer treaty assumed was under the sole control of the two English-speaking nations. Indeed, so far as the canal scheme now projected at Panama finds a national sponsor or patron, it is in the Republic of France, and the non-intervention enjoined upon this country by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, if applied to that canal, would paralyze the arm of the United States in any attempt to assert the plain rights and privileges which this Government acquired through a solemn treaty with the Republic of Colombia anterior to the Clayton-Bulwer convention, so that the modification of the treaty of 1850, now sought, is not only to free the United States from unequal and inequitable obligations to Great Britain, but also to empower this Government to treat with all other nations seeking a foothold on the isthmus on the same basis of impartial justice and independence.

One of the motives that originally induced this Government to assent to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, not distinctly expressed in the instrument, but inferable from every line of it, was the expected aid of British capital in the construction of the Nicaraguan canal. That expectation has not been realized, and the changed condition of this country since 1850 has diminished, if it has not entirely removed from consideration, any advantage to be derived from that source. Whenever, in the judgment of the United States Government, the time shall be auspicious and the conditions favorable for the construction of the Nicaraguan canal, no aid will be needed outside of the resources of our own Government and people; and while foreign capital will always be welcomed and never repelled, it can not henceforth enter as an essential factor in the determination of this problem.

It is carnestly hoped by the President that the considerations now presented will have due weight and influence with Her Majesty's Government, and that the modifications of the treaty desired by the United States will be conceded in the same friendly spirit in which they are asked.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, in the brief space of an hour I have not

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, in the brief space of an hour I have not time to have read all the correspondence on this subject; but I think it it may enlighten this House and be of some interest to members if I have read the reply of Earl Granville to the communication of Mr. Blaine, and especially to that of Mr. Frelinghuysen on this question. It will be observed that Earl Granville claims that this treaty is still in force, and absolutely refuses to enter into any negotiation with reference to its absolutely refuses to enter into any negotiation with reference to its modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

With regard to Mr. Freiinghuysen's further contention, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has been abrogated by the fact that British Honduras is now a "colony," instead of remaining a "settlement," as it was called at the time of the conclusion of that treaty, I need only remark, in addition to what has already been stated to you in my previous dispatches, that when that treaty was concluded, in 1850, it was signed on the distinct understanding, expressed in writing, that it was not to apply to "Her Majesty's settlement at Honduras," and that it was therefore not deemed necessary, at that time, either to mark out the exact limits of that settlement or to define its "dependencies." Allogether from the arrangement which was entered into between the two Governments in 1850 for the settlement of the questions then in dispute, and all of which questions President Buchanan informed the United States Congress in December, 1890, had been amicably and honorably adjusted, Her Majesty's Government can not see with what justice it can now be said that the change of title of that possession of Her Majesty, from that of a "settlement" to a "colony," can be appealed to as a violation of the arrangement of 1830.

To use were informed in my dispatch of the Sth May, 1882, that Her Majesty's Government were not called upon either to admit or deny the views which he explained in that dispatch as being those which were entertained by his Government on that subject, but as Mr. Freilinghuysen, in his dispatch of the 5th May last, still maintains that the views of the United States on that doctrine are sufficiently manifest, I may remind you that the views which were entertained by Fresident Monroe have not always been accepted by his Government were not called upon either to admit or deny the views which were entertained by Fresident Monroe have not always been accepted by his Government were not called upon either to admit

Mr. BLAND. That seems to have terminated the correspondence upon that subject, in which, as we have seen, Earl Granville gave it to be understood that there was no necessity for any change in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the British Government did not propose to consent to any. This correspondence, I say, took place directly upon the question of canals across that Isthmus by which the authorities of our Government undertook to change the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or urge certain reasons why we had the right to renounce the treaty.

But Mr. Bayard recently, in a communication to the British authorities upon this very same treaty, takes the ground that it is still in force; and I will print with my remarks, for I have not time now to have it read, his communication in reference to the question arising between this Government and the Government of Great Britain in regard to the Mosquito reservation near the line of this canal.

It is as follows:

It is as follows:

The President can not but regard the continued exercise of the claim on the part of Great Britain to interfere on behalf of these Indians as the assertion of a British protectorate in another form; more especially when this effort is directed to prohibiting Nicaragua from exercising military jurisdiction in the immediate neighborhood of the Atlantic mouth of the projected canal.

The United States can never see with indifference the re-establishment of such a protectorate. Not only would the extension of European influence upon this continent be contrary to the traditional and frequently expressed policy of the United States; but the course of Great Britain in assuming or exercising any dominion over the Mosquito coast, or making use of any protection it may afford or any alliance it may have to or with any people for the purpose of assuming or exercising any dominion over that territory, would be in violation of the express stipulations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, whose binding force Great Britain has up to the present time so emphatically asserted.

It is not needful in this communication to consider the temporary or perpetual existence of the various provisions of that treaty. My immediate predecessors have with great fullness expressed their views upon that head, and I do not now comment upon them. But it is proper to refer to these conventional engagements of Great Britain as exhibiting the measure of her admitted obligations.

Whether the interference of the British Government be regarded as a breach of existing treaty expressions of whathan it he labeled the provision of existing treaty expressions.

gations.

Whether the interference of the British Government be regarded as a breach of existing treaty engagements, or whether it be looked upon simply as an effort not prohibited by express agreement to extend her influence in this continent, in either case the Government of the United States can not look upon such acts without concern. The circumstances of the particular locality render the subject one of peculiar interest and importance to the people of this country, and I should be wanting in my duty to them should I fail to bring the matter directly and frankly and in a spirit of sincere friendship to the notice of Her Majesty's Government.

The history of the former controversies in regard to the same subject should.

Government.

The history of the former controversies in regard to the same subject should admonish those who are charged with the conduct of the affairs of the two countries to spare no effort to avoid misunderstandings and promote cordial co-operation and good intelligence between them. With this purpose in view, and animated by the strongest desire to escape possible future causes of difference, I address you these instructions.

You will read this dispatch to the Marquis of Salisbury, and, should he desire it, you may furnish him with a copy.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this Clayton-Bulwer treaty is still in force, and of the further fact that this Government has sought to make modifications of it or to renounce it, or at least to secure a new convention, we ought to put into this bill some provision which would reserve the rights of the Government to alter or amend or to renounce that treaty in future if it becomes necessary or desirable to do so. But no such provision is incorporated in the bill; we reserve no such right, and the provision inserted which did look to the control of the canal by this Government has been stricken from it by the committee of conference, and hence the British Government whenever a question arises will have a right to claim that when this canal project was presented to the American Congress, and when the time and place arrived where this Government could renounce that treaty and assert what they claim to be the Monroe doctrine, and what President Hayes and President Garfield claimed, that these canals across the Isthmus should be under the direct control of the Government-I say the British Government will have the right to say when that subject was before Congress and the Government undertook to charter a company for the construction of the canal we recognized the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as being in full force and effect, and we did not enact a single provision of law in this charter antagonistic to that idea.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a short question?
Mr. BLAND. Certainly.
Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman construe the Monroe doctrine to mean that we under it have the power to construct canals and control them in foreign countries?

Mr. BLAND. Oh, that is not the point. The point I make is this: Will the Government assert here now whether or not this canal shall be under the exclusive protectorate and control of the United States, or whether it shall be in conjunction with Great Britain (by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty) under a joint protectorate and control.

Mr. SCOTT. The Monroe doctrine does not mean anything of the

Mr. BLAND. I am not talking of the Monroe doctrine at all, but of the effect that this treaty has upon the pending question.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Do you regard the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as extending to the Isthmus?

Mr. BLAND. I do, for the convention was entered into upon that specially and that solely, the question before them being in regard to the construction of an interoceanic or ship canal across the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. You understand it also as referring to the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bayard's communication just referred to, that of last November, recognizes the still binding force of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and sets up certain objections and makes certain protests to the action of the Government of Great Britain in violation of the treaty in respect to the Government of Great Britain in violation of the treaty in respect to the Government of Nicaragua and of the Government of New Granada. So it is of binding force; and yet, with that treaty in force, we are enacting a bill incorporating a company to construct a canal and make no provision saving to the Government the exclusive control and protectorate over it, but leaving it subject to all of the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, although it forms virtually a part of our coast-line.

I will have read in this connection a little extract from a message of President Hayes on this subject when this question was first broached.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hayes, in his message of 8th March, 1880, says: "The policy of this country is a canal under American control. The capital invested by corporations or citizens of other countries must, in a great degree, look for protection to one or more of the great powers of the world. No European power can intervene for such protection without adopting measures on this continent which the United States would deem wholly inadmissible. The interoceanic canal across the American Isthmus will essentially change the geographical relations between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States; between the United States and the rest of the world. It will be virtually a part of the coast-line of the United States. Our merely commercial interest in it is greater than that of all other countries, while its relations to our power and prosperity as a nation, to our means of defense, our unity, peace, and safety, are matters of paramount concern to the people of the United States. It is the right and the duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any interoceanic canal across the isthmus that connects North and South America as will protect our national interests."

Mr. Evarts, in his report accompanying Mr. Hayes's message of 1880, said: "The question involved presents itself distinctly to this Government as a territorial one, in the administration of which as such it must exercise a potential control."

Mr. Blaine, in a letter to Mr. Lowell, June 24, 1881, enunciates the same doctrine and core.

Mr. Blaine, in a letter to Mr. Lowell, June 24, 1881, enunciates the same doc-

Mr. Blaine, in a letter to Mr. Lowell, June 24, 1881, enumerates the same doctrine, and says:

"It is nothing more than the pronounced adherence of the United States to principles long since enunciated by the highest authority of the Government, and now, in the judgment of the President, firmly inwoven as an integral and important part of our national policy."

Lord Granville, in a note of November 10, 1881, referring to Mr. Blaine's letter saves.

Lord Granville, in a note of November 10, 1881, referring to Mr. Blaine's letter, says:

"The position of Great Britain and the United States in reference to the said canal is determined by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty."

Mr. Blaine, in a letter to Mr. Lowell, November 19, 1881, says:

"For self-protection to our interests, therefore, the United States in the first instance asserts her right to control the Isthmus transit, and secondly, she offers by such control absolute neutralization of the canal as respects European powers, which can in no other way be certainly attained and lastingly assured."

Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Lowell, May 8, 1882:

"The President believes that the formation of a protectorate by European nations over the Isthmus transit would be in conflict with a doctrine which has been for many years asserted by the United States."

Again he says:

"The President does not feel himself warranted in making any engagement or any admission respecting the extinct provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which would prevent or interfere with such a purpose."

Lord Granville to Mr. West, August 17, 1883, says:

"Her Majesty's Government sees no reason whatever to depart from, or in any way to alter, the views which have been conveyed to you in my dispatches above referred to, and they have therefore arrived at the conclusion that a prolongation of the discussion seems unlikely to lead to any practical result."

Mr. BLAND. I have had these extracts read to show the history of the diplomatic correspondence between this country and Great Britain upon this subject, and the position occupied by President Hayes when the Senate asked for information in regard to these treaties. Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen tell us that if we incorporate in this bill a resolution on the part of the Federal Government in its judgment to say whether tolls are reasonable or not, it is claimed the provision would prevent the tolls are reasonable or not, it is claimed the provision would prevent the building of the canal. But when the authorities of this Government, connected with those of Great Britain, were making a treaty upon this subject—the Clayton-Bulwer treaty—the last clause of that treaty provided, as I have had read, that the Governments of the United States and Great Britain should judge as to that matter, and that in any canal built across the Isthmus the rights of toll should be subject to the judgment of these two nations. If our predecessors were foresighted enough to see the necessity of asserting this power, why are we, sir, to abandon that high privilege offered to us here, and the only place where we could legitimately exercise it in this bill?

Why shall we sir abandon the high preparative of incorporating in

Why shall we, sir, abandon the high prerogative of incorporating in a creature of our own making these conditions? When we do pass this bill, it is not only a bill to incorporate a company, but it is a bill making certain concessions and contracts with that company. This company has certain concessions from the Government of Nicaragua. give them certain concessions in this bill, and this bill recognizes in the fullest force and effect all the terms of the concession made by the Government of Nicaragua; and the bill recites these concessions in the body of the bill itself, and affirms and ratifies them, and yet this flies in the face of the supposed treaty with Nicaragua.

There is but one provision in the bill that I think has a squint at reserving the rights of this Government, and that is that provision that it shall not interfere with any treaty rights made by this Government with the Government of Nicaragua. But, as I stated before, there is no treaty on which it could act. That treaty ran for fifteen years. Beginning in 1867, it is now out of date; and then, admitting that the treaty itself is in existence, this concession is in terms contrary to the treaty itself is in existence, this concession is in terms contrary to the terms of that treaty in the particulars named.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that is to be the policy of this Government, to denounce the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, this is the place and now is the time to do it. If the bill passes in its present form we will at some future day be bound to assert certain rights and privileges that ought to belong to this Government; but in asserting them we will have to break from our plighted faith and we will be compelled to override treaties to assert our rights in this dishonorable mode. I say now is the time and place to consider this question, and I ask gentlemen to review this charter and act of incorporation and to let this bill be passed in such a shape as to reserve the rights of this Government as against European powers on the American coast.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I have to remark that the treaty of 1867 with Nicaragua contained the following provisions:

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I have to remark that the treaty of 1867 with Nicaragua contained the following provisions:

Art. XIV. The Republic of Nicaragua hereby grants to the United States, and to their citizens and property, the right of transit between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through the territory of that republic, on any route of communication, natural or artificial, whether by land or by water, which may now or hereafter exist or be constructed under the authority of Nicaragua, to be used and enjoyed in the same manner and upon equal terms by both republics and their respective citizens, the Republic of Nicaragua, however, reserving its rights of sovereignty over the same.

Art. XV. The United States hereby agree to extend their protection to all such routes of communication as aforesaid, and to guaranty the neutrality and innocent use of the same. They also agree to employ their influence with other nations to induce them to guaranty such neutrality and protection.

And the Republic of Nicaragua, on its part, undertakes to establish one free port at each extremity of one of the aforesaid routes of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. At these ports no tonnage or other duties shall be imposed or levied by the Government of Nicaragua on the vessels of the United States, or on any effects or merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of the United States, or upon the vessels or effects of any other country intended, bona fide, for transit across the said routes of communication, and not for consumption within the Republic of Nicaragua. The United States shall be allowed to the united States, or upon the vessels or effects of any other country intended, bona fide, for transit across the said routes of communication, and not for consumption within the Republic of Nicaragua. The United States shall less of all the property of citizens on the respective of the United States, or other wise, to either of said free ports, and shall be entitled to their conveyance between them without ob

These two articles give the same privileges to the citizens of this country and to this Government of transit over any canal constructed as may be claimed by Nicaragua. They also recognize the rights of this Government to protect the canal.

The concessions made to the incorporators in this bill by the Government of Nicaragua and made a part of the bill violate both of these articles. I quote the following from this concession:

articles. I quote the following from this concession:

ART. 44. As compensation for the privileges and concessions that Nicaragua grants by this contract, it is hereby stipulated that the republic shall enjoy the special privilege that Nicaraguan vessels satiling under the Nicaraguan flag may navigate the canal at a reduction of 50 per cent. from the general tariff while engaged in the coasting trade, or in the reciprocal trade with the other republics of Central America. It is declared that the vessels referred to in the preceding paragraph must be exclusively of the register of the republic, and that they must not be owned, either in whole or in part, by citizens of other countries.

A reduction of 50 per cent, from the general tariff is also granted to vessels that begin their voyage for a foreign country in any of the ports belonging to the republic, with a cargo wholly composed of products of the country. All the privileges to which this article refers shall be extended to the other republics of Central America whenever Nicaragua shall find itself free from international obligations which may prevent it, or whenever one or more of the said republics shall form a single nation with Nicaragua. The company can not collect any navigation dues whatever upon vessels and craft navigating the Lake of Nicaragua and its prolongations without passing out of the locks. The Nicaraguan vessels of war, and in the case above provided those of the republics of Central America, shall not pay any dues on passing through the canal.

It will be observed that in this article of the concession the Govern-and our citizens. I quote again the following from this concession:

ART. 6. The Government of the Republic declares during the term of this concession the ports at each extremity of the canal, and the canal itself, from sea to sea, to be neutral, and that consequently the transit through the canal in case of war between two powers, or between one or more and Nicaragua, shall not be interrupted for such cause; and that merchant vessels and individuals of all nations of the world may freely enter the ports and pass through the canal without molestation or detention.

Ingeneral, all vessels may pass though the canal freely, without distinction, exclusion, or preference of persons or nationality, provided they pay the dues and observe the regulations established by the grantee company for the use of the said canal and its dependencies. The transit of foreign troops and vessels of war will be subjected to the prescriptions relating to the same established by treaties between Nicaragua and other powers or by international law. But entrance to the canal will be rigorously prohibited to vessels of war of such powers as may be at war with Nicaragua or with any other of the Central American republics.

Nicaragua will endeavor to obtain from the powers that are to guaranty the neutrality that in the treaties that shall be made for that purpose they shall agree also to guaranty a zone of land parallel to the canal and also a maritime zone in both oceans, the dimensions of which will be determined in such treaties'

This article is in conflict with the treaty in a very vital and important particular. It gives the Government of Nicaragua the right to negotiate with any and all governments it sees proper for the securing of the neutrality of the canal, and thus, instead of reserving to this Government. It was not made by weakness or in the neutrality of the canal, and thus, instead of reserving to this Government.

ernment this protectorate, it is left to the Government of Nicaragua to secure that through the intervention of European powers.

Mr. Speaker, I insist that the amendment I proposed, to the effect that this Government reserves to itself the right to judge of the reasonable ness of the tolls to be charged on this canal, should be kept in the bill. It is reasonable, and it is necessary to protect us in the matter of our commerce.

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to occupy the time of the House in this discussion, but I feel compelled to answer the gentleman from Missouri on several material points. One of the last assertions that he made before he took his seat was that the Republic of the United States had not an existing treaty with the Republic of Nicaragua. He emphasized that statement in the course of his speech by repeating it several times, and declared that the two Republics had no treaty of amity and commerce.

The gentleman is in error. The treaty of 1867, made by the accredited minister of the United States to the Government of Nicaragua, does Our relations with that Government are under that treaty today, and it is recognized at the State Department, as I am informed by a message which I received from there while the gentleman was speak-He states that the treaty was made in 1867 with a limitation of fifteen years. If that were true in fact the treaty would have expired. I beg the House to give attention to the article of the treaty which shows how it is to be terminated when it is the will of either Republic to bring it to a conclusion, and that it is in full force and effect. I read, sir, from the text of the treaty:

Either party shall have the right to notify the other of its intention to terminate, alter, or re-form this treaty at least twelve months before the expiration of the fifteen years, and if no such notice be given, then this treaty shall continue binding beyond said time, and until twelve months shall have elapsed from the date on which one of the parties shall notify the other of its intention to alter, re-form, or abrogate the treaty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this Government has been satisfied with the treaty and has never given Nicaragua notice that we wished to alter or to abrogate it, and we have never received any notice from Nicaragua that she was dissatisfied with the treaty.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?
Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Certainly.
Mr. BLAND. I think the gentleman will find that I stated in my argument that I did not believe that that treaty still existed, but that, granting it does exist, still the concession that is made to these corporators, and which we recognize and affirm in this bill, does away with all the guaranties of that treaty, every one of them.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman chooses now to take the ground that the treaty exists, then I have no answer to make to his previous assertion that it did not exist. [Laughter.] I show clearly from the Book of Treaties of the United States, for which I sent to the Library when the gentleman made his assertion, that the treaty is in full force, and I will add that it is one of the most important treaties this Government ever executed or ratified with any one of the sister republics upon this continent. It is similar in its terms to another most important treaty, of which the gentleman seems never to have heard, our treaty with the Republic of New Granada, now one of the United States of Colombia, in which this Government agreed to guaranty the neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama, over which the gentleman says Great Britain now exercises concurrent power with us, an assertion which is an entire mistake. We not only agreed to guaranty the neutrality of that Isthmus, but we agreed, as the sovereign power of this continent, to defend that Isthmus from invasion and to preserve order on the Isthmus, and since the present Administration has been in power we have landed marines on that Isthmus and quelled a serious disturbance that threatened life and property there. That means that we have done what was required of us under a treaty similar to the one which we have with Nicaragua. The treaty with New Granada was made in 1846.

It is now an existing treaty with the United States of Colombia, and the treaty of Nicaragua is, as I have said, similar in terms to it and gives us the same power on the Isthmus of Nicaragua that we have upon the Isthmus of Darien under the other treaty—a power with which we have never proposed to part, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to the contrary notwithstanding. We have never asked Great Britain, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to assist us in the protection of the Isthmus, but we have exercised the power of guarantying neutrality by landing marines and showing our flag, and that, I may tell the House, is all that we need to do at any time to enforce the Monroe doctrine. A file of marines as long as from here to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. McKinney] and a flag as large as this newspaper will vindicate the Monroe doctrine upon any part of this continent, because the world knows that behind that little show of force there is the power of sixty millions of martial people.

Now, sir, in regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that ancient specter which the heated imagination of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has conjured up here to-day to frighten the House from its propriety, let me say that forty years ago there were reasons why that was a desirable arrangement. It was not made by weakness or in

It was a treaty made to cover two points. One was a canal charter similar to the matter now before the House; the other was our wish to get rid of a protectorate that Great Britian was exercising over part of Central America. Mr. Clayton did not mean to give up the Monroe doctrine. We could not do that if we would. That is only a doctrine. It is not a law, it has never been limited by exact words, but it is a sentiment deep in the hearts of the American people, as broad as the continent, and even this House can never do away with it and can revere the most of the American people.

At that time Great Britain was holding considerable of the Atlantic coast of Central America under grants more than one hundred years old, derived from the Government of Spain. She had extended her possession, or rather her protectorate, until she had taken in the mouth of the San Juan River and all possible outlet for a canal from Lake Nicaragua to the Atlantic Ocean. It was a desire to get rid of that occupation, as well as a desire to enable the incorporators of that canal project to raise money in Europe, that induced the United States Government to make the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The treaty refers solely to these questions. Great Britain did not withdraw her protectorate under that treaty, as we expected she would do. She did not even confine herself to the limits of the old grants; she held on to the territory where the caual was to enter the Atlantic. The canal project failed; not a dollar was invested in it; the story of the affair is all there is left, and the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, like the canal project, only exists in the words written on the parchment.

The gentleman [Mr. BLAND] quotes from Earl Granville. It makes no difference what Earl Granville says about the matter; a British minister is no authority in this House; but it makes a great deal of difference what our State Department says, because it interprets treaties for And when the gentleman came to look at the text of what Secretary Bayard had said in regard to that treaty he concluded he would not read it to the House.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker— Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Read it now if you want to; I will give you time.

Mr. BLAND. I will have it read now.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Let it be read as a part of my

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman will hardly do me the injustice to intimate that I intended to withhold the text of the document from the House, for I stated the substance of it, and said that not having time to read the whole of it I would print it with my remarks.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. We want it read. Mr. BLAND. I ask that it be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The President can not but regard the continued exercise of the claim on the part of Great Britain to interfere on behalf of these Indians as the assertion of a British protectorate in another form, more especially when this effort is directed to prohibiting Nicaragua from exercising military jurisdiction in the immediate neighborhood of the Atlantic mouth of the projected canal.

The United States can never see with indifference the re-establishment of such a protectorate. Not only would the extension of European influence upon this continent be contrary to the traditional and frequently expressed policy of the United States, but the course of Great Britain in assuming or exercising any dominion over the Mosquito coast, or making use of any protection it may afford or any alliance it may have to or with any people for the purpose of assuming or exercising any dominion over that territory, would be in violation of the express stipulations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, whose binding force Great Britain has up to the present time so emphatically asserted.

Mr. RI-AND. The gentleman can see that Segretary Rayard bases

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman can see that Secretary Bayard bases his protest distinctly upon that treaty.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. It is nearly forty years since the treaty was made, and Secretary Bayard refers to the fact that Great Britain has not yet carried out its stipulations by abandoning her protectorate over the Mosquito Indians. He refers to the fact that Great Britain considers it a binding treaty, but he does not say that we so acknowledged it.

Mr. BLAND. Let the rest of the document be read; and you may explain it as you choose.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I do not care to have my time frittered away with this matter. I am willing to have the document printed as part of my remarks.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is now retreating from the proposi-

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman from Massachusetts did not yield for a speech from the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I wanted as much read as re-lated to this matter. Mr. Bayard and every other Secretary of State have always declared that Great Britain never fulfilled the stipulations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and that it never went into effect. never abandoned her protectorate over the Mosquito Indians. She holds it by a grant that is older than our Constitution; and she has never been willing to give it up. She did abandon her protectorate over the shores of Nicaragua, but not at our request. She gave back the sovereignty of the Nicaraguan coast on the Atlantic to that Republic about 1860 in a special treaty with that Republic with which we had nothing to do.

It is not held by our State Department—I do not speak for the State Department, but I speak of what is well known to every man who has had anything to do with our foreign affairs—it is not held by our State Department that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is binding upon us to-day; nor has it ever been. If it had been, what an absurdity it was that the British Government did not assert it four or five years after it was ratified, when a United States sloop-of-war sailed down opposite to the port of Greytown, then under the protection of Great Britain, her flag flying over her consulate as evidence of her protectorate, and shelled the town, and then landed marines and burned every house, destroying a great amount of property and driving the British consul and the "protector" into the woods; and a British manof-war was lying there in such a position that Commodore Hollins had to maneuver in such a manner as not to hit the British ship when he fired his guns. [Laughter.] That incident, as you will find by looking back into its history, was only four or five years after the ratifica-tion of the treaty that it is pretended gives Great Britain concurrent power with us over the whole Isthmus. Sir, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty died at the time that it was made, because its provisions never were executed and never can be.

But, the gentleman may say, why does this treaty remain on our statute-books? Why has it not been formally abrogated? I answer because the British Government has never chosen to join with us in that abrogation; and by the terms of the treaty it still remains there. But it is not an obstacle in our way; and the dangers that the gentleman from Missouri has conjured up have no existence but in his imagination.

Now, sir, let me return to the existing treaty with Nicaragua and show the House that it could not exist if the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was alive. It was made seventeen years after the ratification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and it directly contravenes that treaty. It does so without protest from Great Britain from the time it was executed until now. That treaty places in our hands the sole right to guaranty the neutrality of the Isthmus of Nicaragua and to defend it. This right is one for which we should always negotiate, and not attempt to claim without negotiation, because in dealing with sister republics on this continent we deal with states that are weak, but as sovereign as ourselves, and with the same rights over their territory that we have

We executed this treaty with Nicaragua in which we guarantied the neutrality of the Isthmus in 1867, just as we extended our power over the Isthmus of Darien in 1846; a beneficent power which we may use only in defense of the weak against the strong

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy the attention of the House at length or to discuss the merits of the bill. I merely desire to show that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] is mistaken in his position and misinformed in regard to very important matters; that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is not recognized by our Government and can not be brought here to frighten the House out of what it may choose to do; that the treaty with Nicaragua is in full force under which our relations of commerce and amity with that state are defined, and we need no further negotiation with that country to carry out the matters under discussion in this House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House meets this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 5th day of February next, at 5 o'clock p. m., the House take a recess until 7.30 p.m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, except the national park bill and the trust bill, and that the House adjourn not later than 10.30 p. m.

ASSESSMENT OF REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 11957) to amend an act entitled "An act to levy an assessment on real estate in the District of Columbia for the purpose of taxation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole, Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the House consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read by sections, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 137 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress be amended as follows:
Strike out the words "who shall be resident thereof" in the third section of said chapter.

After and amend section 9 of said chapter so that it shall read as follows:
"The board of tax and license appeal hereinafter created shall, with the assessors herein provided for, convene at an office to be assigned them by the commissioners on the first Monday in July of each year in which an assessment is made under the provisions of this act, for the purpose of correcting such errors in the said assessment as may be deemed proper for the fair equalization of the values of the property assessed."

The committee propose to amend by inserting the following:

That section 11 of said charter be amended by inserting after the last word thereof the words "subject to the provisions of the act amendatory hereto passed at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 12 of the said chapter be amended by inserting after the word "return," in the sixth line of said section, the words, "to the board of tax and license appeal hereinafter provided for," and by striking out the proviso to said section.

That section 13 be amended by striking out the words "collector of taxes, who shall at once proceed to collect," and in lieu thereof insert the words "board of tax and license appeal hereinafter provided for, and the taxes so in arrears shall be collected as other taxes are collected."

Sec. 2. That sections 14 and 15 of said chapter be stricken out, and that the following section be added in lieu thereof as a section of the said act:

"Sec. — That the collector, the assessor, and the clerk in charge of special assessments of the District of Columbia shall constitute a board of license and tax appeal, and shall have power to value and make return in every year, except the year designated for general assessment, of all property taxable by law not before assessed and valued; to reduce the assessment and valuation of any property assessed as herein provided, which may have been lessened in value; to increase the assessment and valuation of any property which may have been enhanced in value; and generally to make such corrections and additions in previous assessments and valuations as may be just and proper, having in view the actual cash value of the property at the time of such correction; and any person aggrieved by the assessment of any property however made may apply to the said board for an abatement, and if he makes it appear that he is taxed upon an assessment of his property above its cash value, said board shall make a reasonable abatement, and shall certify the same to the auditor, upon whose statement the sum estimated to be due for such abatement shall be paid to said applicant; and the said board shall have power to hear all applications for licenses under existing laws, and shall make report of its hearing and of the facts ascertained by such hearing to the commissioners for their determination; the said board shall hold its sessions

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to insert the word "fourteen" in line 4 of section 2, so that it will read, "section 14;" and on the same line and on the top of page 3, strike out the words "clerk in charge of special assessments" and insert the word "auditor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL I will simply obtained to the terminal of the control o

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will simply state to the House that this bill was really prepared by the District commissioners to provide a system of appeals from erroneous tax assessments. Under the law in this District when a man is assessed it is for three years. There is no possibility of correcting an erroneous valuation, and this bill simply provides for a board of three auditors who can correct and rectify an erroneous assessment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

AVENUE TO MOUNT VERNON.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (S. 3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Mount Vernon, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the louse as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KILGORE. As I understand the effect of that motion, it will not deprive any member of any right in the House that he would have in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A member would have the same rights as in the House. The only thing is that the House can order the previous question on the bill. General debate will be considered as closed and the first formal reading dispensed with.

Mr. KILGORE. Of course before we get through with this matter I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] will be in a mood to be accommodating.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will in anything that is reasonable.
Mr. KILGORE. I have got an objection to this bill in its present attitude. Is there any objection to having the bill and report read? That may obviate the difficulty.

Mr. ATKINSON. Let the bill be read.

Mr. KILGORE. After that I will see whether I will object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to detail one or more engineer officers of the Army to make the necessary surveys for a national road from a point in Alexandria County, Virginia, at or near the Virginia end of the Aqueduct Bridge, and thence through the counties of Alexandria and Fairfax, in said State, to Mount Vernon, who shall report the same, together with the estimated cost of building such road, to the Secretary of War, who shall transmit the same to Congress.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The report (by Mr. LEE) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Mount Vernon, and making an appropriation therefor, submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to survey a national road to Mount Vernon, where, daily, persons from all parts of the country go. It seems peculiarly appropriate that visitors to the capital of their country should find an easy and pleasant drive to the home of the Father of his Country. Thousands of people visit this historic place yearly, and Congress should, in the opinion of your committee, provide a convenient mode of getting there.

Your committee recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. KILGORE. The objection that I have is based upon the face of the bill and the face of the report. The bill provides that this survey shall begin in the State of Virginia and terminate in the State of Virginia. It is to be confined entirely to that State. This bill authorizes Congress to go into Virginia and take charge of a sufficient amount of territory to include this avenue without offering any evidence, either in the bill or in the report, to indicate that the State has consented that the Government of the United States shall do that; and I do not think it is in the power of Congress to take charge of Virginia, or of any porit is in the power of Congress to take charge of Virginia, or of any portion of Virginia, or any other State without the consent of the State, Now, I will be candid with the friends of this measure. I understand that Virginia has passed a law providing for the construction of this avenue from the south end of the bridge to Mount Vernon, by way of Alexandria, and has appropriated $25,000 for that purpose.

I understand that the State has provided that the counties of Alexandria and Fairfax may contribute to the extent of $2,000 a mile to the construction of the avenue and that it has gone further and passed the construction of the avenue, and that it has gone further and passed a joint resolution conceding to the Mount Vernon Association—which seems to have charge of this avenue—an old claim against the United States, amounting to $120,000, for money advanced by Virginia to the Federal Government to construct public buildings in Washington about a hundred years ago. I believe that is about the status of this matter. The objection I make now is that all these facts ought to appear of record. I understand that Virginia has done these things as I recited them, but there is no record of it here, and there is no evidence that the laws which I have mentioned are still the laws of Virginia. The act of the Legislature to which I refer was passed, I believe, in 1887 or 1888. What I suggest is that this bill shall be recommitted to the committee, so that they may report all the facts and circumstances in connection with the transaction and put them on record, in order that Congress may act intelligently on the subject and with reference to the concessions made by the State of Virginia.

Mr. ROWELL. Does the gentleman know that this bill only proposes to authorize the making of a survey?

Mr. KILGORE. I know that, but Congress has no right to go into Virginia to make a survey without the consent of the State.

Mr. ROWELL. Does not Congress go into the different States and make surveys and build roads to soldiers' cemeteries?

make surveys and build roads to soldiers' cemetenes?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; and it violates the Constitution when it does it. Still, in such cases Congress is grading a road to property that belongs to the Federal Government, and generally through its own reservation. That makes a difference. Under all such circumstances the work is done on Government property, that is, property which has been already conceded to the Government of the United States by the State in which it is situated.

Mr. ROWELL. The acts of the Legislature of Virginia, to which the

Mr. ROWELL. The acts of the Legislature of Virginia, to which the gentleman has referred, are public acts of which everybody is bound to take notice.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, sir, I think they ought to go on record here, and that they ought to appear as the inducement for Congress to act in Now, I am not unwilling to consent that this appropriation shall be made, or that this bill shall pass, if it is put in a shape to make it acceptable so that the record will be complete and that there can be no question whatever of the authority of Congress to go into the State to make this survey.

Then there is another amendment that I want to put in the bill. Ido not know whether the friends of this bill would be willing to have it recommitted so that a full report may be made, as I suggest, showing all the facts, but I think that ought to be done. I do not even know whether those laws of Virginia are still in force or not.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If the gentleman will allow me, he will find that there was an act passed by the Legislature of Virginia at the last session of the General Assembly entitled "An act to incorporate the Mount Vernon Avenue Association." That act was approved February 18, 1888, and only a few days after that the Legislature adjourned, and there has been no session of the General Assembly of Virginia since that time

Mr. KILGORE. I assume that that is so, even without the gentleman's statement

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then followed a joint resolution transferring a certain claim of the State of Virginia against the Government of the United States to the Mount Vernon Association, a corporation chartered by the State of Virginia, which act was approved March 5, 1888, in the very dying hours of that Assembly.

Mr. KILGORE. Those acts are still in force?

Mr. O'FERRALL.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes, sir; they are still in force. The whole State of Virginia is greatly interested in the passage of this bill by reason of the love they bear to the Father of his Country, and for many other reasons.

Mr. ROWELL. We do not want to put it on record that we pass this bill with a view to the fact that we are going to pay that old claim of Virginia, because that would raise a new question.

Mr. KILGORE. That suggests another objection that I was about to make. The attitude of that matter, as I understand it, is this. By those who advocate the claim of Virginia it is contended that that money was advanced to the Government of the United States as a loan. Those who take the other side of the question contend that it was a donation to the Government of the United States, made for the purpose of constructing public buildings in this city and thereby enhancing the value of property in Virginia and in Maryland, for Maryland also made a contribution of a similar character, and it has been and also made a contribution of a similar character, and it has been contended all along for a hundred years that the Government of the United States is not responsible for that money as a debt.

Now, if you get in here a donation of this debt by the State of Virginia to the Mount Vernon Avenue Association, there then comes in an appeal to patriotism in this matter. It can then be said, when Congress is asked to recognize this debt, "This money does not go to the State of Virginia but is to be expended as much for the interests of State of Virginia, but is to be expended as much for the interests of Washington as for those of that State; it is to be applied to the construction of an avenue to Mount Vernon." Thus there will be an additional argument in favor of the payment of a claim for which I think the Government of the United States is not liable. That is the difficulty about this matter. That is my objection to this proposition.

But that is not a very serious objection.

Mr. ROWELL. There might be serious objection if it were stated in this report that there was an inducement to pass this bill; but that being left out the objection does not count for much.

Mr. LEE. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me a moment I think I can explain this matter.

Mr. KILGORE. I have an amendment which I wish to submit; and while the gentleman is making his explanation the amendment can be prepared. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, it is very true that the State of Virginia chartered the Mount Vernon Avenue Association. But this proposition is an entirely independent one. It is very true that the organization perfected under that charter is interested, as I hope every citizen of this great land is interested, in seeing constructed a good road to Mount Vernon. But this proposition, as I understand, is in no way whatever connected with the Mount Vernon Avenue Association; and I hope the gentleman will separate the two propositions in his own mind. This is a Senate bill, passed, I believe, on the 22d of January last, authorizing the War Department to make a survey for a graded road to Mount Vernon. It is very true—and the friends of this enterprise do not wish to disguise anything—that we hope there will be a favorable report made by the engineer officer who may make this survey; and we trust in the next Congress to follow this measure up with a proposition that the Government shall construct a road from this city, the capital of the country, to Mount Vernon, the home of the founder of this nation.

This is a want that has long been felt. This road is greatly needed. The facilities for getting to Mount Vernon from this city, as gentlement are well laware are very inchessive.

are well aware, are very inadequate. Even if a railroad were added to the present arrangement of getting there by boat, this proposed road would still be necessary for the comfort and convenience of the thousands and hundreds of thousands of people who yearly visit the tomb of Washington. I should be sorry to think that in this year, the centennial of the first inauguration of the great President, the founder of this Government, it is necessary to make any special appeal for the building of such a road, which ought to have been built many years

It is true that the Government of the United States has not the legal title to Mount Vernon; but, sir, I think that Mount Vernon is looked upon as practically the property of the whole American people; and I am told by those who have charge of that property that there is never am told by those who have charge of that property that there is never a day of the three hundred and sixty-five in the year when some person from some section of this great country or the world at large, whether the means of reaching there be by steam-boat or otherwise, does not find his way to Mount Vernon to place upon the altar of that great patriot and statesman his votive offering. I think we all acknowledge that the world is better in having some such Mecca for its people to visit. The contemplation of the exalted character and the great services of Washington is enough to animate the rising generagreat services of washington is enough to animate the rising genera-tion to deeds of virtue. As this appropriation is so small in itself, and as this road is, as I have said, a matter not only of comfort but of ne-cessity to the people, I hope that my friend from Texas, when he un-derstands the question, will withdraw all objection and allow this Senate bill to pass. If it were earlier in the session, and we could amend the measure to suit my friend, I would be perfectly willing to accept his amendments; and I am not prepared to say that I will not do so anyhow. But he knows as well as I do that if we amend this bill now and send it back to the Senate it may be that the measure will be lost for this session.

Now all that this bill contemplates is simply a survey of this road. It does not commit the Government to anything. If in the next Congress the Representatives of the American people do not choose to construct this road, there will be no reason, in the passage of this bill now, why they do so. This measure makes no committal whatever. It will be the province of members of the next Congress to say whether they will construct this road. This measure is simply to help the good cause along, and it has no earthly connection, as I understand, with the Mount Vernon Avenue Association as organized by the Legislature of the State of Virginia. It is true that the parties who are the incorporators of that association are interested in getting this road; and the object of organizing the association was that they might come before Congress with something tangible, as they thought, by which the means of constructing the road could be obtained. If this were a road looking merely to the benefit of any particular section or locality, I could very well understand why gentlemen should talk about the State of Virginia or any other State through which the road may pass.

But when we look at it from a national standpoint and consider that every man, woman, and child in this country and all who admire patriotism and true virtue all over the world are interested, I think we had better divest it of all State or party considerations and deal with the question from a liberal, national, and a very broad standpoint. I hope therefore the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virinia a question for my own information.

Mr. LEE. Certainly.
Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not investigated the question—perhaps
I should have done so—but is the Government of the United States to construct this road and own it after its construction?

Mr. LEE. That will depend upon the bill that passes Congress here-

Mr. O'FERRALL. This does not provide for the construction of the road; only for the survey.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But who are the incorporators?

Mr. LEE. There are no incorporators.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood the gentleman to speak of incorporators.
Mr. LEE. The incorporators have nothing to do with this Senate

Mr. RICHARDSON. What I want to get at is this: Is it proposed to have an incorporated company to own this road after its construction by the United States?

Mr. LEE. The first project, as I have said, was this charter granted by the State of Virginia to this Mount Vernon Avenue Association; ut this is a separate proposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it contemplated to be a free road?

Mr. LEE. A free road. Mr. RICHARDSON. Without toll-gates?

Mr. LEE. Without toll-gates.

Mr. O'FERRALL. It is to be a national highway for the use of the public without charge.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But to be constructed by the United States?

Mr. LEE. If Congress so orders. This bill simply provides for the

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I think the statement made by my friend from Virginia rather supports my view of it and is against the passage of the bill. My objection to it is that they propose by this bill to have Congress consent to send an agent of the Government there to make a survey of a proposed road without any authority from the State of Virginia. That, in my opinion, ought not to be done. If gentlemen are willing and can consent to that arrangement I am free to say that I can not give my assent to it. It has been suggested here that the act of the Virginia Legislature is a sufficient warrant.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a

Mr. KILGORE. Certainly.
Mr. O'FERRALL. Could anybody object except the land-owners upon whose lands the engineers might go to construct the road? They could not go there with arms in their hands, and, acting under authority of an act of Congress, the State of Virginia could not object to their going through the State; so that it would be only the land-owners, who might regard them as trespassers, who would have the right

Mr. KILGORE. I am assuming that the State will not only consent to have them go there and make the survey, but that it is anxious for the construction of the road. My point is that Congress has no authority to go there and interfere with Virginia's soil without that State's consent. If Virginia is willing, let the consent be given in the proper manner; but without that consent, even though the State may be willing, as gentlemen assert, I can not give my consent to support such a measure.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me ask the gentleman if the Government of the United States asks permission of the State of Texas to send its surveyors, in the scientific department of the Government, to survey and make topographic maps of the country?

Mr. KILGORE. But that is not for improvement. They never survey except to make topographic charts.

Mr. ROWELL. But does the Government ask permission of the State to do that?

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; for, as I have said, that is not for an improvement.

Mr. ROWELL. This is no more an improvement than that. This act only proposes a linear survey.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, a survey, but for the purpose of an improvement, to construct a highway.

Mr. ROWELL. Does the Government ask permission of the State of Texas to survey a road to a national cemetery?

Mr. KILGORE. No; because that is through property already owned by the Government.

Mr. HEARD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the course of this road as projected would locate it partly upon a Government reservation.

Mr. KILGORE. So I understand; the Arlington Cemetery. Mr. HEARD. And hence it would be necessary to have authority from the Government to survey that, if there were any consent to be acquired. It would, of course, be impliedly given by authorizing the survey under the Government officers; but, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] has said, there could be no objection by any-body except the people whose lands in Virginia were trespassed upon, and they could protect themselves under the laws of the State by invoking the authority of the State courts.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that; but that is not the point. And as to the question of historical ground, which has been suggested by one gentleman in the course of this discussion, there is scarcely a spot in Virginia that is not historical.

Mr. O'FERRALL. That is true, and I thank the gentleman for the statement

Mr. KILGORE. For instance, all over the State of Virginia there are historical spots which have made the State famous, and on the same theory as that advocated here we might go into the State and undertake to construct an avenue from the foot of this bridge to the Wilderness, to Appomattox, to Hanover Court-House, to Richmond, and Cold Harbor, and a thousand other places in the State; and Virginia, if this doctrine prevails, would soon be entirely in the possession of the Gov-ernment of the United States for national highways.

Mr. LEE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we have already constructed a road from Richmond 5 or 7 miles to the cemetery at Cold

Mr. KILGORE. Who did that?

Mr. LEE. The Government of the United States.
Mr. KILGORE. By the consent of the State of Virginia? I do not know that they had any formal consent.

Mr. KILGORE. It looks as if the State of Virginia was ready to surrender everything to the United States for the purpose of getting money. Now, the balance of us live a long way from here, but it may extend to South Carolina and on to Texas after awhile.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That would be time for my friend to objectwhen it gets to South Carolina and to Texas.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to resist the camel before he gets his nose into the bag

Mr. HEMPHILL. Have you an amendment?
Mr. KILGORE. I have an amendment.
Mr. LEE. Will my friend allow me to make a suggestion to him? He can make this objection when it comes up at the next Congress. He is a member of the next House.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh; but then they will come in with it in the sundry civil bill and make the appropriation on the ground that it is to carry out and complete a work already begun.

Several Members. Oh, no.

Mr. LEE. This is simply to send out surveyors to make the survey.

I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if he has an amendment I will accept it rather than have the bill endangered; but I hope he will not insist on his amendment, as it would have to go back to the Senate, which would jeopardize the bill, this being a Senate bill which has already passed.

Mr. KILGORE. Besides, this is largely in the interest of the owners of the property along the route. I know it is a patriotic purpose to have this road made to Mount Vernon. I concede everything said by my friend from Virginia, and that the people ought to be patriotic. But then they ought to be just at the same time. They ought to encourage that feeling of patriotism; but you see my folks are down in Texas, and few of them are able to pay railroad fare to come here and see these interesting things

Mr. LEE. There are a great many Texans here who can go and see these things at Mount Vernon. Mr. KILGORE. There are some here who have got offices. I desire to offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows: That nothing herein shall be construed to bind the Government of the United States to pay for any portion of the right of way for the avenue contemplated in this act.

Mr. LEE. I will accept the amendment rather than have the bill defeated.

Mr. KILGORE. But I want to make another statement. This will go back to the Senate, and if they refuse to agree to this amendment then there will be a conference committee, and the report of the committee will be a privileged report after they have dropped the amendment out of the bill. Now, I want to know of my friend if they will accept this amendment in good faith and let it remain there.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no purpose to do anything but what is in good faith; but I would not desire to bind myself as to what shall be done with this amendment afterwards. I do not know what we would do in committee of conference; but I want to say as far as I am concerned, speaking for myself only, that I have no objection to the amendment. I do not think it is necessary, but I have no objection to it.

Mr. LEE. I hope my friend will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. KILGORE. Are you willing to take it?

Mr. LEE. I am not willing to take it, but will take it rather than se the bill. It is not germane, it seems to me, to this bill. This bill best not bind the Government to anything. It does not propose to lose the bill. does not bind the Government to anything. bind the Government in the slightest way.

Mr. KILGORE. I must disagree with that statement. It is a beginning. It does not bind the Government absolutely to begin the work, but if it does begin a million of money will have to be expended hereafter to pay for the right of way. It commits the Government to go forward after the money has been expended in the survey to perfect the work. Of course the engineer is going to find that it is entirely feasible to construct an avenue.

Mr. LEE. If the gentleman insists upon the amendment I will accept it; but I again express the hope that he will withdraw it.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to accommodate my friend; but I think the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. LEE. I would ask more for my people than I would ask for myself, but I think this is irrelevant and unnecessary and that it should not be adopted.

Mr. KILGORE. I shall have to insist upon the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Division. I have no disposition to ruin the bill at all; but I do not see any necessity, or any use, or any sense of tacking on a bill of this kind such an amendment as that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SECTION 555, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 11693) to amend section 555, Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 555 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America relating to the District of Columbia, be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out the word "nine" and inserting the word "fitteen" in lieu thereof, so that the same shall read: "The stock, property, and concerns of such company shall be managed by not less than three or more than fifteen trustees, who shall respectively be stockholders, and a majority citizens of the District, and shall, exe-pt the first year, be annually elected by the stockholders, at such time and place as shall be determined by the by-laws of the company."

DEPOSITS BY INSURANCE COMPANIES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 12137) relating to the deposit of securities by insurance companies.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, cic., That it shall be lawful for the Treasurer of the United States to receive from any insurance company incorporated under the laws in force in the District of Columbia a deposit of such securities as shall be necessary to enable such company to transact business in any part of the United States under the laws of such States, respectively, and to certify to the receipt thereof, which said securities shall be held by the Treasurer so long as such company shall desire to transact business in the States requiring such deposit; but the company making the deposit shall be at liberty to receive the dividends or interest upon such securities, and whenever any such company shall desire to discontinue its business in said States, and shall satisfy the Treasurer that such deposit is no longer required of it by the laws thereof, it shall be entitled to a return of the said securities so deposited by it.

The report (by Mr. HEMPHILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12137) relating to deposit of securities by insurance companies, having had the same under careful consideration, report as follows:

The passage of this bill is desired to enable insurance companies existing and doing business with the home office in the District of Columbia to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States such securities as are required by the laws of the several States in which they seek to do business to be deposited with some public officer for the protection of the policy-holders of said companies.

The laws of many of the States select the insurance department as the depository for such securities; as there is no such department in the District of Columbia, and no treasurer, it seems proper that the Treasurer of the United States should, as the custodian of the funds of the District of Columbia, be designated as the proper official to carry out the purposes of this bill.

The commissioners of the District recommend the passage of the bill. It confers general and not special privileges.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that this is to enable insurance companies to operate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir. The object of the bill is this: There is no insurance department here as there is in most of the States, and many of the States require that before a foreign company can do business it shall have a certain amount of securities deposited with the proper public officials at its home as a protection to the policy-holders. It was thought, therefore, that a law ought to be passed allowing in-surance companies that are chartered in the District of Columbia to deposit their money or securities for this purpose with the Treasurer of the United States, in order that they may be able to comply with the laws of States in which they may desire to do business.

Mr. KILGORE. Will it prevent them from making deposits in the States in which such deposits are required?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no. It does not undertake to abrogate any State law, but simply to put the companies in a position to comply with the State laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TITLE TO SQUARE SOUTH OF SQUARE 1092, WASHINGTON.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 11817) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, in the District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092 in the city of Washington, District aforesaid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Private Calendar. Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the right, title, and interest, whether legal or equitable, of the United States of America in and to all that lot or parcel of ground situate in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and known on the ground plan of the said city as square south of square numbered 1092, be, and the same hereby is, granted to and vested in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, in the said District, and to their successors forever.

The report (by Mr. ATKINSON) was read, as follows:

The committee to whom this bill was referred sent the same to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who requested the United States attorney for the District of Columbia and Col. John M. Wilson, United States Army, in charge of public buildings and grounds, to examine the bill and to report their opinion thereon. The commissioners have returned the bill with the recommendation that it pass, which recommendation is based upon the accompanying reports of the said District attorney and Colonel Wilson.

This bill is framed to vest all of the title of the United States to square south of square 1992, in the city of Washington, in the vestry of Christ Church, District of Columbia, who are, by mesne conveyance, purchasers from the original proprietors of this whole square—George Walker and William Young. The Iollowing are extracts from the District attorney's report:

"All the proprietors of the lands upon which the city of Washington was laid out, with few exceptions, conveyed their holdings to two trustees, Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, upon trusts, that a 'Federal city' should be laid out upon them. The portion of the deed which affects the present inquiry provides for an equal division of all the building squares between the original proprietors and the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government, the parts falling to the commissioners on the division to be sold and the proceeds applied to the crection of the public buildings.

"George Walker and William Young's heirs were the proprietors of tracts adjoining each other, and part of each of these tracts, in unequal proportions, were included within the limits of this square.

"The individual account of Walker with the commissioners (page 185) shows that he is charged with lots 2 and 3 in this square, amounting to 37,6211 square feet; his original holding in the square was 14,7272 square feet, and of this transaction is made up in favor of the commissioners by allowances from his interest in other squares.

"The individual account of William Young's heirs with the commissioners shows (page 215) that they are charged with hots 2 and 3 in this square, containing 23,142; square feet; their original holding was 48,036 square feet, of which the commissioners were entitled to one-half, and the difference in his favor on their interest in other squares.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ssed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 11701) for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District of Columbia. The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Private Calendar. Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That building and mutual loan associations within the District of Columbia shall be exempt from all taxation upon mortgages or other securities held by them for moneys loaned to their own members and secured upon real estate in said District under the existing laws imposing taxes in said District and under such future laws imposing taxes therein as may be enacted, unless otherwise specifically provided therein: Provided, however, That all real estate owned by such associations shall be subject to the same rates of taxation as other real estate in said District.

The report (by Mr. HEMPHILL) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. HEMPHILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred House bill 11701, for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District, respectfully report that they have carefully considered the bill, and are of opinion that its provisions are reasonable and just. Under the construction of existing law the shares of stock of such associations in the District are taxable in the hands of shareholders as personal property; mortgages held by such associations are taxable as such in their hands, and of course the real estate securing such mortgages are taxable in the hands of the borrowing members. Thus it may frequently happen that the same property, under different forms, may have to pay three distinct taxes. Under a general law applicable to the District personal property to the extent of $500 is exempt from taxation, and the effect of the construction of existing law is to compel the poorer classes, who for the most part invest in these associations, to pay a tax where their more fortunate neighbors pay none. Savings-banks are not taxed on their deposits, and there seems to be no reason why these associations should not be put on the same footing. In many of the States such associations have been exempted from taxation on their deposits paid in for investment for the purpose of encouraging such enterprises, thus enabling persons of small incomes to lay up a small sum per month, and thus in time become real-estate owners, to the benefit of the community generally. generally.

Your committee report the bill back to the House and recommend that it do

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 12292) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 861, and 862, Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 12292) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the jury law in the District of Columbia, submit the following report:
According to existing law, jurors in the District of Columbia serve for a term of three months. This local provision is unusual and oppressive and results in the excusing of the better class of men from jury service. The bill in question is designed to remedy this evil. It was referred by this committee to the commissioners of the District, who, in turn, referred it to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The chief-justice of this court says:

"Inclosed find a copy of the bill relating to the jury system of the District.
We invited the attention of the Bar Association to the matter, and its committee, after examination, has prepared a substitute, of which I inclose a copy. The judges of this court, or all who are able to do so, have examined the substitute and, I am instructed to say, indorse it, and recommend its adoption and enactment into a law."

This substitute reduces the term of service to one month and is recommended, as has been seen, by the bench, the bar, and District commissioners. The committee offer this substitute in lieu of the bill, with the recommendation that it to secure the maintenance of public order during the inauguration ceremonies of 1889, and for other purposes.

Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

This bill appropriates $8,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the commissioners to take such additional precautions and to employ such additional police force as may be rendered necessary to maintain good order during the coming inauguration ceremonies.

At this time the city of Washington will probably be very much crowded, and your committee are of opinion that every facility should be accorded the authorities to maintain order and to protect the public generally. They report the bill back to the House and recommend that it pass.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that this bill proposes to confer a very broad power on the commissioners of this bill proposes to confer a very broad power on the commissioners of the District. I do not know that this power is defined in the bill, which simply provides generally for the making of certain regulations by the commissioners, the violation of which is to subject the offender to very heavy penalties. Now these inaugurations occur periodic-ally, every four years. My experience does not relate to more than one of them, that which occurred four years ago. I do not recollect on that occasion any disorder or disturbance—anything so extraordinary as to call for a measure conferring special power upon the commissioners. It may sometimes happen that the commissioners of the District are not as great statesmen as members of Congress, and they might make very foolish regulations.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill provides only for temporary regula-tions to secure order in the city. My friend will remember that on the last occasion, of which he speaks, we inaugurated a Democrat; this time we are going to inaugurate a Republican; and when a Republican is inaugurated it may require a good deal more to keep people in order. [Laughter,]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Do you expect the heavens to be draped in mourning on that occasion? A MEMBER. Was similar power conferred on the commissioners four

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not remember precisely, but I think so. Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Did that authority terminate with that inauguration? Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes; the power operates only for a few days during which special regulations may be necessary.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, as these penalties will apply only to Republicans, I do not make any objection.

Mr. BREWER. We do not expect there will be any trouble with the Republicans

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to inquire of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Hemphill] whether the commissioners of the District of Columbia have not already the power to make regulations of this kind on all such occasions? Why is it necessary to give them special and additional power when an inauguration is approaching?

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is an occasion when there will be an unusual number of people coming into the city; and it may be necessary to have regulations which are not required when there is only the ordinary number of citizens here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Should not these commissioners of the District

Mr. RICHARDSON. Should not these commissioners of the District of Columbia have this power permanently? Why is it necessary to pass a temporary measure of this character? I will ask the gentleman further, why is it necessary to give the commissioners power to regulate the charges of common carriers or those who may engage in the carrying of passengers during the time referred to? Have not the commissioners permanently the power to make such regulations? If not, it seems to me that this power ought to be given to them in some permanent form, and that it should not be necessary to pass this tempo-manent form, and that it should not be necessary to pass this temporary measure.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It has been thought necessary to endow the commissioners with authority to regulate the fares on public conveyances.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Have they not that power now?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No doubt there are some such regulations in force; but whether they emanate from the commissioners I am not

Mr. RICHARDSON. What other power would there be to regulate

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, heretofore this city has been under the government of a city council, the corporation of the city of Washington, an assembly of the District of Columbia, and various other legislative bodies, which may have adopted regulations on this subject. I am not informed as to that matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of my inquiry is, why not give the commissioners a permanent power in this respect?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That probably would have been better. But this bill has been passed by the Senate and has come over to us. There seemed to be a necessity for providing for the emergency which will soon be upon us; and we did not go into the general subject of the regulation of these matters for all time.

Mr. KILGORE. Now I would like to cross-examine the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL]. Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well.
Mr. KILGORE. I understand that this bill makes an appropriation to pay for additional police force on the occasion referred to. Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. Does not the District of Columbia bear any of these expenses

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes; the District must bear half the expense. Mr. KILGORE. Has not the District of Columbia ample means to Mr. KILGORE. Has not the District of Columbia ample means to employ this force without coming to Congress for this appropriation?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The District government can not expend any money at all unless it is appropriated by Congress; it must be specifically appropriated by our action here.

Mr. KILGORE. I believe this bill proposes to appropriate $8,000?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Eight thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary. I will state that the expectation is that they will put a rope down the avenue so as to keep the line of march separate and distinct, and to prevent accidents to the people separate and distinct, and to prevent accidents to the people.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand it gives the power to regulate the hire of carriages

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. KILGORE. That is already regulated and the maximum fixed.
I would not favor the raising of the maximum, but if there was a proposition to reduce it I should like to see it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we can trust the commissioners on that

Mr. KILGORE. As this is a Republican outbreak I suppose we can

Such names shall be put in said box at such times as the public convenience and the necessities of the case may require; and should said names be exhausted by drawing from said box at a time when said supreme court in general term is not in session, and the officers or persons to make lists of jurors are from any cause not in existence or capable of acting, the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall act as such officers or persons for the time being, with respect to jurors for said police court; and at least twenty-six names shall be drawn at any given time for service on the jury at the said police court.

The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

Amend the bill as follows: In section 1, line 2, after the word "original," insert "and exclusive." Strike from section 1 of the bill, on lines 2, 3, 4, the words "and in which, under the law, a person accused of offense is entitled to a trial by jury, the," and insert the words "trial shall be by jury, which." Make section 4 of the bill section 7. Make section 5 of the bill section 8. Mr. HEMPHILL. There are some objections to this bill, and I ask by unanimous consent that it be passed over for the present.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PAWNBROKERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12154) to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia. The bill was read, as follows:

to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be the enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia may from time to time grant licenses, under their hands and seal, to such persons as shall produce to them satisfactory evidence of their good character, to exercise or carry on the business of a pawnbroker, which license shall designate the building in which said person shall carry on said business; and no person shall exercise or carry on the business of a pawnbroker without being duly licensed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, nor in any other building than the one designated in said license, except by the consent in writing of the said commissioners, under the penalty of $50 for each day he or she shall exercise or carry on said business without such license, or in any other building than the one so designated, except by the consent of the commissioners as aforesaid. Any person, corporation, member, or members of a corporation or firm who loans money on deposit or pledge on personal property, or other valuable thing, other than securities or printed evidences of indebtedness, or who deals in the purchasing of personal property or other valuable thing, other than securities or printed evidences of indebtedness, or who deals in the purchasing of personal property or other valuable thing on condition of selling the same back again at a stipulated price, is hereby declared and defined to be apawnbroker.

SEC. 2. That every person receiving such license shall pay therefor the sum of $100 for the use of the District each and every year on payment of the same sum, and upon performance of the other conditions herein contained.

SEC. 5. That every pawnbroker shall, at the time of each loan, deliver to the person pawning or pledging any goods, article, or thing a memorandum or note, signed by him or her, containing the substance of the entry required to be made in his or her book by the last preceding section; and no charge shall be made or received by any pawnbroker for any such entry, memorandum, or

SEC. 6. SEC, 8. That no pawnbroker shall sell any pawn or pledge until the same shall have remained one year in his or her possession, unless by consent in writing of the pawner; and all such sales shall be made at public auction and not otherwise, and shall be made or conducted by such auctioneers as shall be designated and approved of for that purpose by the commissioners of the District of Columbia. trict of Columbia

Sec. 10. That the surplus money, if any arising from any such sale, after deducting the amount of the loan, the interest then due on the same, and the expenses of the advertisement and sale, shall be paid over by the pawnbroker to the person who would be entitled to redeem the pledge in case no such sale had taken place.

Sec. 14. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. O'NEILLI, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman from South Caro-

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to state the features of this bill which change existing law.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Grout] for that purpose.

Mr. GROUT. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, it changes the rate of interest from 60 per cent. per annum to 24 per cent. on sums of $25 and less; and to 12 per cent. on all sums over $25. Then it provides for an extension of the time for the redemption of the pawn, which is now three months-that is, the pawnbroker under the law can sell the pawn after three months.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It requires him to keep the pawn. Mr. GROUT. It requires him to keep the article which has been pawned. Another feature of this bill is it provides for refunding to the pawnor of any surplus there may be after debt and interest and all expenses have been paid upon the sale of the pawn. The present law makes no such provision.

Another feature of the bill is the pawnbroker is required to file with the commissioners of the District his bond with two or more sufficient sureties in the sum of $3,000 conditioned for the refunding of this money and the performance of all the other provisions of the act.

It further provides if any pawnor be aggrieved on account of any transaction with any pawnbroker he may have his action on this bond after he has obtained leave from the court to do so.

These are the main provisions of the bill. There are other minor matters

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it required in all instances that contracts with pawnbrokers shall be made in writing?

Mr. GROUT. The bill requires a careful description of the person pawning an article, as will be seen by reference to the fourth section, so that track may be kept of the person who brings any articles to be pawned, as it is known articles are brought which are secured by larceny

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why not in section 7 divide the rate into monthly interests?

Mr. GROUT. It is now monthly.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. But what is the object in providing in the bill this high rate of interest?

Mr. GROUT. It is fixed at a monthly rate not to exceed 2 per cent. Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I understand that; but in the bill you say that the amount shall not exceed 24 per cent. per annum. Now, would it not be better to fix it at 2 per cent. per month, which would amount to the same thing, so that if a man wanted a loan for only a short time, while the pawnbroker might want him to take it for the whole year and pay the 24 per cent., he would have the privilege of the shorter period?

Mr. GROUT. Under the law, the pawnbroker would not be allowed to take more than 2 per cent. per month for any period.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is exactly the point. Suppose he says he will lend it for the entire year, so that he may enforce the payment of the 24 per cent.? Mr. GROUT. He wou He would not be permitted to do that under the law, and he could only charge for the loan at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum for the time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, I will leave the question to you entlemen, because you are more familiar with this business than I am. [Laughter.

I would like to ask the gentleman what is the meaning of section 12, which provides

That no pawnbroker shall, under any pretense whatever, purchase or buy any second-hand furniture, metals, or clothes, or any other article or thing what-ever offered to him or her as a pawn or pledge, except at sale by public auc-tion, as hereinfore provided.

Mr. GROUT. Well, that is to provide that under the guise of a business transaction the pawnbroker would not be able to pretend that there was an actual sale to him, and in order that he may not evade the provisions of the law. I think the object is quite apparent.

If there be no further inquiry or discussion I hope the bill will be put upon its third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11811) to amend "An act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia," which was received by the President August 10, A. D. 1888, and became a law without his approval, and I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the bill being on the Private Calendar.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia" be, and the same hereby is, amended by substituting, after the words "and along High street, in Georgetown, to the Tennallytown road," the words "and thence along and in said road, but outside the improved limits thereof," for the words "but wholly outside the limits of said road and along the side of the said road."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to know if there is a copy of the original act which this proposes to amend in the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is not.

Mr. ROWELL. It will be found in the session laws of the last session. Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge Mr. HEMPHILL. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois, who is familiar with it, to state the changes the bill proposes.

Mr. ROWELL. At the last session of Congress a charter was granted incorporating the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company, and authorizing the building of a street railway-an electric railwayfrom Georgetown to Tennallytown.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has a copy of that act. Mr. ROWELL. Mr. ROWELL. No, sir; it is to be found in the session laws. That bill went through the House, and an amendment was put on in the House requiring the road to be built entirely outside of the existing turnpike road and on private property.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Outside of the street leading to Ten-nallytown?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir; entirely outside of the street. When the company was organized the Tennallytown people, the small owners, men who could subscribe to, say, a hundred dollars worth of the stock, quite a large number of them, subscribed for the entire stock, and the large landowners along the line of the road did not succeed in getting any of it. There was no power to condemn the land, and the larger holders are unwilling to grant the right of way because of not being able to get any of the stock. They lost the opportunity of building the road themselves, although they were prepared for it, and this act simply means an amendment of the charter to enable the company to build it upon the right of way of the present road, but entirely outside of the improved limits.

There is, I will state, a macadamized road from Georgetown to Tennallytown, 30 feet of which is improved; but there are 14 feet on either side not improved, extending along the entire road; and this amendment gives the railroad company the right to construct its road on the outside of the macadamized road, but within this 14-foot limit, by reason of the fact, as I have stated, that the large land-owners will not grant the right of way for the road on their lands outside of the line of the turnpike, because they did not get the stock; and there being no power to condemn under the charter, they refuse to sell the right of way. It would be much better to have it on this proposed line. The original bill in the House reported it in this way, but it was amended somewhat hastily or carelessly, and they have been prevented from building the road by reason of the wording of that amendment and the results which followed from it.

Mr. KILGORE. Is it contemplated to put it on the line of the high-

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir; but outside of the improved portion of the road, the traveled part. As I have said, there are 30 feet of the road macadamized and 14 feet on either side unimproved, but in the right of way, and the object of this amendment is to let them occupy the side of the road within the 14-foot limit to build their track.

Mr. KILGORE. Would not the land-owners have the same right to resist that?

Mr. ROWELL. No; it belongs to the public.

Mr. KILGORE. But if the public ceases to use it as a right of way it would revert to the land-owners. That is the rule.

Mr. ROWELL. Not the way the land is owned here. District of Columbia made this passage through the land the line became public property.

Mr. KILGORE. Is this road to be run by steam?

Mr. ROWELL. No, an electric road; and in the organization of this company the people who live in that section of Tennallytown, as I have said, took the stock, the small property-owners, in hundred-dollar shares. There is quite a large settlement or village in that vicinity, and a good many people who do business in town live there, and want to secure the building of the road so as to enjoy the facilities that it will afford. They have subscribed, as I have said, in small lots for the stock, and are now only waiting for this amendment of the original act

Mr. KILGORE. Would not the effect be to destroy the highway entirely?

Mr. ROWELL. Oh, no; it would help it. This is an electric road. Mr. KILGORE. But it occupies the same space as a horse road.

But it does not occupy the traveling space that is Mr. ROWELL. used by other vehicles as a horse road does in a city.

Mr. KILGORE. Is this to be built by a corporation able to build it?

Mr. ROWELL. The stock is already subscribed for insmall shares. Mr. KILGORE. Are they able to pay for the right of way?

Mr. HEARD. They can not obtain the right of way.

Mr. KILGORE. But you can amend the law so that they can.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me a ques-

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir, Mr. HEARD. Would you be in favor of vesting in any private corporation the power of eminent domain to take a right of way through these streets

Mr. KILGORE. They always have had the use of the streets.

Mr. ROWELL. In a street railroad you want it to be accessible to the street. If you put it beyond the 14 feet, and into private land, you destroy the accessibility of the road for the people.

Mr. KILGORE. How much space is there in the public highway? Mr. ROWELL. There are 30 feet macadamized and 14 feet more unimproved.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Has any protest been made against it? Mr. ROWELL. No, sir. On the contrary, it has been petitioned

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman if this will not be run by electricity alongside of a frequented road?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With electricity as the propelling power?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. RICHARDSON. Then does the gentleman not believe that they will destroy the utility of the macadamized road for other per-

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. By the noise incident to running a car by electricity?

Mr. ROWELL. There is not as much noise in running a car by electricity as there is in running a car by horse power.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he has seen the Eckington and Soldiers' Home road?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know the name of the road. I have seen the car that runs to Seventh street.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This will be very much the same as that road. Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think this bill ought to pass, and I shall have to make the point of no quorum upon it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee not to do that. It is an exceedingly important measure for those people out there. They have petitioned for it unanimously. Not only the poor people, but people who have property out there. It is only a right which has been given to other people who want to build electric railways; and this is to enable them to have a road going out there. There has not been a single objection by a single individual in the District or outside of it along that road or elsewhere to granting this right. There have been no petitions against it from any source whatever; we have a large number of petitions favoring it, and I know from the amount of information I have upon the subject that the people are exceedingly anxious that the road should be constructed. I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee not to interpose an objection here when it meets with the unanimous approval of the people who are most interested in it, and when it is not only with their consent but by their de-

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee, where it was intended to run the road in the original act.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It was intended by the original bill to run this road upon the street. It was not provided as we drew it up originally that it should run along the unimproved portion of the road; but when it came to the House it was amended so as to require them to go beyond the limits of the road entirely. The committee were not as well posted as they might have been, and we did not know that there was this 14 feet of unimproved way on either side of the macadamized road, which is 30 feet. There are 44 feet for the use of the people who use vehicles, after this is taken off, for the use of those who have vehicles, and this will be for the benefit of those who do not own their own vehicles, but yet who require from business or other necessity to come to Washington or to go to Tennallytown.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not see it any other way than that this electric road will destroy the utility of the public driving road, and I think it is a matter of too much importance to let this bill pass without further consideration.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he thinks the people along there would not have objected if his view were correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It may be that the people right along the road might not object, but people beyond it who are not interested in its construction might object

Mr. ROWELL. Very largely the stock is taken by people beyond it, and the petitions are signed by persons living far beyond it.

Mr. BREWER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee as to every street in this city where we have street cars that if his suggestion were correct the street would be destroyed as a driveway, but we find from experience and observation that that is not the case. Take Pennsylvania avenue, on which there is a double railroad track, and F street, you find that there is a great deal of driving on those streets, and that the railway does not destroy the utility of the street for driving purposes.

Mr. KILGORE. This roadway, I understand, leads finally into the country?

Mr. BREWER. It leads 2 or 3 miles from Georgetown-

Mr. KILGORE. But finally it goes out into the country and connects with a country road?

Mr. BREWER. It leads out to Tennallytown, which is a village with population of perhaps eight hundred or a thousand.

Mr. KILGORE. And that road is traveled by country people coming into town with their produce?

Mr. BREWER. Oh, yes; it is a traveled road.
Mr. KILGORE. The people along the line of this road would naturally favor it because it will probably improve their property, but people in the country beyond, who drive on that road and who have teams that are not accustomed to railroads, would probably object to it of they knew what was going on.

Mr. BREWER. I will state to the gentleman that we have names on the petitions in favor of this road for a mile or two miles beyond Tennallytown, even out to the end of the District.

Mr. KILGORE. You mean to the end of the contemplated railroad? Mr. BREWER. No, I mean to the limit of the District, as far as our jurisdiction extends

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I suppose they expect to have it extended out there in time. I must say that I feel about this bill just as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] does.

Mr. ATKINSON. Let me suggest to the gentleman, that besides this road there are a number of other roads that are not occupied by street railroads and that can be used by people who have teams that are not accustomed to the strange sight of an electric car moving along. Therefore, the gentleman's objection has no force. Any person living at Tennallytown can come to Washington by any one of several roads. He can come by way of Georgetown or he can come by Woodley Lane, and on neither course will be encounter any such difficulty. Besides, as has been stated, the people out there do not object to this road; on the contrary, they are very desirous of having it built, because they know that it will be an advantage, and they know that there are other roads that will enable them to come to town whenever they wish to do so without using this road at all.

Mr. ROWELL. I think General Drum is the president of this corporation. I know he is one of the leading parties interested in constructing the road.

Mr. FITCH. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether there is anything to be paid for the use of the street?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. There never is. Mr. FITCH. There is in New York.

Mr. ATKINSON. They pay the aldermen in New York for the

[Laughter.]

Mr. FITCH. Ah, that was formerly; but now we have a law which requires franchises of this kind to be put up at auction and sold, and the city to be paid for them and not the aldermen. The aldermen are serving out their terms for the transactions to which the gentleman re-

Mr. ROWELL. There is a provision in this bill that a certain portion of the gross receipts shall go into the District treasury.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, 4 per cent. goes into the District treasury. Mr. FITCH. But the charter is not put up at auction to be competed for? Nobody else has a chance to get it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Everybody has a chance to subscribe. Mr. FITCH. To subscribe for the stock of this company?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; and, as I have said, a large portion of the receipts goes into the treasury. Now, Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen insist that we can not go on with the bill, that is the end of it. The committee have no other interest in the matter than to serve the people out there who are deeply interested in this bill and who are unanimously in favor of the construction of this railroad. There is not a single objection from any source except from these gentlemen who seem to think that this road will destroy the public highway. The com-missioners of the District do not object to it, the citizens out there do missioners of the District do not object to it, the citizens out there do not object to it, and the people who are going to use the public road do not object. In fact, I believe they are unanimously in favor of it so far as we have been able to gather any information. Therefore, in the light of these facts, I appeal to these gentlemen to let the bill go through. I do not think that they will care to assume the responsibility of simply putting a stop to this measure without some further information than they seem to have on the subject. information than they seem to have on the subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman assumes too much when he says that everybody is in favor of this road, because I happen to know of objections coming from gentlemen who reside in the District of Columbia who are interested in that road and who travel over it. Therefore, when the gentleman says that nobody interposes objection—

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not say that. I said that the people concerned were unanimously in favor of the matter, so far as the committee had any information on the subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The passage of this bill would, in my opinion, work the total destruction of that road.

JURY TRIALS IN POLICE COURT.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill which a while ago was passed over for the time being—the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court of the District of Columbia, and for other

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has already been read. There are some amendments reported by the committee. If there be no objection, those amendments will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Some of those amendments are objected to; and we desire to amend them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the amendments will be reported in their order.

The first amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows: Insetion 1, line 4, after the word "original," insert the words "and exclusive;" and after the word "jurisdiction," in line 4, strike out the words "and in which under the law a person accused of any offense is entitled to a trial by jury, the," and insert "trial shall be by jury which;" so that the clause will read: "That in all causes of which the police court of the District of Columbia has original and exclusive jurisdiction, trial shall be by jury, which said jury shall consist of twelve persons," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

The next amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Insert the following as section 2:

"SEC. 2. That if upon the trial of any such cause as aforesaid in the said police court an exception be taken by or in behalf of the defendant to any ruling or instruction of the court on matter of law the same may be reduced to writing at the time, or it may be entered on the minutes of the judge and afterwards settled in such manner and within such time as may be provided by rule by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and then stated in writing in a bill of exceptions, with so much of the evidence as may be material to the question or questions raised, which said bill of exceptions shall be signed by the judge of the said police court. And if, upon the presentation to a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia of a verified petition setting forth the matter or matters so excepted to, such justice shall be of opinion that the same show probable error in any ruling or instruction of the said judge of the police court, the said justice shall allow a writ of error in the cause, which writ shall issue out of the said supreme court addressed to the said judge of the police court, and the said supreme court doressed to the said judge of the police court, and the said judge, as a return to such writ, shall thereupon send up the information or complaint filed in the cause and a copy of all the proceedings therein duly certified to the said supreme court, and the said supreme court, and the said supreme court shall proceed to hear the said cause in general term as other causes duly appealed thereto: Provided, however, That no such writ of error shall be allowed after one month from and after the signing of such bill of exceptions as aforesaid: And provided further, That the justice allowing such writ may stay execution of the judgment of said police court upon the entering by the plaintiff 'n error into a recognizance with sufficient surety, to be approved by such justice, for his appearanc

Mr. WHEELER. This bill has some very objectionable features; at least, in practical operation some of its features may become objectionable. I desire to say in explanation of my position in regard to this bill that to-night I have received my first intimation of its existence. Some members of the House who were prepared to oppose this bill or to offer amendments to it are absent to-night, not knowing that the bill would be brought up. I have been requested to examine the bill and point out the objections which my brief examination has enabled me to discover; and in the meager time I have had to devote to the examination of the bill I think that I find some provisions which should be modified or eliminated. I find that certain gentlemen are very strenuously advocating the passage of the bill. I see it stated in the report of the committee that the passage of the bill has been earnestly urged by the justices of the supreme court of the District, the assistant attorney for the District, and by the judge of the police court.

Now, there is no doubt in my mind that some bill on this subject is necessary. The decision of the supreme court last summer in reference to trials in the police court was of such a character as to impair the power of this court unless some bill be passed. But in preparing this bill to correct an evil which I admit exists I do not think the care has been taken which should be bestowed upon so important a matter. In the passage of any law concerning the trial of persons for their liberty, and in other respects affecting the rights of the people, placing the right of appeal in the hands of the officials of a court, particularly when the tenure of such officers is for life, great care should be taken to see that no constitutional or common-law right is infringed. This section provides the right of appeal in the following terms:

And if, upon the presentation to a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia of a verified petition setting forth the matter or matters so excepted to, such justice shall be of opinion that the same show probable error in any ruling or instruction of the said judge of the police court, the said justice shall allow a writ of error in the cause.

The defendant is deprived of the absolute right of appeal, and only given that right when a judge of the supreme court, after examination of the papers, concludes that a probable error in any ruling or instruc-tion of any judge of the police court has occurred in the trial.

It seems to me that the clause needs modification, or possibly it should be omitted, so that an absolute right of appeal shall remain.

Then it goes on to provide-

That the justice allowing such writ may stay execution of the judgment of said police court upon the entering by the plaintiff in error into a recognizance with sufficient surety, to be approved by such justice, for his appearance at the general term of the said supreme court then pending, or if no such general term be pending, then to the next general term, there to prosecute the said writ of error to effect and to abide by and perform the judgment of the said supreme court in the premises.

The defendant before the court may be under bond or he may have been confined in jail. If in jail, it is not clear but that he would be required to give a bond in order to secure the right of appeal.

It seems to me the proper course would be to refer this bill to the Judiciary Committee. It is a bill involving the most important rights of man and the dearest rights of a defendant on trial. And I do not think the bill will be jeopardized by referring it to the Judiciary Committee. In order to provide for speedy action that committee might be granted leave to report at any time. They might report it back immediately.

I feel very keenly the importance of this matter. The bill is earnestly urged by gentlemen for whom I have a very high regard, and it is just as earnestly opposed by gentlemen for whom I have equal regard.

have talked to the gentlemen on both sides to night.

The opponents of the bill only ask that the objectionable provisions of the measure be modified or omitted, and its advocates seem to be satisfied if the bill clearly provides that there shall be jurors in the police courts and specifies the manner in which they shall be drawn.

It seems to me that this can be done in a very brief bill which would be free from the numerous expressions in the measure now before us, which in their best aspect must be admitted to be of very doubtful construction.

It seems to me that there can be no necessity for two jury boxes, and the provision for taking jurymen from talesmen should be modified.

We must remember that when laws are passed that take from or in any way abridge the rights of the citizen and confer powers upon officers whose tenure of office is for life, those rights are very seldom regained by the people.

I am preparing amendments, which I can submit to the House in a few moments.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We might take a recess.
Mr. WHEELER. Have you no other bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Have you no other bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Not ready.

Mr. WHEELER. I dislike to endanger the passage of a bill of this importance, but it ought not to go through until it has been made to conform to the just system of jurisprudence. When the amendments to which I have referred have been prepared the bill can be taken up

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let it be passed over for the present. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REGULATION OF PHARMACY IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 12498) to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, itc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, not a registered pharmacist within the meaning of this act, to conduct any pharmacy in the District of Columbia, except as hereinafter provided.

act, to conduct any pharmacy in the District of Columbia, except as hereinafter provided.

The commissioners of pharmacy shall furnish the commissioners of the District of Columbia with a correct list of registered pharmacists in said District, and shall from time to time enter upon said list the names of persons newly registered. It shall be unlawful for the commissioners for said District of Columbia, or officers acting under their authority, to grant a license to conduct a pharmacy to any person whose name does not appear upon said list: Provided, however, That in case the proprietor or owner of any pharmacy, a registered pharmacist shall be employed, under whose supervision said pharmacy, as to manufacturing and dispensing medicines, shall be conducted, and the license granted to such proprietor or owner shall contain the name of the registered pharmacist thus employed, and in case of a change of registered pharmacists in any such pharmacy, the proprietor or owner thereof shall immediately inform the commissioners of pharmacy the name and address of the registered pharmacist newly employed.

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for the proprietor of any pharmacy to allow any person except a registered pharmacist to compound or dispense the prescriptions of physicians, or to retail or dispense poisons for medical use, except as an aid to and under the immediate supervision of a registered pharmacist. Any persons violating the provisions of this or the preceding section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100 for each and every such offense.

Bec. 3. That immediately after the passage of this act, and biennially thereafter, or as often as necessary, the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint three pharmacists and two physicians, all of whom shall have been residents of the District of Columbia for five years' practical experience in their respective professions, who shall be known and styled as commissioners of phar evidence of being twenty-one years of age, and having served not less than four years in a store or pharmacy where physicians' prescriptions were compounded and dispensed, or is a graduate of some respectable medical college or university.

SEC. 7. That all graduates in pharmacy having a diploma from an incorporated college or school of pharmacy that requires a practical experience in pharmacy of not less than four years before granting a diploma, and pharmacists possessing a certificate of registration from a legally constituted State board of pharmacy, provided the granting of said certificate was based upon an examination and a practical experience in pharmacy of not less than four years, shall be entitled to have their names registered as pharmacists by said commissioners of pharmacy.

SEC. 8. That the commissioners of pharmacy shall be entitled to demand and receive from each person whom they register as pharmacists, without examination, the sum of $3, and from each person whom they examine the sum of $30, and from each person whom they examine the sum of $40, and in case the examination of said person should prove defective and usatisfactory and his name not be registered, he shall be permitted to present himself for re-examination within any period not exceeding twelve months next thereafter, and no charge shall be made for such re-examination. The money received under the provisions of this section shall be applied to payment of such expenses as the commissioners may incur, not otherwise provided for, in executing the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That every registered pharmacist shall be held responsible for the quality of all drugs, chemicals, and medicines he may sell or dispense, with the exception of those sold in the original packages of the manufacturer, and also those known as "patent medicines;" and should he knowingly, intentionally, and fraudulently adulterate, or cause to be adulterated, such drugs, chemicals, or medical preparations, or should he knowingly manufacturer, and also those kn

SEC. 19. That to carry this act into effect there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,125 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for the year ending June 30, 1890, the further sum of $3,000, or so much of either or both of said sums as may be necessary, to be disbursed as provided in section 14 of this act.

Mr. GUENTHER. This, as I understand it, is simply a re-enactment of the present law with certain amendments?
Mr. HEMPHILL. That is correct.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. What are the amendments?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman that we have but a few minutes remaining to-night, and that it would take a considerable time to go over all of the amendments. The bill was prepared by the pharmacists here who asked for it, requesting that certain restrictions be thrown around the business, as you understand it is in all other cities. It was gone over very carefully by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Atkinson], who is himself a physician, and met his approval; and while the various members of the committee, outside of himself, do not know much about pharmacy, we relied largely upon his judgment in reporting the bill.

Mr. GUENTHER. It has the approval of the pharmacists here?
Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood from the reading of this bill, which is quite lengthy, something in regard to an inspector of pharmacy. Who is to be the inspector?

Mr. ATKINSON. The bill provides for the appointment of an inspector of pharmacy who is to be nominated by the organization of druggists here. They nominate a number of men, any one of whom may be selected by the commissioners, as I recollect the bill. But in order to secure pure drugs it is necessary that there should be an inspection of them. No man can tell in purchasing drugs whether they are pure or not, and the duty of the inspector is to visit the various drug stores, examine their stock, condemn articles which are inert or useless, and compel the druggist to dispense only pure and fresh drugs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me make an inquiry upon another point. As I caught the reading of the bill there was some provision in regard to labeling drugs and making public the formula under which they were compounded, where the preparation is a compound preparation.

Mr. ATKINSON. I presume the gentleman refers to the provision with regard to the storage of poisons. These are required to be labeled, and the bill provides among other things that poisons, mentioned in a schedule embraced in the bill, shall be kept in a separate part of the drug store, so that there may be no opportunity for error in dis-

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood the bill to provide that the in-spector of drugs should be allowed to examine as to the component parts of different preparations of medicine, and to see that the formula in all cases was made public by a label or some such means. Mr. ATKINSON. That would be within the scope of his powers; that is, he would be allowed to inspect all drugs made according to the standard formula; but it would not embrace compounded drugs under patents, what are called "patent medicines."

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was in regard to that point that I wanted to ask the gentleman whether it required these preparations to be also labeled.

Mr. ATKINSON. No, sir; they go upon the market as of the character they pretend to have, and this does not provide for their inspection. Anybody who takes patent medicines takes them at his own risk upon the credit of the producer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not intended, then, to make public the compounds which go under the head of patent medicines?

Mr. ATKINSON. No, sir. Mr. RICHARDSON. While I would support the bill if it did make provision for that, for I am not much in favor of patent medicines myself, still I desired to know what this provision was.

Mr. ATKINSON. It might be an infringement of the rights of the manufacturers to require that. When a man wants to take a patent medicine he must rely upon the credit of the manufacturer.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill

The latter motion was agreed to.

JURY TRIAL, POLICE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now ask to take up again the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill was temporarily laid aside, and has been already before the House this evening.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There are certain amendments I desire to move now to the bill.

In the second section and fourth line I move to strike out the word "may" and insert "shall," which simply requires, when a man wants to except, that he shall reduce his exceptions to writing, so that there may be a proper basis of appeal.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. In the seventh line of the same section I move to strike out the words "may be" and insert "now;" so that it will read: "as now provided by rule by the supreme court of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. In the eighth line, after the word "Columbia," insert "in causes in that court;" so it will require appeals here to be similar to those in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move also to strike out the word "if" after the word "and," in the twelfth line.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Also insert, after the word "presentation," in the twelfth line, the words "of the same."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move now to strike out the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth lines, down to and including the word police" in that line. The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to strike out the third section and substitute the following in place of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That such jurors shall be drawn in the same manner as now provided by law for jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KILGORE. I believe you have already passed a bill in relation

Mr. HEMPHILL. That relates to jurors in the supreme court of the District. This relates to the police court and merely provides the same as for the supreme court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The remaining amendments proposed by the committee will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objective.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.
Then, on motion of Mr. HEMPHILL (at 10 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 6, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROVISIONAL AGREEMENT WITH THE CREEKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith for approval and ratification a provisional agreement lately entered into between the Government of the United States and the Creek Nation of Indians through their duly authorized representatives, and which has been approved by the national council of said nation, by which agreement the title and interest of the said Creek Nation of Indians in and to all lands in the Indian Territory or elsewhere, except such as are held and occupied as the homes of said nation, are ceded to the United States.

The eighth section of the Indian appropriation bill approved March 3, 1885, authorized the President "to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in the Indian Territory ceded by them, respectively, to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, and July 19, 1866." This section also contains an appropriation in furtherance of its purpose, and requires that the action of the President thereunder should be reported to Congress.

The "unassigned" lands thus referred to should be construed to be those which have not been transferred by the United States in pursuance of the treaties mentioned in the section quoted.

The treaty with the Creeks is dated June 14, 1866. It was confirmed by a Senate resolution passed July 19, 1866, and was proclaimed August 11, 1866. (14

Stats., 785.)
The third article of the treaty makes a cession of lands in the following

stats., 755.)

The third article of the treaty makes a cession of lands in the following words:

"In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south; the eastern half of said Creek lands, being retained by them, shall, except as herein otherwise stipulated, be forever set apart as a home for said Creek Nation; and in consideration of said cession of the west half of their lands, estimated to contain 3,250,569 acres, the United States agree to pay the sum of 30 cents per acre, amounting to $975,168."

The provision that the lands conveyed were "to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians," etc., has been steadily regarded as a limitation upon the grant made to the United States. Such a construction is admitted to be the true one in many ways, especially by the continual reservation of the ceded lands from settlement by the whites, by the sale of a portion of the same to Indians, by the use of other portions as the home of Indians, and also by various provisions in proposed legislation in Congress. Thus the bill now pending for the organization of Oklahoma provides for the payment to the Creeks and Seminoles of the ordinary Government price of $1.25 per acre, less the amount heretofore paid.

The section of the law of 1885 first above quoted appears also to have been passed in contemplation not only of the existence of a claim on the part of the Creeks, but of the substantial foundation of that claim in equity, if not in law, and in acknowledgment of the duty of the Goverment to satisfactorily discharge the claim of the Indian people before putting the land to the free uses of settlement and Territorial occup ciaim thereto.

I. In that part of these lands called the Oklahoma country no Indians have been allowed to reside by any action of the Government, nor has any execution been attempted of the limiting condition of the cession of 1866.

The quantity of these lands, carefully computed from the surveys, is 1,392,-

The quantity of these lands, carefully computed from the surveys, is 1,332,-704.70 acres.

II. The remainder of these unassigned lands has been appropriated, in some degree, to Indian uses, although still within the control of the Government.

Thus, by three executive orders, the following Indian reservations have been created:

222, 716, 32

This shows the quantity of lands unassigned but to some extent appropriated to Indian uses by the Government, amounting to.. 1, 277, 050. 19 appropriated to Indian uses by the Government, amounting to. 1,277,050.19

For the lands which are not only unassigned, but are unoccupied, and which have been in no way appropriated, it appears clearly just and right that a price of at least $1.25 should be allowed to the Creeks. They held more than the ordinary Indian title, for they had a patent in fee from the Government. The Osages of Kansas were allowed $1.25 per acre upon giving up their reservation, and this land of the Creeks is reported by those familiar with it to be equal to any land in the country. Without regard to the present enhanced value of this land, and if reference be only had to the conditions when the cession was made, no less price ought to be paid for it than the ordinary Government price. Therefore, in this provisional agreement which has been made with the Creeks, the price of $1.25 has been settled upon for such land, with the deduction of the 30 cents per acre which has already been paid by the Government therefor. As to the remainder of the unassigned lands, in view of the fact that some use has been made of them of the general character indicated by the treaty of 1866, and because some portion of them should be allotted to Indians under the general allotment act, and to cover the expenses of surveys and adjustments, a diminishment of 20 cents per acre has been acceded to. There is no difference in the character of the lands.

Thus, computing the unassigned and entirely unappropriated land, being the Oklahoma country, containing 1,392,704.70 acres, at 95 cents per acre, and the remainder, which has been appropriated to the extent above stated, being 1,277, 150.19 acres, at 75 cents per acre, the total price stipulated in the agreement has been reached—$2,208,857,10.

But as it was desirable that the Indian title should be beyond all question extinguished to all parts of the land ceded by the Creeks in 1866, with their full consent and understanding, the agreement of cession has been made to embrace a complete surrender of all claim to the western half of their domain, including the assigned as well as the unassigned lands, for the price named. So the agreement takes the form in the first article of such a cession, and in the second article is stipulated the price in gross, of all the lands and interests ceded, with no detailed reference to the manner of its ascertainment.

The overtures which led to this agreement were made by representatives of the Creek Nation, who came here for that purpose. They were intelligent and evidently loyal to the interests of their people. The terms of the agreement were fully discussed and concessions were made by both parties. It was promptly confirmed by the national council of the Creek Indians, and its complete consummation only waits the approval of the Congress of the United States.

plete consummation only want the approval of the States.

I am convinced that such ratification will be of decided benefit to the Government, and that the agreement is entirely free from any suspicion of unfairness or injustice towards the Indians.

I desire to call especial attention to the fact that to become effective the agreement must be ratified by the Congress prior to the 1st day of July, 1889.

The draught of an act of ratification is herewith submitted.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

FORT CUSTER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. DAVIS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3795) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Custer military reservation, Montana, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the bill may now be considered by the Senate. It will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Montana, be, and is hereby, granted a right of way across the Fort Custer military reservation upon such line, in the vicinity of the Big Horn and Little Big Horn Rivers, as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the said right of way hereby granted shall not exceed 100 feet in width, except where side-tracks, spurs, turn-tables, and a station are located or to be located; and at such point the right of way shall not exceed 200 feet on each side of the main track and not exceeding 2,000 feet in length.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

I understand the bill from having heard it read, it simply provides a right of way through this military reservation. It does not fix any terminal points?

Mr. DAVIS. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. The terminal points are not named in the bill?

Mr. VOORHEES. No; they are not named. Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I can explain this matter. A right of way for this railroad mit me, I can explain this matter. A right of way for this railroad has been asked across the Crow Indian reservation, beginning at the mouth of the Big Horn River and running up that stream until it reaches the mouth of the Little Big Horn River, then up that stream across that reservation. The Senate has passed the bill granting this right of way. Included in this Indian reservation is the Fort Custer military reservation, at the mouth of the Little Big Horn. This bill is simply to give the right of way across this military reservation, which, as I have said, is embraced in the Indian reservation and must necessarily be crossed by the route of the road.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been read three times, shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

IMPORTATION OF CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

REPORT ON EUROPEAN DOCK-YARDS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 25) to print 4,000 copies of the report of Naval Constructor Philip Hichborn, on European dock-yards, to report it back favorably and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides for printing in quarto form, all to be half-bound in leather, at the Government Printing Office, 4,000 additional copies of the report of Naval Constructor Philip Hichborn, United States Navy, on European dockyards, details, fittings, and equipments of foreign vessels, torpedo-boats, ship-yard appliances, tools, etc., of which additional number 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies to be delivered to and distributed by the Secretary of the Navy for general information.

DAVID A. HAYWOOD.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield to me to enable me to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a little bill on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield, reserving the right to object if it occa-

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to David A. Haywood, of Indianapolis, Ind., of $350.32, for grading and bowldering Market street, in that city, in front of the post-office and court-house building, as per estimate made by the civil engineer of the city of Indianapolis

Mr. SPOONER. I only desire to say that the claim is an obviously just one and its payment is recommended by the Treasury Department. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] coming over from a previous day will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 25th of January, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay for allowances due such officers, known as the longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowance of such claims; and also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement before the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] makes the remarks which I understand he desires to submit.

Before this resolution was offered I introduced, as an amendment to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, a statement of the remedy for the evils to which I have called attention, which occurred to me as the suitable remedy; at all events, a suggested remedy which was worthy of the consideration, I thought, of the Committee on Appropriations. That was a provision as follows:

on Appropriations. That was a provision as follows:

The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to suits brought by officers of the Army and Navy for arrears of pay, of mileage, of traveling expenses, or of personal allowances of any kind. This prohibition shall extend to all suits now pending.

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department shall not, without express authority of law hereafter enacted, settle or allow any claim of any officer of the Army or Navy for arrears of pay, mileage, traveling expenses, or personal allowances of any kind where such claim covers any period of time more than three years before the presentation of such claim. This prohibition shall extend to all claims now pending.

It is very difficult to wake any beadway in checking the allowance.

It is very difficult to make any headway in checking the allowance of old claims upon the Treasury of the United States against the efforts of the attorneys and claim agents in the city of Washington. I have learned that this suggested remedy of mine has been printed on slips by the claim agents and attorneys, and copies have been sent out all over the country with the suggestion that persons who may be interested in different kinds of claims shall write letters to their Senators and Representatives in Congress urging them to oppose the adoption of the proposition. I state this in order that Senators need not be surprised when they open their mails and find letters of this kind.

In several cases which have been called to my attention the printed slip is inclosed to a Senator or Member of Congress and the recipient is urged to vigorously oppose the adoption of the proposition. So Senators can understand when they receive letters of this kind what is the source and origin. They are not letters voluntarily written; they are letters requested by the attorneys and claim agents, who know so well how to work up a seeming popular sentiment or a seeming military or class sentiment in favor of anything which they desire to accomplish or against anything they desire to defeat.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator before he sits down one que tion. I have had occasion to know something of the circulars which the claim agents in Washington, who have taken alarm at this movement to cut off one of their sources of supply, have sent out to the country, and in some cases, and perhaps in all, an attempt has been made to enlist public sentiment in their favor by declaring that the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire would interfere with the just claims of old soldiers. Now, I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he desires any action on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, or any legislation that would in any way interfere with the just claims of the old soldiers of the war.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very happy to state that it is not my purpose to interfere with the payment of any claims which Congress has deliberately determined to pay; and I will say, further, that there are cases of just claims in which I would myself be willing to vote to remove the bar of the statute of limitations.

The exact point that I am making is that these old claims, going back some forty years, are being settled and allowed without any regard to the statute of limitations, when there has been no legislation of Congress which any member of Congress ever expected would result in the payment of such claims. One class of meritorious claims which has been called to my attention by a Senator this morning is a class of claims for certain allowances to volunteer officers who served during the war of the rebellion, which claims are now being audited at the Treasury Department in pursuance of express authority given by Con-

It is not my intention, and if it were my intention it certainly would not be the decision of the Committee on Appropriations, to recommend that there shall be any legislation to prevent the carrying out of the will of Congress clearly expressed in these cases or in any similar cases; but it is my intention to force the attention of Congress to the neces sity of having a statute of limitations, which if it is waived is to be waived by authority of Congress, and is not to be waived by the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I hold in my hand one of the slips that I presume are referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire. It recites the amendment that he introduced some time ago to the deficiency bill, and prefaces the proposed amendment with these

The following item is taken from a reliable Army paper issued on the 26th of

January, 1889:
Senator Chandler proposes the following amendment to the deficiency bill when it reaches the Senate.

Then follows the amendment in the exact words as read by the Senator with certain words emphasized. I will read it and call attention to the words that are printed in italics and in small capitals.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to suits brought by officers of the Army or Navy for arrears of pay, of mileage, of traveling expenses, or of personal allowances of any kind. This prohibition shall extend to all suits now pending.

Then in small capitals:

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department-

And then-shall not, without express authority of law hereafter enacted, settle or allow any claim of any officer of the Army or Navy for arrears of pay, mileage, traveling expenses, or personal allowances of any kind where such claim covers any period of time more than three years before the presentation of such claim.

Then in italics:

This prohibition shall extend to all claims now pending.

It may be, Mr. President, that it is objectionable that attorneys or claim agents in the city of Washington or elsewhere shall pursue this method of challenging attention to material changes in existing law, but I think it hardly lies in the mouth of the Senator from New Hampshire or of any other Senator proposing material changes in existing law that he should object to publicity being given to the proposed amendment, let it come from whatever source it may.

I do not rise, however, to defend those who occupy the position of attorneys or claim agents, but I feel that it is my duty to attempt to protect those whom this proposed legislation must materially injure.

This slip came to me this morning inclosed in a letter from a very gallant volunteer soldier, a man who never belonged to the regular Army of the United States, but who served with distinguished gallantry during the war. He would have known nothing whatever of this proposed amendment to existing law that was to be placed upon an appropriation bill had his attention not been called to it by this method to which I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to object. His claim against the Government is similar to that of some thirty or forty thousand others who served during the war of the rebellion in volunteer organizations. It is based upon an act of Congress passed in 1884, amended in 1887, that gives to him, as it gives to all others similarly situated, the allowance of pay between the date of commission and the date of actual muster into the service in the grade to which an officer might have been promoted where he served under the commission in that capacity and was unable to be mustered owing to the exigencies of the service.

Many such claims have already been paid, and all should be treated alike, for, although the claims are a quarter of a century old, it is for only the past few years that they could be presented for adjudication.

This amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill proposes the practical repeal of that act of 1884 and the amendatory act of 1887, and it proposes the repeal of all other laws that have been passed by Congress for the benefit of officers of the Army and Navy of the United States who served during the war of the rebellion. It seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire should be greatly pleased that public attention has been called to the sweeping character of his amend-I am with him in the proposition that as to officers of the Army and Navy of the United States now in the regular service there should be a reasonable statute of limitations. Three years perhaps, the time mentioned in that proposed amendment, is sufficient; but there certainly should not be by this method of consideration, by legislation that it is not proposed to send to the Committee on Military Affairs to see what the effect of it would be upon the Army of the United States, and that it is not proposed to send to the Committee on Naval Affairs to see what its effect might be upon the Navy of the United States, but an amendment that is proposed to be investigated simply by the Committee on Appropriations, without such light as could be afforded to that committee by these brother committees—that this amendment shall be procured by that means I do not think either desirable or advised. visable. Although there may be much of evil to be remedied, here is a remedy that it seems to me is entirely too sweeping in its character, and entails greater ills than those we would rid ourselves of.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood him to express his approval of the first clause of the amendment:

The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to suits brought by officers of the Army and Navy for arrears of pay, of mileage, of traveling expenses, or of personal allowances of any kind. This prohibition shall extend to all suits now pending.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not express my approval of that clause, but condemned it, and said I thought there should be a statute of limitations in favor of the Government as against claims by officers of the Army and Navy. The mere limitation I do not oppose as to future claims; but I certainly do not believe in legislation of a character which wipes out at one fell swoop every suit that is pending in the Court of Claims or every present attempt at accounting in the Treasury De-

Mr. SPOONER. I agree with the Senator that there should be a statute of limitations, but I can see no reason why an officer of the Army or Navy who conceives that he is entitled under a proper construction of the law to certain allowances for mileage or pay, if he is denied what is considered justice by the accounting officers, the bureau officers of the Government, should be deprived of the right that all other citizens have to go into the Court of Claims for the purpose of procuring a construction of the law.

Mr. MANDERSON. I quite agree with the Senator on that proposition, but still I think there should be a statute of limitations, that a time should be fixed within which a man should make his claim against the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. The statute of limitations is another matter. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether this language as it is drawn would not so change the law as to prevent a committee of Congress from referring a claim under the Bowman act to the Court of Claims for investigation and reporting the facts in any claim pending before Congress, or to prevent going before Congress of an offi-cer of the Army or the Navy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think it would. I should not consider a claim referred under the Bowman act to be a suit, because the discretion of Congress is retained over the whole subject. The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is not extended to certain suits brought; says the amendment. I do not think it would refer to the claims sent by Congress to the Court of Claims and to be reported back to Congress.

Mr. CALL. My attention was called to the reading of this resolution, although I do not represent any considerable number of the officers who are beneficiaries under the act of Congress which the resolution seeks to repeal; but I have always since I have been in the Senate followed the lead in the appropriations for the recognition, reward, and payment to the officers and soldiers of the Army and the officers and seamen of the Navy of the United States during the civil war between the States, of the Senators from the Northern States, and this has been and is the universal feeling of the people of the Southern States. My attention was directed to this resolution of inquiry proposing an investigation which illustrates the looseness of thought and habits of legislation in this body and which requires some consideration. I am the more willing to enter upon this defense of the soldiers of the Army and seamen of the Navy because I think it is for the country's welfare that it should be known and felt everywhere that the men who were engaged in the actual conflicts of the war fraternized as soon as the surrender followed, and that the soldiers and people of the Southern States have always been ready and are now to support any degree and measure of public reward and bounty which the people of the Northern States desire

This resolution proposes an inquiry by the Committee on Appropriations as to the expediency as a matter of public law and the rightfulness as a matter of justice of investigating and reporting legislation to annul and destroy a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in reference to a matter of private rights made in cases between parties litigant in the regular course of judicial procedure before that supreme tribunal.

That is an extraordinary proposition. The speech of the Senator from New Hampshire in advocating this resolution expressly states that the law has been construed and adjudicated in a question of private right between these parties, and the inquiry submitted is whether the Committee on Appropriations can and ought to report some legislation which will destroy that status of private right adjudicated under a law of Congress by the Supreme Court of the United States. The law upon which the Supreme Court has rendered its decision awarding to this class of officers the pay which they are seeking to obtain and as to which this complaint has been made by the Senator from New Hampshire, and for which the Committee on Appropriations has been arraigned, is in the following language:

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer army or navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service.

Here is an express law the language of which can not be in anywise whatever misunderstood, and which the Supreme Court has decided to have this plain and obvious meaning; that is, an officer shall have the pay of the lowest grade in which there was graduated pay which he had held at any time in the regular or volunteer service of the Army or Navy, his service being made continuous from the beginning to the end, whether in one arm of the service or in all. What other meaning could the law have? What other force or effect? It was a positive enactment that the time of actual service should be regarded as continuous, whether in one or theother branch of the service, and that the pay should be awarded as of the lowest grade having graduated pay in which he had served. Now the inquiry is, what legislation is expedient to nullify this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States properly interpreting the plain and evident language of an act of Congress and deprive these officers and soldiers of the Army and officers and seamen of the Navy of the pay which Congress has deliberately awarded them? It seems to me a very singular proposition, and one altogether without merit and entirely indefensible

But that is not the only remarkable feature of this resolution. Senator from New Hampshire states that the Supreme Court and himself differ in opinion in regard to the law, and the question the Senator submits for legislation is which shall prevail, the construction of the law made by the Senator when Secretary, or the opinion of several Senators as to what force and effect the law should have, or the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the rights of these officers rendered in a case pending before that court. That is the inquiry proposed by this resolution. It would seem strange that a Senator should introduce a resolution here asking the Senate to inquire what legislation should be had to annul a decision of the Supreme Court upon the ground that some one, two, or three Senators had before the passage of this law expressed an opinion different from the Supreme Court decision as to what would be its force and effect. This has been gravely urged at some length by the Senator from New Hampshire as a reason for adopting this resolution and making this report and investigation. I am opposed to it not only because it is unwise to make a conflict of authority between the co-ordinate departments of the Government, except in cases necessary for the preservation of the Constitution, but because I think both the act of Congress and the decision of the Supreme Court giving this bounty or pay to the officers and soldiers were right.

But that is not all. Time as it passes makes us all oblivious of the events of the past. We forget even the great provisions of constitutional law which were the result of the late war. But it is a little sur-prising that that forgetfulness should come from the Senator from New Hampshire, who harps so often on the status of right which it gave to the colored people, but forgets the soldier. It is strange that he should forget; that the amendments of the Constitution as the result of the war should so soon have lost all their force and effect not only in the memory but also in the public conduct of Senators.

The fourth section of the fourteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

SEC. 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned.

What is this? Here is an act of Congress providing that the soldiers and seamen of the Army and Navy of the United States should have their time of service credited as continuous in either the volunteer army or navy from the time of the first commencement of actual service and rated according to the pay of the lowest grade of service having graduated pay which they had performed, and this act of Congress, construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of these soldiers and seamen for these bounties and pay in suppressing the rebellion, as the amendment and the statute term it, is adjudicated by the Supreme Court, and a question is raised here by the Senator from New Hampshire whether or not this body can interpose the statute of limitations questioning thus the bounty, the public debt, the validity of the pension awarded by Congress, and it seems to excite no attention and no consideration whatever, but to pass sub silentio, as if there was nothing in it and as if the Committee on Appropriations had been strangely negligent in allowing this provision to be inserted upon an appropriation. negligent in allowing this provision to be inserted upon an appropria-

Now, Mr. President, for one I am glad to say that I think that was a proper recognition of the services of the men engaged in the Army and Navy of the United States, whether as officers or privates, for they were all soldiers or seamen, and as a member of that committee—I think I was then a member of it-I left the language and the substance of the provisions to the Senators from the Northern States. I gladly and knowingly voted for this clause in the appropriation bill in the Senate. I do not remember whether I was at that time a member of the Com-

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question?
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire? Does the

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir. Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether, when he voted for it, he understood that it would result in granting arrears of pay running back forty years and extending to the large sums to which I called the attention of the Senate the other day.

Mr. CALL. I do not remember what understanding I had nor have I any distinct recollection of the discussion upon the subject, but I voted for it with the understanding that whatever decision the Supreme Court of the United States should give to it ought to be respected by the Congress of the United States as a matter of private right and as a matter of public law.

Mr. President, that is the whole of this matter. debt incurred in the suppression of the rebellion. It affects the officers and men who served in that war, and comes within the provisions of the constitutional amendment.

But it was to call attention to the fact that in the face of this provision guarantied by the Constitution of the United States, recognized by Congress, which is forbidden to question it anywhere and everywhere, we propose gravely by a statute of limitations to be passed by this body as a matter of public law and public right to divest the ad-judicated title and right of these soldiers to the results of this judgment of the Supreme Court.

I do not desire to consider this matter further or to state more than I have done. It has so happened without knowing any of these gentlemen, having no personal acquaintance with them or with but very few of them at least, that I have had sent me a little slip, with the request that I should consider it, from an officer of the Navy. He writes as fol-

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

Editor Post Editor Post:

The unanswerable equity of the receiving-ship and other Navy judgments is clear by reference to the Army's one kind of pay, which, with its system of longevity accruements, is higher than the highest of the three kinds (sea, shore, leave) by which the Navy is discriminated against, so that even had nothing but sea-pay, longevity included, always been paid us, we would still have had less forrespondingly than the Army. Even with all our judgments and claims fully appropriated for, the Government will still have saved an immense aggregate difference by the above unjust discrimination against the Navy.

ROBERT RODNEY, United States Navy.

That is the Navy side. I present that in deference to these officers. For myself I shall always be glad to accord with the public sentiment of the Northern States in giving to the gallant soldiers and seamen of the Army and Navy whatever meed of public approval or of compensation the people of the Northern States may desire to give. I recognize the fact that the Navy and Army of the United States are, as they have always been, an honor to the country, and they ought to be properly maintained, and while the duties assigned to them should be required to be rigidly performed, they should be recognized as valuable and essential arms of the public service, and the courage and spirit and services of the men of the Navy and Army should be properly recognized and compensated.

As a Senator from a Southern State which was a Confederate or a rebel State in the civil war, I take pleasure in stating that our people cheerfully acknowledge the merits and courage of the Union soldiers and sailors, and will bear whatever burdens the people of the North think proper to impose on all the people for their reward and support. The men of both armies are friends and respect each other. The peo-ple of all the States respect each other with that friendship and esteem

Which warriors feel In foemen worthy of their steel.

The war is past and its enmities forgotten. We are citizens of a common country willing to share each others' burdens and to do justice to each other.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not rise to discuss especially the resolution under consideration, because I am not prepared to say whether it ought to be adopted or not, but I have had handed to me a circular which it seems to me proper in connection with this discussion to call to the attention of the Senate. It is a circular issued by—Messrs. Tallmadge & Tallmadge, attorneys for prosecution of naval claims and all other claims before Congress, the Court of Claims, the various Commisstons, and the Executive Departments of the Government.

And was issued in this city, "Washington, D. C., February 7, 1889;" and it begins in this way:

DEAR SIR: We take the liberty of presenting herewith our card and offering our services in the prosecution of any claims you may have against the Government. Recent acts of Congress, decisions of the courts, and more liberal rulings of the Departments have greatly enlarged the number of those entitled to recover for past services in the Navy, and nearly all the living officers and the heirs of deceased officers are entitled to recover something for either longevity pay, receiving-ship service, mileage, or Mexican-war service.

And so on. Then, underscored, it says:

I have read portions of this circular, more for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that there seems to be a relation between these outside attorneys and these Government officers in the Treasury of the United States; whether there is any improper relation I am not here to say. I do not assume that there is, but it seems a little remarkable that circulars should be issued and lines of them underscored with pencil marks directing the attention of the party to whom the circular is addressed to special officers in the Treasury of the

I should infer that in the course of a month or so perhaps these two Government officers will be found either in this firm or in some other firm, perhaps in the city of Washington, acting as attorneys for these naval claims and others that are now seeking to be settled.

I understand further that the circular which I hold in my hand was sent as many as three times to a person who has a claim in the Navy Department, and that up to this time the party claiming has not been able to get any attention to the claim by anybody who has called there outside of the person claiming, who lives a good many hundred miles

I think it worthy of the attention of the Senate and the country that there seems to be that kind of intimacy between these agents and two Government officers that ought to have an investigation.

Mr. HALE. Which Auditor is that?

Mr. CULLOM. The Auditor of the Treasury here referred to is Charles M. Shelley, Fourth Auditor of the Treasury. I do not know whether that officer is the man before whom this class of claims come for settlement or not.

Mr. HALE. I know nothing against Mr. Shelley whatever, but I think that is the very office where these claims are audited.
Mr. CULLOM. I had that impression, otherwise I should not have called the attention of the Senator to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator if he will put that circular in the RECORD entire?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that.

Dear Sir: We take the liberty of presenting herewith our card and offering our services in the prosecution of any claims you may have against the Government. Recent acts of Congress, decisions of the courts, and more liberal rulings of the Departments have greatly enlarged the number of those entitled to recover for past services in the Navy, and nearly all the living officers and the heirs of deceased officers are entitled to recover something for either longevity pay, receiving ship service, mileage, or Mexican-war service.

Under a recent decision retired officers of the Navy are entitled to pension for services in the Mexican war.

Many claims are unsuccessful by reacon of not being properly presented and pushed, and herein is the advantage of having a competent attorney, resident at the capital, who is thoroughly familiar with the requirements of the Departments and can daily visit the various offices and give personal attention to the cases. We have, at great trouble and expense, prepared a list of those entitled to recover under recent decisions, and can supply from our own records missing information and secure copies of orders, etc., necessary to establish any just claim.

Our fee in all ordinary cases is 10 per cent. of amount collected, but nothing if claim is not allowed, and this fee covers all expenses of every kind.

We make a specialty of naval claims, and our experience in this class of business is very large. We take pleusure in referring to any of the officers or heirs of deceased officers for whom we have prosecuted claims, and invite correspondence with any officer of the Navy who believes he has an equitable claim against the Government. We will take charge of claims already filed and see that your interests are properly protected and promoted, and that no unnecessary delay occurs in the settlement of the same.

Awaiting your pleasure we are yours, very truly,

TALLMADGE & TALLMADGE.

Refer by permission to Hon. Charles M. Shelley, Fourth Auditor United States Treasury; Hon. James W. Hyatt, Treasurer of United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to put in the RECORD, if there be no objection, the advertisement of these same attorneys containing the names of some thousand naval officers who are to hear of something to their advantage by communicating with these attorneys, and many of the cases going back forty years. I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so inserted, if there be no

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I have no interest in the special matter which forms the basis of the remarks made this morning which I understand to be a resolution of instruction to the Committee on Appropriations to make a certain investigation as to accounts of naval officers. My interest in this matter arises from the fact that this morning since I came to the Capitol I received the letter to which I referred a few moments ago, in which there was inclosed the proposed amendment to the appropriation bill introduced a few days ago by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLEB], and this letter called my attention to this proposed amendment for the first time, for it had escaped me in perusing the RECORD and I had not seen it in print on my desk. So that if these claim agents have done nothing better, they have at least challenged the attention of the country and of Senators to a very sweeping piece of legislation that I submit would have worked very great hardship.

I have no question but that there are many attorneys and claim agents in this city who do not aspire to practice on that high plane of professional ethics that would characterize the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] or the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] in their professional labors, but at the same time there are many of these men who are reputable in their profession and who indulge in no objectionable practices to obtain professional work.

I know the fact that as to the soldiers who served during the late war a great many righteous and proper claims would have met with defeat in the Departments of the Government, in the Court of Claims, and in other courts, were it not for the honest and faithful service that has been performed by some of these much-abused attorneys, who are denominated claim agents, in the city of Washington.

It may be that a majority of them pursue methods which are objectionable, but I think it is due, at least to the few that I have mentioned, that they should receive this meed of credit and praise.

that they should receive this meed of credit and praise.

My interest in this matter is simply to the extent that this proposed legislation affects many thousands of volunteer soldiers, not of the regular Army, who have claims now pending against the Government of the United States, and I rise for the purpose of submitting the letter to which I referred a few moments ago. It comes to me from General W. W. Lowe, whose name is well known throughout the country as that of a volunteer soldier who served with most distinguished honor to himself and to the country. It is dated the 2d day of February, and was written at Omaha. I will read that part of it which it seems to me proper to publish: proper to publish:

OMAHA, NEBR., February 2, 1889.

DEAR GENERAL: Toward the close of a session, in the unavoidable haste attending the passage of important measures, it may and does sometimes happen that cruel, unjust, and absurd laws are enacted by being tacked onto an appropriation bill, or in some other obscure form. Of this character is the amendment to be offered by Senator Chandler to the deficiency bill when it reaches the Senate, a copy of which I inclose herein. Against this monstrous wrong I enter my protest in the name of 30,000 officers of volunteers in the late war. Should this amendment become a law it will kill the claims of that number of volunteer officers, which are based on the act of June 3, 1884, authorizing the amending of their musters-in, and which are now pending and partially settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The legal principles upon which such claims rest have been, to a great extent, and are just now, about being fully affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in kindred test army-pay cases; but all this will avail nothing if this amendment passes, for it will take away the right to present such claims in the only place where they can obtain a hearing and examination, namely, before the accounting officers of the Treasury. Thus the law proposes to "entirely annihilate the remedy," and (1) is unconstitutional in that it impairs the obligations of contracts (see Paschal's Annotated Constitution, second edition, section 400, page 393, and section 157, page 155); (2) is "class legislation," especially against Army and Navy officers; and (3) is unjust, because it shuts out just claims alike as to the future and the past, without notice or warning of any kind, and virtually destroys vested rights, and becomes disgraceful repudiation. This amendment should "die the death;" the law should remain as it is and always has been, the accounting officers being obliged to settle all claims fully proven before them, according to the law as expounded by the United States Supreme Court, without any time bar, and to regard Army officers as other persons.

Truly, yours,

W. W. LOWE.

Hon. C. F. Manderson, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

It seems to me that this letter, Mr. President, presents the matter pretty fully, and I certainly think the Senator from New Hampshire could not have given the proposed amendment that consideration its importance deserves when he introduced it and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, having taken part in a former discussion of the questions embraced in the resolution now before the Senate, I have with some care prepared what I think it right and proper to say at this time.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has submitted to the Senate three propositions with respect to claims of Army and Navy officers: first, a resolution calling for information from the Treasury, which has been answered; second, a resolution, now pending, directing the Committee on Appropriations to make an investigation covering substantially the same ground, to which nobody can object; and third, an amendment to the general deficiency bill, already referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In the debate on Friday last on the pending resolution he alluded to all of these propositions, and stated his proposed amendment as follows:

his proposed amendment as follows:

My remedy is to provide as follows:

"The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to suits brought by officers of the Army and Navy for arrears of pay, of mileage, of traveling expenses, or of personal allowances of any kind. This prohibition shall extend to all suits now pending.

"The accounting officers of the Treasury Department shall not, without express authority of law hereafter enacted, settle or allow any claim of any officer of the Army or Navy for arrears of pay, mileage, traveling expenses, or personal allowances of any kind where such claim covers any period of time more than three years before the presentation of such claim. This prohibition shall extend to all claims now pending."

If this be not unconstitutional, as depriving officers of rights vested under executed contracts, it is certainly class legislation of the most pronounced character.

It deprives officers of the Government, who are under the most rigid discipline, of the only method provided them of disputing a question of law involving their pay and allowance (matters of rank and precedence not being within the jurisdiction of the courts).

It denies to Army and Navy officers a right conceded to the humblest citizen of the United States and the citizens of many foreign nations.

The only and obvious effect of such legislation would be to place it within the arbitrary power of the head of the War or Navy Department to prescribe not only an officer's duties but his pay and allowances

Such power has, in fact, often been claimed and exercised, and it is only within a very few years that Army and Navy officers, trained to strict obedience to their superiors, have discovered that they have any rights in the courts,

The movement of the Senator from New Hampshire seems to be mainly against what are known as "sea-pay cases." These are claims for the difference between the pay provided by law (section 1556, Revised Statutes) for officers on duty at sea and that provided for duty on shore. For obvious reasons, mainly because of the double expense of paying mess-bills on shipboard and supporting families on land, an officer's pay for sea duty is higher than for duty on shore.

Down to August 1, 1882, officers on duty on board certain vessels known as training-ships received sea-pay. After that date, without the slightest change in their situations, expenses, or duties, they were reduced to show any under the following orders.

reduced to shore-pay under the following order:

[General Order No. 297.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 7, 1882.

On and after 1st of August next the New Hampshire, the Minnesota, the Intrepid, and the Alarm will not be considered in commission for sea-service.

WM. E. CHANDLER, Secretary of the Navy.

The officers of those vessels protested against this reduction of their pay, and on the 5th day of May, 1884, the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], who now thanks the Senator from New Hampshire for his suggestions, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs a bill (S. 2147) for their relief from the operations of the Secretary's order.

performed at sea under the orders of a Department and in vessels employed by authority of law, and such as shall be performed in the United States training service."

The efforts of the Senator from Maine were not successful. His bill was not passed, and it seems that the officers appealed to the courts to test the validity of the Secretary's order.

In the case of Symonds vs. The United States (21 Court of Claims Reports, 148) the question was decided in their favor. The syllabus of the case says:

A Secretary of the Navy can not change the character of an officer's service from sea-service to shore-service by simply ordering that it be so regarded. Seaservice is defined by Revised Statutes, and the final construction of the statute is vested in the judiciary.

The Government appealed and the Supreme Court affirmed the decision (120 United States Reports, 46). The syllabus commences:

The Secretary of the Navy can not diminish an officer's compensation, as established by law, by declaring that to be shore-service which is in fact sea-service.

Congress accepted this decision as law and appropriated the money required to meet the claims. If it were necessary to say anything on their merits they are shown by the facts stated in the opinion, namely, that the service was even more arduous and confining than that on cruising ships.

When the Senator from New Hampshire complains that the facts are made up and reported by the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court he attacks an absolute rule of that court, as well as the integrity of the Court of Claims and of the Department of Justice, which is charged by law with the defense of the Government against claims, and has every facility for procuring record and oral evidence.

Following the case above referred to came that of Strong, a claim for difference between sea and shore pay for duty on receiving-ships. In this case the discrimination did not originate with the Senator from New case the discrimination did not originate with the Senator from New Hampshire when Secretary, but grew up in 1843. The question, however, was precisely the same, namely, whether a Secretary could, by executive order, reduce the pay provided by law. The Supreme Court again held that he could not (125 U. S., 656).

In this case, also, it was found that the officer's duties were "more exacting and arduous than those on board cruising ships." Congress again accepted the judgment and appropriated for its payment.

THE MILEAGE CASES

The mileage cases originated under acts of March 3, 1835, and June 30, 1876, allowing mileage for "travel under orders."

I desire to simplify those words as far as is in my power, so that they may be easily comprehended. I do it, it is not necessary to say, with great respect for the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine. Under both acts the Navy Department attempted to discriminate between travel in the United States and travel abroad, allowing mileage for the former and only actual expenses for the latter. In the cases of United States vs. Temple (105 U. S., 97) and United States vs. Graham (110 U. S., 219) the Supreme Court held that there was no ground for this distinction. It said in Admiral Temple's case that

There was no warrant for such practice in the language of the act of 1835, any more than in the act of 1876.

In Graham's case the court used the following language:

It was said the act of 1876 was so clear and explicit as not to be open to construction, and to our mind the same is true of the act of 1835.

The English courts have always held that sailors were under their peculiar protection, as being ignorant of their legal rights, and it would seem that officers of our Navy should be put in the same category, for as far back as 1842 Attorney-General Legaré advised the Secretary of the Navy that his construction of the law was at least doubtful, and that he ought to secure further legislation to support it. And in 1872 another Attorney-General held that the mileage should be allowed and-

That what the actual traveling expenses of such officer may be has nothing to do with the allowances made to him.

It may be because the law was so clear in this matter and might have been enforced in the courts long before (had not the idea seemed to prevail that it was contrary to discipline for an officer to assert his right as an American citizen) that the accounting officers hesitated to adjust old claims in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court upon the act of 1835. At any rate they did so hesitate, and Mr. Upton, then Comptroller, wrote Secretary Folger in the case of Capt. John P. C. De Krafft (whose widow we pensioned a few days ago by special act), asking whether he should allow the claim. The Secretary replied as

This Department in its annual report of 1883 called the attention of Congress to the ancient character of many claims against the Government and suggested a statute of limitation. The Department thereby impliedly recognized that without such a statute it must go on and hear and determine all claims of however long standing. I do not perceive how the Department can consistently with former practice and its representations to Congress now suddenly say in a class of claims that their age shall debar them of a hearing.

As to the equity of these claims it is difficult to see why it is not as proper to pay mileage for travel abroad as well as at home, or for offi-I quote the fifth section of that bill:

SEC. 5. That hereafter section 1571 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1571. No service shall be regarded as sea-service except such as shall be whose distinguished services during the war deserve better treatment, or Commander Graham, to whose judgment and discretion we have at this very time in part confided the protection of our interests in Sa-moa, of having secured, by a technical construction of law, allowances to which they were not equitably entitled.

I think we should rather instruct the Appropriations Committee to provide for the payment of interest on these old claims, arising under laws which the Supreme Court has said were too plain to admit of doubt.

I do not remember that such a proposition was ever made. But I do remember that in these very mileage cases I offered an amendment to the deficiency bill in 1882, appropriating $50,000 to pay them in advance of their adjustment, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], as the organ of the committee, accepted the amendment.

At the same time, in the same bill, and I think most unjustly, the law as changed so that mileage for foreign travel is no longer allowed. Almost all of these cases have been settled and appropriated for in the various deficiency bills since that time, and the estimates for this year contain less than $2,500 for such claims. Among them, however, are the claims of the heirs of Preble and Cushing, illustrious names in our naval history.

Whilst I was proposing the modest sum of $50,000 for the settlement of such claims the Senator from Maine added to the bill, and in one lump, $525,000 for longevity-pay claims of officers of the Army under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Tyler case. The Senator

That is not going to pay all. When these claims have all come in they will aggregate perhaps considerably more than a million dollars to come out of the Treasury.—Congressional Record, volume 13, part 6, page 5549.

THE LONGEVITY-PAY CLAIMS.

That brings me to consider the longevity-pay claims of naval offi-cers, against which the movement of the Senators from Maine and New Hampshire is also directed.

I must confess that when the law under which they accrued was under discussion here on a former occasion I did not understand it much better than the Senator from Maine or the Senator from New Hampshire. In fact, I presume I knew much less, for my acquaint-ance with the Navy was confined to the character and achievements of its officers, while one of the Senators was then its head and the other its officers, while one of the Senators was then its head and the other had been for many years on the Naval Committee. But I have examined the subject somewhat lately, and I say now that the only objection made by the Secretary, now Senator from New Hampshire, embodied in his letter to the Senator from Maine, printed in Saturday's RECORD, was obviated in the bill as it passed, if it ever had any foundation; and that no claim, such as he objected to, has ever been allowed by or ever presented to the accounting officers or the courts. On the contrary, the latter expressly denounced the construction objected to by the Secretary when it was suggested by the Attorney-General, in order to throw doubt upon the construction asked by the claimants. I quote from the opinion of the Court of Claims in Rockwell's case (21 Court of Claims Reports, 339):

Again, it is suggested that in order to give the officer all the benefits of such

Again, it is suggested that in order to give the officer all the benefits of such actual service as though it had been in the grade to which it is to be credited, as the language of that act provides, he ought to have the full salary of that grade for the whole time back to his re-entry into the regular Navy, although he might have held during that time a lower grade having less pay. But a sensible and reasonable view of the act is that it deals with credit for length of service and the additional pay arising therefrom and not with the matter of regular salary, and thus it appears to have been understood by all parties.

This language of the court appears to define as clearly as possible the intention of the longevity-pay clauses of the naval appropriation acts of 1882 and 1883. As I understand it, there are certain grades in the Army and Navy in which the pay increases according to length of service or longevity. For a number of years past an Army officer, on reaching such a grade, has had the right to count for longevity pay any time he might have previously served, whether in the same grade or any other, or as an enlisted man, or as a volunteer, in either the Army or Navy.

The statutes authorizing this credit were not only just and equitable to the officers, but beneficial to the Government. For certainly an officer of any grade who has had previous military experience and discipline is much more valuable to the Government than one who has not. Down to 1882 the Navy officers did not enjoy this right. The House of Representatives determined to give it to them and sent to the Senate the naval appropriation bill of that year, containing the following clause, which I will read:

SEC. 1. And all the officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer army or navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy: Provided, That nothing in this clause shall be so construct as to authorize any change in the dates of commission, or in the relative rank of such officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may be permitted to finish his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. VOORHEES. This clause had reference to pay, and to pay alone, for the only other privilege affected by length of service, if it can be considered a privilege, was the right of retirement, and that was already provided for. And not only did the clause relate to pay exclusively, but it related principally to back pay, for services performed prior to its passage. For the class of officers whom it could benefit were many of them already on their highest rate of pay and could get no future benefit from the act.

It would seem to be but right that it should affect back pay in this particular instance, as it was meant to give Navy officers privileges which Army officers had long enjoyed. It is nothing unusual to provide additional pay for services long after they are rendered. We have lately (in 1879) given three months' extra pay for services in the Mexican war, and there are now forty thousand claims of Army officers on file for services during the rebellion under what is known as the muster act of 1884, every one of which will be barred by the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

So far as they applied the act of 1882 at all, the accounting officers construed it retroactively, and that construction was known to and approved by Congress before the act of 1883 was passed. In Senate Executive Document 107, first session Forty-eighth Congress, Appendix

E. appears a list of longevity claims, certified to Congress in 1882 and appropriated for in the deficiency bill of that session.

They cover service as far back as March, 1861, the pay for which had been increased under the act of 1882, by applying credit for the time of previously uncredited service.

But the same document shows how the accounting officers limited and for the most part defeated the intent of the act of 1882. They held that they could only apply it in cases where the uncredited service had been performed in the same grade as that to which it was to be credited. That is, a boatswain could only receive credit for service as a boatswain, a gunner for service as a gunner, a surgeon for service as a surgeon, and so on. I need not go into detail. The opinions of the accounting officers are printed and may be read by any Senator. Their effect was to rule out all credit for enlisted service, for Army service, or for service in other grades, higher or lower, which the act of 1882 directed to be given.

The House of Representatives determined to make its legislation of 882 effective, and repeated it in the naval appropriation act of 1883, with an additional clause, as follows:

And all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer army or navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service: Provided, That nothing in this clause shall be so construed as to authorize any change in the dates of commission or in the relative rank of such officers.

This additional clause met the objection of the accounting officers by providing a grade in which all prior uncredited service should be counted. In some instances it would be one grade, in some another, but in all cases it would be the "lowest grade having graduated pay," the first grade held by the officer in which credit for service would increase his pay.

The Secretary, now Senator from New Hampshire, made his objec-tion, and it was obviated, as I have stated, by a proviso adopted in conference, as follows:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give any additional pay to any such officer during the time of his service in the volunteer army or navy.

I say again that no claim has since been made, and I do not believe one was ever contemplated, for the pay of a higher grade during the time of service in a lower one. Every dollar that has been allowed has resulted from crediting upon one grade the time of service performed in another, and this is what has long been done in the Army, and was directed to be done in the Navy by the act of 1882.

But after the act of 1883 was passed the accounting officers were not satisfied to give to it the same obvious and necessary retrospective construction they had given to the same language in the act of 1882.

They asked the advice of the Attorney-General, and he held that the acts were not retrospective. In this opinion the Secretary of the Navy, now Senator, made haste to concur in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated October 11, 1883, requesting that no accounts be stated in contravention of the opinion.

None were stated, and the claimants were driven to the courts. Hawkins vs. The United States (19 Court of Claims Reports, 611) that court unanimously sustained the contention of the claimant and the former construction of the accounting officers.

It gave Hawkins about $2,200 for increased pay as a boatswain from 1871 by crediting him in that grade and from that time with his previous service as mate and master.

Although Attorney-General Brewster had given an official opinion against the construction adopted by the Court of Claims, he did not have confidence enough in it to carry the case to the Supreme Court. It was not appealed, was certified to Congress, appropriated for, and

But the vigilant Secretary of the Navy, now the able Senator from New Hampshire, was not satisfied. He again, on October 1, 1884, wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury, saying that he proposed to ask further legislation "for the protection of the public interests," and requesting that no settlements on similar claims be made "until after the Department shall have submitted its views on the subject to Congress for con-

Those views were never submitted. On the contrary, the Secretary, now Senator, shortly afterwards himself signed the first requisitions in payment of these claims. But the accounting officers did not relax their vigilance and have driven the claimants to court in innumerable cases involving minor points under this act. Of these cases no less cases involving minor points under this act. Of these cases no less than eight have gone to the Supreme Court on the appeal of the Government, as follows: United States vs. Philbrick, 120 U. S., 52; United States vs. Rockwell, 120 U. S., 60; United States vs. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249; United States vs. Mullen, 123 U. S., 186; United States vs. Allen, 123 U. S., 345; United States vs. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309; United States vs. Baker, 125 U. S., 646; United States vs. Cook, at the present term.

And now, when the questions involved have been all settled, after vigorous litigation, and the claims have nearly all been paid, the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine renew the discussion in a forum where the claimants have no right to be heard, and attack the justice of their claims under cover of a demand for a statute of limitation and repose. In my judgment it is the claimants and not the Government who are entitled to some repose in this matter.

Let me say a few words on the question of a statute of limitations. I am in favor of one which should be carefully drawn, not applicable, of course, to pending cases, and which should apply to the Government as well as to claimants against it. But as long as the accounting officers have power to check against an officer's current pay the amount of an old allowance which may suddenly be declared illegal, I insist they should be required to pay him the amount of a claim, however old, which they may have illegally withheld from him.

The proposition to fix a limit to the consideration of claims is not a new one. It has several times been referred to the Judiciary Committee of this body, which is much better fitted to consider it than the Committee on Appropriations.

Committee on Appropriations.

In fact, I may say that the latter has declined to consider it. For when it came over from the House in section 2 of the deficiency bill of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress the committee then, as now, led in the matter of that bill by the Senator from Maine, struck out the provision and declined to restore it in conference.

Let us have a fair statute of limitations if you will, but let it come from the law committee and after due consideration, and not rush it through as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

through as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Above all, let us not degrade the officers of the Army and the Navy by excluding them, and them only, from the right which every other citizen has, to sue the Government for his just and legal rights.

Sir, these are not the people to treat with illiberality of construction in the enforcement of the laws. They have written many of the bright.

in the enforcement of the laws. They have written many of construction in the enforcement of the laws. They have written many of the brightest and most glorious pages of American history, and on their loyalty, ability, and courage we may be called to depend again in the not distant future. I have no fear that they will receive more pay during their lives than they deserve, nor that their widows and orphans will be too well cared for by the Government after they are dead and gone.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire a vote on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the vote being taken now on the pending resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to say a few words, and I understand the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] desires to say something. Mr. HAWLEY. I also desire to make a few remarks, and I would rather the resolution should go over.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the resolution goes

Mr. COCKRELL. In the same position it now occupies as morning

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, if the Senator from Illinois will waive calling up his conference report, as I understand he has agreed to do.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say, as two or three friends have asked me to let the conference report go over until to-morrow, that I have agreed with the Senator from Iowa to do so. I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow for disposition.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11693) to amend section 555, Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District aforesaid;

A bill (H. R. 11957) to amend an act entitled "An act to levy an assessment on real estate in the District of Columbia for the purpose of taxation;"

A bill (H. R. 12137) relating to the deposit of securities by insurance companies; and A bill (H. R. 12498) to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the reort of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration now of House bill 11795.

Mr. FRYE. I am compelled, I suppose, to yield to the Senator from

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the regular order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11795.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HAWLEY, under the head of "Civil Service Commission," on page 20, line 19, to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 2.

Mr. ALLISON. Before proceeding to the consideration of that amendment, if the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I desire to offer one or two amendments from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will be postponed until the amendments offered by the Senator from Iowa shall be disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 4, line 15, in the appropriations for messengers of Senate committees, I move to strike out "eight" and insert "nine;" so as to read:

And nine messengers, at the rate of $1,440 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 22, line 6, after the word "for" where it occurs the second time, I move to insert "purchase." This amendment I offer in pursuance of an understanding we had in committee that I might offer it. As a justification for the amendment I propose, I ask that the letter which I send to the Secretary's desk may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, February 5, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the equipment of the stable of this Department needs renewal.

The carriage has been in constant use for the last ten years; one horse has been lost this winter, and his mate is too old for it to be desirable to match him. I therefore recommend that an appropriation of $2,000 be added to the amount usually appropriated for the maintenance of the stable to place this necessary part of the machinery of the Department on a useful footing.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
Senate of the United States. T. F. BAYARD.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of that suggestion of the Secretary of State, I move, on page 22, line 6, after the word "for" where it occurs the second time, to insert the word "purchase;" in line 7, after the word "horses," to insert "and purchase;" at the end of line 7 to strike out "one" and insert "three;" and in line 12 to strike out "four" before "thousand" and insert "six."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, on page 22, after the word "for" where it occurs the second time, insert the word "purchase;" in line 7, after the word "horses" and before the word "and," insert "and "three;" and in the same line strike out the word "one" and insert "three;" and in line 12, after the word "all" and before the word "thousand," strike out "four" and insert "six;" so that the paragraph when amended will read:

For contingent expenses, namely: For purchase, care, and subsistence of horses and purchase and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness, $3,200; for rent of stable and wagon-shed, $600; for care of clock, telegraphic and electric apparatus, and repairs to the same, $800; and for miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing, $2,400; in all, $6,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], which

A bill (H. R. 11701) for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 11817) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, in the District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and insert "three;" so as to read: "three clerks of class 2."

Mr. ALLISON. Has there not been already one amendment agreed to there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first word "two" has been stricken out and "three" inserted after the word "stenographer." The amendment now proposed is to strike out the word "two" it last occurs and insert "three."

Mr. ALLISON. Making three clerks of class 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Three clerks of class 2." Mr. ALLISON. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yesterday evening, Mr. President, when this clause was under discussion, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb], whom I regret not to see in his seat, made some criticisms of the action of the existing Administration in placing the railway mail service under the laws and regulations of the civil-service act and commission, and he criticised the efficiency of the Administration. The ground of his complaint was that this change made in December last was for the purpose of forestalling the action of the incoming Administration after the 4th of March.

As a matter of course I do not know the motives which may have inspired the head of the Department and the President in promulgating that order. That it was done for the purpose of forestalling the in-coming Administration I do not believe. That there was an illustrious precedent for so doing there can be no question; and if the action of a Republican Administration in its expiring hours was justifiable, then the same act of a Democratic Administration under similar circumstances must not be unjustifiable.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Missouri state— Mr. COCKRELL. I will come in a moment to what I know the Senator has in mind. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the record, and by that I propose to speak of the Republican Administration. In 1884, after the people had passed condemnation upon it in the election in November, what did it do? We shall see.

The civil-service act became a law on the 16th day of January, 1883. The act was not practically put into operation for a number of months thereafter. Then there was a partial classification of the civil service in the Departments, bringing the employés within the provisions and regulations of the civil-service act and commission. On December 6, 1884, the Secretary of the Interior, the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] now in his seat, amended the revision.
Mr. Teller. What date is that?
Mr. COCKRELL. The 6th day of December, 1884.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will say here, as I have said before, that there was then no amendment made whatever. The classification was then put on record simply, and that, I think, the record shows.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am speaking as the record here shows. When was it done?

Mr. TELLER. It had been done months before.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have put it on record months before?
Mr. TELLER. Simply because a great many things had not gone on record, papers that had been signed by the Secretary of the Interior months and months before. There was no change of classification in the Interior Department at all. That I have stated before, and I state it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is the record:

On September 22, 1883, the Secretary of the Interior, by an order of that date,* revised the classification of that Department by arranging the employés thereof into classes, as follows:
In addition to the classes of employés in the Department of the Interior, recognized by section 163 of the Revised Statutes—first, second, third, and fourth class clerks—the Secretary added two other classes, as follows:
Class A, all clerks and other employés at Washington receiving $1,000 per aname.

num, Class B, all employés at Washington known as copyists, whether receiving Class B, all employés at Washington known as copyists, whether receiving $900 or $720 per annum.

On December 6, 1884, the Secretary amended this revision,* extending it both upward and downward, as follows:

Fourth class, all clerks receiving $1,800 per annum; Subdivision A of fourth class, all clerks receiving $2,000 or more per annum, not chiefs of divisions, and not excepted from examination by the civil-service act and rules.

Third class, all clerks receiving $1,600 per annum.

Second class, all clerks receiving $1,200 per annum; Subdivision A of the first class, all clerks receiving $1,200 per annum; Subdivision B of the first class, all copyists without reference to the amount of salary. [At the time of this revision copyists in the Department of the Interior received either $900 or $720 per annum.]

Class A, all employés at Washington, who are not clerks or copyists, receiving $1,000 per annum.

The above is the existing classification of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. What is the Senator reading from?
Mr. COCKRELL. I am reading from the fourth annual report of the Civil Service Commission, and I will read the order of the Secrethe Civil Service Commission, and I will read the order of the Secretary. I hold in my hand the order, taken from the official records, made by the Secretary of the Interior, his "footprints on the sands of time," and there they stand.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator give the page?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am now reading from the fourth annual report of the Civil Service Commission, page 489. Here is the order:

Revision of September 22, 1883.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, September 22, 1883, Order.1

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

And then follows:

Revision of December 6, 1884.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, December 6, 1834.

By direction of the President of the United States, and in accordance with the provisions of the third clause of section 6 of the act entitled "An act to reg-ulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, Ordered, That the order heretofore made September 22, 1883, be, and the same is, modified as follows.

Then goes on the classification to which I have referred and which I submit here, as follows:

submit here, as follows:

That all clerks receiving a salary of $2,000 and upwards, not chiefs of division and not excepted by the statute or rules of the Civil Service Commission, shall, for the purpose of classification, examination, and admission into the service of the Interior Department at Washington, be included in subdivision A of class 4.

The clerks receiving a salary of $1,000, and all copyists receiving a salary of $900 or $720 per annum, shall, for purposes of classification, examination, and admission into the service of the Interior Department at Washington, be included in class 1. All clerks receiving $1,000 shall be included in subdivision A of class 1, and all copyists, without reference to the amount of salary received, shall be included in subdivision B of class 1. No persons shall be admitted to or received in the Interior Department at Washington as clerks with a salary of $2,000 or upwards, or at a salary of $1,000, or as copyists at $900 or $720, until they have passed the civil-service examination provided for by the Civil Service Commission, and have been certified to the Department in the usual way for admission into the classified departmental service.

H. M. Teller, Secretary.

That was not the only change that was made after the Navember.

That was not the only change that was made after the November election of 1884.

On November 19, 1884, the Secretary of War revised the classification made by section 163 of the Revised Statutes, by declaring in a "circular order," is issued on that day—that the classification for the purposes of the civil-service act in the Department of War included all civilian employés subordinate to the Secretary, except those employed merely as laborers or workmen, messengers and watchmen being considered as so employed. Class A, those having an annual compensation exceeding $2,000.

Class B, those having an annual compensation of $1,800.

Class 1, those having an annual compensation of $1,600.

It thus will be seen that it did not reach the commission until after the election, but was dated November 1, 1884.

In this revision the Secretary gives the number of "clerks and employés in the Department of the Navy and bureaus" classified (subject to examination), classified (exempted from examination), and not classified under the law and the regulations of the United States Civil Service Commission. The classified as subject to examination, and the classified as exempted from examination, are as follows:

Mr. CHANDLER. What page does the Senator read from?
Mr. COCKRELL. I read from page 108 of the same report.
I have given the action of the Department of the Interior, the Department of War, and the Department of the Navy in classifying and changing the classifications of their Departments after the election in November, 1884. I now come to the Secretary of the Treasury.

On January 2, 1855, the Secretary of the Treasury revised the classification of the officers, clerks, and employés of that department. This was done by a "circular order" addressed "To whom it may concern." In this order the Secretary used the following language:

"The existing classification of those in the Treasury Department under the civil-service act, as heretofore construed and applied in all cases, includes all officers, clerks, and employes with annual salaries fixed by law, except those subject to confirmation by the Senate, and those merely employed as laborers or workmen, messengers and watchmen being considered as so employed."

After making this sweeping declaration, the Secretary arranged the following classes:

Class 4, $1.800 or more, annual salary, fixed by law.

lasses:
Class 4, $1,800 or more, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class 3, $1,600, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class 2, $1,400, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class 1, $1,200, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class B, $1,000, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class A, $900, annual salary, fixed by law.

Now we have the Treasury Department reclassified:

On February 6, 1885-

This day four years ago-

This day four years ago—

the Postmaster-General, by "Order No. 83," revised the classification of the Post-Office Department by arranging the officers, clerks, and other employés thereof into the following classes:

Class A, those having an annual compensation of $2,000.

Class B, those having an annual compensation of $1,800.

Class 3, those having an annual compensation of $1,800.

Class 3, those having an annual compensation of $1,900.

Class 1, those having an annual compensation of $1,200.

Class 1, those having an annual compensation of $1,200.

Class C, those having an annual compensation of $1,000.

Class D, those having an annual compensation of $200.

Class E, those having an annual compensation of $200.

It was provided by this order that messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and laborers should not be included within the classification.

The records of the commission do not show that either the Secretary of State or the Attorney-General has yet revised the classification of his Department; but it appears that on October 6, 1883, the commission requested the Attorney-General to make a statement of the number of officials, etc.

In a written communication, bearing no date, addressed to the commission, and received November 24, 1884—

That was after the election in November, 1884-the Commissioner of Agriculture

After the election was over and the result known, then the Republican Commissioner of Agriculture-submitted a "list of clerks in the United States Department of Agriculture classified in accordance with the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883," By this list the employés of the Department of Agriculture were arranged into the following classes.

Then follows the classification:

Clerks of class 1, $1,200 per annum.
Clerks of class 2, $1,400 per annum.
Clerks of class 3, $1,600 per annum.
Clerks of class 3, $1,600 per annum.
Clerks of class 4, $1,800 per annum.
Clerks at $1,000 per annum each.
Clerks at $720 per annum each.
Clerks at $720 per annum each.
Clerk to Bureau of Animal Industry.
Disbursing officer.
Assistant to disbursing officer.
Librarian.

12. Superintendent of folding-room.

13. Employés in the chemical bureau.

14. Employés in the laboratory.

15. Employés in the botanical bureau.

16. Employés in the bureau of entomology.

17. Employés in the museum.

18. Foreman in the grounds.

On December 10, 1884, the President, by telephonic message

The usual means of communication were not sufficiently rapid and quick in order to consummate these changes in the classifications under the civil-service law-

der the civil-service law—

On December 10, 1884, the President, by telephonic message, informed the commission of the receipt by him of this classification of the Department of Agriculture, and asked the attention of the commission to the same. In reply the commission, on December 11, informed the President that the classification had been made in pursuance of his views as expressed to the commission in an interview in October, 1884, and which had been communicated to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

On December 16, 1884, the commission received from the President, by his private secretary, a communication dated December 12, in which the information was given that this classification of the Department of Agriculture had been accepted and approved.

Since that date the Department of Agriculture has been regarded and treated by the commission as a Department operated upon by the civil-service act and rules.

rules.

It will be observed that the classification of the Department of Agriculture is entitled: "List of clerks in the United States Department of Agriculture classified in accordance with the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883."

This classification was accepted and approved by the President as having been made in accordance with the act referred to; but the commission evidently did not believe it was a classification made in the same way that the classifications of the other Departments had been made—did not accept it as a revision of a classification, or as a classification that existed at the time the civil-service act was approved. In reply to the telephonic message of the President the commission was careful to say:

"The classification appears to the commission to be suitable for the purposes of examination required by the rules."

The commission added:

"If the classification shall be accepted by the President, the commission will count itself as instructed to treat the places thus classified in the Agricultural Department as among those which are to be filled by certification by the commission under existing rules."

On page 490 and fellowing are found the orders of the War Depart-ent, "Department of War, revision of November 19, 1884," as fol-

DEPARTMENT OF WAR.

Revision of November 19, 1884.

Circular.1

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, November 19, 1884.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, November 19, 1884.

Chiefs of bureaus of the War Department will cause to be made out and forwarded to this office as soon as possible after the 1st proximo a statement showing the names, compensation, etc., of clerks, messengers, laborers, watchmen, etc., employed in their respective bureaus from December 1, 1883, to November 30, 1884, inclusive.

The statement is to be made out on single sheets of foolscap paper, written on but one side of the sheet, and the same form to be observed as that published in Senate Ex. Doc. No. 82, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, except as otherwise directed below.

The classification for the purposes of the civil-service act in the War Department includes all civilian employés subordinate to the Secretary, except those merely employed as laborers or workmen (messengers and watchmen being considered as so employed), and the classification is revised so that all employés embraced therein shall be classed as follows:

The Department of Agriculture, revision of December 12, 1884, the report of the Civil Service Commission, and the letter of the private secretary of the President to the Civil Service Commission of December 12, 1884, are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Revision of December 12, 1884.

United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., December 11, 1884.

Washington, D. C., December 11, 1884.

SIB: In response to the telephonic message received yesterday, December 10, from the Executive Mansion, informing the commission of the receipt of the classification of the Agricultural Department, and asking the attention of the commission to the same, it respectfully replies that the classification (a copy of which has been furnished us) was made in pursuance of the views of the President, expressed to the commission in an interview in October last, and communicated to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The commission at that date expressed its view that the time had come for including that Department under the rules, and declared its readiness to undertake the additional work involved.

The classification appears to this commission to be suitable for the purposes of the examination required by the rules.

If the classification shall be accepted by the President the commission will count itself as instructed to treat the places thus classified in the Agricultural Department among those which are to be filled from certifications by the commission under existing rules.

We have the honor to subscribe ourselves,

Your obedient servants,

DORMAN B. EATON, JOHN M. GREGORY, E. D. THOMAN, United States Civil Service Commissioners.

The PRESIDENT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, December 12, 1884.

DEAR SIRS: Your letter of the 11th instant regarding the application of the civil-service rules to the Agricultural Department has been received by the President, and he directs me to say, in reply, that as it is stated in your communication that the inclosed classification submitted by the commissioners "appears to be suitable for the purposes of the examination required by the rules," the suggestion that it be accepted is approved by him.

Very truly, yours,

FRED. J. PHILLIPS, Private Secretary.

The Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

Whether those changes were made for the purpose of forestalling the action of the then incoming Administration I can not say. If they were, then certainly the present Administration had the same right that that Republican Administration had, and it does not lie in the mouth of Republicans to complain. If the Republican Administration of that date was justified in issuing these orders for the improvement of the public service and the extension of the civil-service act and the of the public service and the extension of the civil-service act and the regulations of the commission, then the Democratic Administration was also justifiable in doing the same thing for the same purpose.

The Senator from Kansas criticised very sharply the postal administration and the inefficiency of the postal clerks. The railway postal service was the particular branch which was lately brought under the civil-service law and the regulations of the Civil Service Commission. The record must speak for itself, and by the record we must stand or fall. I hold in my hand the report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and on pages 283 and following I find the report of the general superintendent of the railway mail service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884. Under the head of "Mail distributed" I read as follows:

F!—

Referring to a table or a statement—this is on page 284—

Fis a statement showing in detail the correctness of the distribution by divisions, by which it appears that the number of errors in distribution was 1,167,-223 in a total distribution of 4,519,661,900 pieces, or one error to each 3,872 pieces handled, being at the rate of 299 errors per clerk per annum. During the precading fiscal year there was one error to each 4,153 pieces handled. It will thus be seen that the relative number of errors during the last fiscal year was a trifle greater than during 1883. Yet it will be seen that this increase is so slight that the average per cent. of mail correctly handled is about the same as last year, namely, 99.71.

CASE EXAMINATIONS.

Table H<sup>b</sup> is a statement of case examinations of postal clerks holding permanent appointments, by which it appears that there were 4,903 case examinations during the year, and that the number of cards handled was 5,028,492, of which number 3,927,290 were thrown correctly, being an average of 73,10 per cent.

Table I' is a statement of the case examinations of probationary postal clerks. It appears from this table that there were 3,463 examinations, and that the number of cards handled was 3,472,105, of which 2,339,278 were thrown correctly, being an average of 67.37 per cent.

These examinations, which the clerks undergo at frequent intervals, are a test of proficiency, and the following is a brief description of the manner of conducting the same.

We have there the record of the inaccuracies, of the errors in distribution, and of the grading of the railway postal clerks in 1883 and 1884. I hold in my hand the report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and on page 331 and following I find the report of the general superintendent of the railway mail service. Under the same heading on page 332 I find this:

During the year ended June 30, 1887, 5,851,394,057 pieces of all classes of mail matter were handled, and 1,734,617 errors checked, showing that 99,971 per cent. of all mail handled was correctly distributed, or, in other words, of every 3,374 pieces handled 3,373 were correctly dispatched and 1 incorrectly. In 1888 the number of pieces handled was 6,545,876,202, and the number of errors checked 1,765,821, being a correct distribution of 99,973 per cent. of all mail handled, or one error to every 3,707 pieces.

The increase in the number of pieces of ordinary mail handled was 8.76 per cent., while the increase in the number of errors was but 1.79 per cent.

Now I come to "case examinations:"

CASE EXAMINATIONS.

A marked improvement is shown this year in the record of case examinations of the permanent railway postal clerks, the average per cent. of cards correctly distributed having increased from 87.50 in 1887 to 90.50 in 1888.

Under the table in 1884 it was for the regular clerks 78.10 per cent., and for the probationary clerks 67.37 per cent., whereas under a Demo-cratic administration it was 87.50 per cent. in 1887 and 90.50 per cent.

A table follows showing the number of examinations in 1887 and 1888, the number of cards handled, the cards correct, the cards incorrect, the cards not known, and the average per cent. of cards correct.

The subjoined table is inserted to show the record of case examinations of permanent clerks made during the year under review, compared with similar examinations held during 1887:
